BOMBAY.

CAPTAIN JOSEPH DAVEY CUNNINGHAM, OF THE BENGAL ENGINEERS.

The same paper which contains the official intimation of the appointment of this distinguished officer to the charge of the works department of the Meerut division, gives the melancholy intelligence of his demise, near Umballah, on the 28th February. He was the son of Allan Cunningham—the coadjutor of Chantrey, and friend of Scott—and was possessed of the talent which distinguished the family. In 1837, Lord Auckland, without solicitation, appointed him assistant to Colonel (now Sir Claude) Wade, political agent to Loodiana, in charge of the British relations with the Punjab and Afghanistan. He was at the same time required as an engineer officer, to render Ferozepoor a defensible post, that little place having been declared a feudal escheat, and its position being regarded as one of military importance. His plans for effecting the object in view met the approval of Sir Henry Fane, the Commander-in-Chief; but it was not eventually thought proper to do more than cover the town with a slight parapet. In 1839, he accompanied Shahzada Tymoor and Col. Wade to Peshawur, and was with them when they forced the pass of Khyber, and laid open the road to Cabool. In 1840, he was placed in administrative charge of the district of Loodiana, and the same year was deputed by the new frontier agent, Mr. Clerk, to accompany Col. Shelton and his relieving brigade to Peshawur, whence he returned with the troops escorting Dost Mahomed Khan under Col. Wheeler. During part of 1841, he was in magisterial charge of the Ferozepoor district, and towards the close of that year was appointed to proceed to Tibet to see that the ambitious Rajahs of Jum-moo surrendered certain territories they had seized from the Chinese of Lassa, and that the British trade with Ludakh, &c. was restored to its old footing. He returned at the end of a year. During part of 1843 he was in civil charge of Ambala; but from the middle of that year till towards the close of 1844 he was assistant to Col. Richmond, the successor of Mr. Clerk. After Major Broadfoot's nomination to the same office, and during the greater part of 1845, he was employed in the Buhawulpoor territory, in conjunction with refugee Sindhians, and with boundary disputes between the Daoodpootras and the Rajpoots of Beekaneer and Jeyseelmeer. When war with the Sikhs broke out, he was required by Sir C. Napier to join his army of co-operation; but after the battle of Ferozeshulur, he was summoned to Lord Gough's head-quarters. He was subsequently directed to accompany Sir Harry Smith, when a diversion was made towards Loodiana, and was thus present at the skirmish of Buddowal and the battle of Aliwal. He had likewise the fortune to be a participator in the victory of Sobraon, and the further advantage of acting on that important day as an aide-de-camp to the Governor-General. He was then attached to the head-quarters of the Commander-in-Chief, until the army broke up at Lahore, when he accompanied Lord Hardinge's camp to the Simla hills, preparatory to setting out for Bhopal, the political agency in which state and its surrounding districts, his lordship had unexpectedly been pleased to bestow upon him. In 1847, he was appointed resident at Bhopal, where he remained in charge till 1850, when, in consequences of the disclosures made in his history of the Sikh war, he was directed to be removed. The order was, it was said, instigated by the Board of Control. The proceeding tended to subvert the very ends it had in view, and the punishment of the author gave an importance that they might not have otherwise secured to the censures contained in his book. For some time he had been employed on special duty near Umballa, and almost the first appointment worthy of his acceptance that was open to him had been placed at his disposal. The following extract from a letter, written by him a few days before his death, will be of interest, and we are aware of violating no confidence, and of running the risk of injuring no private feelings, by its publication:—

"I have been much interested by the notice in the Bombay Times of the paper from Lassen's pen about Asoka. I am the more so, as it seems likely that the famous Tope near Bhilsa will turn out of Asoka's time; and my brother, who has just visited it, has made some interesting excavations and discoveries, while Lieut. Maisey is busy in depicting the bas-reliefs and various sculptures, and miscellaneous monuments. Your praise of Lord Auckland for his attention to science is well deserved. He had the best cultivated mind of all the Governors-Generals I had seen, but wanted vigour, &c., for the Viceroy of the east. His Affghan policy was wrong—mainly because the original scheme of leaving Shah Shooja and a representative alone at the end of a year was departed from. MacNaghten, although an able and accomplished man, had no administrative facility, no idea of dealing with men face to face—all was order as per the foolscap system of India. This is the grand difference now between the political and ordinary civil officers of Government. An ordinary magistrate and a collector says, Hookum shood, or issues his decree without reference as to how it is to be carried out; a regiment is ready to aid the civil power; a political officer has no such authority, and he has to consider his means, his influence, personal and public, to use tact, and to acquire a knowledge of character."

Capt. Cunningham early distinguished himself as a contributor to the "Transactions of the Bengal Asiatic Society," then under the distinguished management of the illustrious Prinsep. He and his brother, Alexander, had long laboured in a field of research then just being opened up—that of Arian and Sassanian antiquities, to which the collections of Burnes and Masson, and the investigations of Horace Wilson, Prinsep, Bird, J. Wilson, and Stevenson, have so largely contributed, and which furnished the interesting result of the history of some centuries of which we were before utterly ignorant, written from the legends of their coins.—Bombay Times, Mar. 17.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE LONDON MAIL of Feb. 7, arrived at Bombay on March 5, per Victoria. Mails from London of date Feb. 24, for Bombay, Madras, and Calcutta, left Aden on the 18th ult. by the Queen and Hindustan steamers.

PEER IBRAHIM KHAN.—Amongst the departures by the steamer Bombay we notice that of Ibrahim Khan Bhadoor. This gentleman has been long British agent at Bahawalpore, and during the late Mooltan campaign rendered good service to the cause of our Government. He proceeds to Europe on leave for two years, drawing his full salary for that period. His chief object is to be present in time to witness the grand exhibition. He is accompanied by Moonshee Syed Abdoolah, who is also in receipt of his full allowances for the same period as Peer Mahomed. The civility shown by the latter to all Europeans visiting Bahawalpore is well known in Scinde at any rate, and the letters with which he is supplied will, we believe, obtain for him the same at the hands of our countrymen—Kurra-chee Adr., Feb. 26.

LIBEL UPON A NATIVE JUDGE.—Mr. Livingstone, the editor of the Poona Chronicle, having brought a charge of corruption against Bazonjee Franjee, the acting moonsiff of Poona, Bazonjee brought an action against Mr. Livingstone, for defamation of character, and has recovered Rs. 500 damages, exclusive of costs.

THEATRE BURNED.—On the 26th February, the Station Theatre at Poona was burnt to the ground. A rehearsal by gentlemen amateurs had an hour or so before been finished, and the house shut up,—when all at once, the whole building broke out into one mass of flame. The theatre had but recently been put into capital condition, and a gallery, or dress-boxes, erected at no little expense and labour. It was supposed the theatre had been fired designedly, and a liberal reward was offered for the discovery of the incendiaries.

ROAD TO THE HILLS.—Government have sanctioned the construction of a road to Karrakarvaslee, on the way from Poona to Singliur, which now promises to become much more extensively resorted to than heretofore as a sanitarium. This magnificent mountain, which attains an altitude of 4,300 feet, rising abruptly above 2,000 feet above the plain, is within fifteen miles, or three hours' easy ride, of Poona, so that gentlemen are in the habit of going out to breakfast and returning in the cool of the afternoon in time for dinner, spending the day in a climate similar in point of temperature to that of the Mahabuleswar Hills.

THE GOVERNOR and suite proceed on the 19th March, by the Feroze steamer, to Bancoot, whence a lesser steamer will convey them across the bar and up the river to Mhar.

THE 66TH REGIMENT AT UMRITSAR.—A Bengal officer, now on duty in the Punjab, and who had particularly good means of knowing the state of matters with the 66th regiment, assures us that the mutineers had just about as much idea of seizing the fort of Umritsar as we have of surprising and maintaining Bombay Castle.—Bombay Times, March 17.

FURLONGS.—There are no fewer than four Bengal officers at this moment in our Presidency, awaiting their furloughs from the supreme side of India, namely, Captain D. Wilkie, of the 4th Infantry, E. Harvey, of the 10th Light Cavalry, and Messrs. Ward and Pope. It is a practical hardship upon these gentlemen that an order, which has slept so long with respect to others, should in their case be suddenly and rigorously revived; but it may be useful to Bengal officers generally to be warned by their example, that before they come down to Bombay to embark, they must provide themselves with all the necessary papers, as our local government has no authority in the matter.—Bombay Telegraph, March 17.

SIR JOHN GREY, accompanied by Majors Tudor and Conway, C.B., and Capt. Drummond, arrived at the hills on the 4th March, in good health.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDER.

CEYLON.

The Governor is still at Kandy, busy (it may be presumed) in collecting information and maturing plans for the better government of the people committed to his charge. Mr. MacCarthy has had a very sharp attack of dysentery, and it was at one time, we believe, decided on that a voyage to England would be absolutely necessary for the restoration of his health. It is now hoped, however, that the colony will not at this juncture be deprived of his services, but that a shorter sea trip may suffice. The disease from which the colonial secretary has suffered has been very prevalent of late, and in many cases fatal. Small-pox has continued to rage violently as an epidemic at Colombo, and cholera was lately superadded. The latter disease, however, we are glad to say, has not continued to spread with the rapidity and violence that was at one time threatened. As having an important bearing on the health of the town the operation of the assessment tax has been discussed, and it has been shown that the result has been the demolition of numerous small buildings and the consequent overcrowding of the population in certain quarters. An official return gives the total population of Colombo at 38,730, but from the crowding to which we have alluded, it would seem that this must be below the mark. From 45,000 to 50,000 is probably the correct number.

The Government have refused to give the guarantee sought for by the projectors of a Ceylon railway, and we feel bound to approve of the caution which has dictated this course. Ceylon, from its scanty population and limited resources, is in a very different position to continental India. The choice seems to be between a railway superseding a good road already in existence, and the formation of new roads opening up fresh lands and intersecting the whole country. Those best acquainted with the island will agree with us that the choice has wisely inclined to the latter.

The 15th and the 37th regiments have exchanged stations. Colonel Drought and his corps are now in Colombo, and their first act, it is understood, has been to refuse an invitation from Colonel Braybrooke and the officers of the Ceylon rifles, the cause being Colonel Braybrooke's openly expressed disapproval of the arrangement by which Colonel Drought, an officer comparatively inexperienced, was kept in command of the Kandian districts during the rebellion of 1848. This proceeding is ill-calculated to promote harmony, and were old Sir Colin Campbell still alive and in command, he would probably act as he did in the case of a young officer whom it was determined, in conventional phrase, to cut. The aged general called all the officers before him and swore he was determined that they should not cut the gentleman in question, and they were forced to succumb. The quarrel is a very pretty quarrel as it stands; and following on the heels of this, we are to have courts-martial for the trial of Capt. Watson and Lieut. Henderson, and perhaps of others, all in connection with the doings of 1848. — Colombo Obs. Nov. 14.

CHINA.

THE LONDON MAIL of December the 24th, 1850, arrived at Hong Kong on Feb. 15, per Malla.

Our monthly summary for December commenced with an announcement "that disturbances in the Kwangtung and Kwangsi provinces, were said to be at an end." In our last overland issue we reiterated this statement, but on both occasions, it appears that, in common with many others, we were, through the scheming policy of the provincial government, altogether misinformed. The disturbances are not at an end, but on the contrary, are raging, and have continued to rage, with aggravated fierceness. At a distance, as the crow would fly, barely sixty miles from Canton, the insurgents are now assembled in great force—their avowed object the upsetting of the present dynasty. This information we have on the very best authority. To such extremes have they carried their determination that they have returned to the old Chinese practice of dispensing with the queue; this, in reality, is equivalent to drawing the sword, and flinging away the scabbard.

The Commissioner appointed to the task of inquiring into the state of the disturbed provinces instead of sending the Governor of Kwangsi, in chains, to Peking, as was expected, has, on hearing the evidence for and against him, forwarded a memorial to the Emperor, in which the whole blame is thrown upon Seu, for his tardiness in rendering the required support; whereby the rebellion has now attained such a head that his imperial Majesty's continued possession of the throne is quite a matter of uncertainty. The governor has now been four months absent from Canton, and, doubtless, it is through the system of espionage and denouncement which he has set on foot, that the real situation of affairs has been hitherto successfully withheld from studious inquirers.

By a circumstance which has transpired during the month, British relations with China have become involved in such a way that only one course can apparently extricate them—war. The circumstance we allude to is the discovery of award of honours to the Chinese Chin-Apoo, denounced by our Government to that of China, as the murderer, in February, 1849, of Capt. Da Costa and Lieut. Dwyer.—Friend of China, Feb. 27.

ADEN.

The following particulars of the murder of a British officer are given in a letter, dated "Alexandria, March 20:"—

"A party, consisting of six gentlemen, five being officers of the army and navy, left Aden on the last day of February, on a visit to Lahedj, the residence of the so-called Sultan. Their names are as follows:—Lieut. Cruttenden, Indian Navy, assistant political agent; Capt. Milne, Bombay Army, deputy commissary-general; Lieut. M'Pherson, H.M.'s 78th Highlanders; Lieuts. Ogilvie and Henchy, Madras Artillery; and Mr. Sauley, brother-in-law to Capt. Haines, the political agent. On their arrival at Lahedj (distant about thirty miles from Aden), they had an interview with the Sultan, but by no means so gracious a one as they expected. This, however, passed, and the following day they all, with the exception of Mr. Cruttenden, who returned to Aden, departed to the village of Waït, for the purpose of antelope shooting. Here the Sheikh of the village (which is composed entirely of Seyeds, Shereefs, or the descendants of the Arabian Prophet) came out to receive them, assigned them a house but a few paces distant from the village, and supplied all their wants. Pleased at this reception, and seeing all around in a state of apparent tranquillity, they acceded to the urgent request of the guard, which had been furnished by the Sultan, and which had hitherto attended them, to be permitted to return to Lahedj, as it was difficult to procure sufficient forage for their horses and camels at Waït. So little did they dream of treachery, that, on retiring to rest, at about 10 p.m., they did not even adopt the necessary precaution of seeing that their arms were loaded and ready for immediate use. The house allotted to them being rather confined and warm, they arranged their beds in a small courtyard attached to it, and which was surrounded by a mud wall, about four feet in height. They had hardly fallen asleep when Lieut. M'Pherson was awakened by a cry from Capt. Milne, and saw an Arab gliding past his bed to make an attack on Mr. Sauley; without pausing to think whether he was armed or not, Mr. M'Pherson rushed at him, and, with his left arm elevated to ward off the threatening blow, he attempted with the other to knock him to the ground. The dagger was buried in his arm, but, ere he could reach the villain, his foot stumbled over a box, and he fell to the ground, and the dagger of the assassin was six times buried in his back. Mr. Sauley also got a flesh wound, though not a dangerous one, in his arm. All this was the work of less than a minute, and it was not till the servants entered and raised a cry of lamentation over their wounded masters that Messrs. Ogilvie and Henchy awoke. By this time the murderer had escaped. On coming to examine what mischief had been done, it was found that Capt. Milne had received a deep wound in his abdomen, through which the bowels protruded, and Mr. M'Pherson was in an exceedingly precarious state from his many wounds. Two messengers were instantly despatched, one to Aden, and the other to the Sultan at Lahedj,—the latter to request a guard, and to make him aware of the foul treachery committed on guests in his country; the former to report the circumstance, and solicit medical aid. Before nine o'clock a.m. on the following day, Lieut. Cruttenden and Dr. Cooke were on the spot, but too late, alas! to stay the ebbing current of poor Milne's life. After suffering the most extreme agony all night, mortification ensued, which relieved the pain, and, about two hours after the arrival of the surgeon, he breathed his last.

"M'Pherson is doing well, but it will be many months ere he will be able to leave his bed."

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

The latest intelligence from Cape Town is to the 10th February. The only intelligence of importance is the announcement of the relief of Forts Cox and White, which had been effected by the column commanded by Col. Mackinnon; but just before the post left Graham's Town, an express arrived from General Somerset, stating that a combined attack on Fort Beaufort was expected the following morning.

The following despatch of Col. Mackinnon to Sir H. Smith details the mode in which the relief of the forts was effected:

"King William's Town, Feb. 1, 1831.

"Sir,—I have the honour to report that at daybreak on the morning of the 30th of January, I proceeded from this station with a force consisting of 300 men 73rd regt., 150 men Cape mounted rifles, 1,400 Hottentot levies, 300 Fingoes, and one 6-pounder—in all 2,200 men—for the purpose of throwing supplies into Forts White and Cox.

"About eight miles from this place a considerable number of Caffres attacked our rear guard, consisting of a troop of Cape mounted rifles, and Genadendal, Albany, and Riversdale levies. This attack was repulsed in a very spirited manner. Shortly afterwards large bodies of the enemy appeared on our left, evidently bent on contesting our march across the Debe Neck. Two shells, directed with great precision by Major Wilmot, of the royal artillery, were thrown into the midst of a large group, and did great execution. No further attempt was made to impede our march on that day, but considerable numbers of the enemy were killed by the flanking parties of the levies and Cape mounted rifles. I arrived at Fort White about 2 o'clock, p.m. On the 31st of January I proceeded with the same force to Fort Cox, which I reached without any opposition. Whilst the troops were at the post a large body of Caffres appeared upon the brow of the hill which overlooked the Keiskamma, on the road to Fort Hare, apparently in the expectation that we intended proceeding to that post. Two shells were again accurately directed by Major Wilmot, and caused them considerable loss.

"After supplying Fort Cox, I returned without molestation to Fort White, and this day to King William's Town. I found the garrisons of Forts White and Cox in good health and spirits. Those posts are now amply supplied for six weeks each, and I have removed from them all the men who are not absolutely necessary for their defence.

"I have the satisfaction of reporting to your Excellency my sense of the efficient conduct of every corps, regular and provisional, who were engaged in this service.

"I have, &c.

"GEO. MACKINNON, Col."

General orders had been received at Graham's Town from head-quarters at King William's Town, nominating the officers of the Genadendal levy, 360 strong, and of the Cape Town and Albany levies.

From Fort Peddie the following notice appears, under date the 30th of January:—"Captain Davies marched from here on Sunday with his men, about 400 in number, leaving all their wagons behind. He took the route by Wesleyville, thus avoiding Line Drift, where it is understood Seyolo remains in position in great force."

Letters from Graaf Reinet of the 31st of January describe the state of the districts of Cradock and Somerset as very alarming, the Caffre population having made common cause with the tribes more to the east, while at the same time great disaffection was exhibited by the Burghers or Dutch settlers in the surrounding districts. It was, however, expected that the Civil Commissioner would succeed in persuading 300 or 400 Burghers to proceed to the relief of Cradock. The position of these districts, which lie to the back of the colony, towards the west, renders this insurrection and disaffection more important.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

The Koran, it is not perhaps generally known, contains copious extracts from the Hebrew Scriptures, adulterated, indeed, with Talmudical sophistications. Interspersed in the different Surats, or chapters, are histories of Adam and Eve; of Abel (Habeel) and Cain (Kabeel); of Nooh, or Noah, and the Flood; of Abraham (Ibrahim), Ishmael (Ismael), Isaac (Ishak), and Jacob (Yakoob); of Joseph (Yoosel) and his brethren, &c. The following account of Abraham's abandonment of idolatry is a modification of Jewish legends. We give the passage in the Koran as translated by Mr. Lane, who has incorporated the commentary with the original text, in order to make the narrative more clear and intelligible:—

"Relate in the Book of the history of Abraham. Verily he was a person of great veracity; a prophet. When he said unto his father Azar, who worshipped idols, O my father, wherefore dost thou worship that which heareth not, nor seeth, nor aveth from thee aught, whether of advantage or of injury? O my father, verily [a degree] of knowledge hath come upon me, that hath not come unto thee; therefore follow me: I will direct thee into a right way. O my father, serve not the devil, by obeying him in serving idols; for the devil is very rebellious unto the Compassionate. O my father, verily I fear that a punishment will betide thee from the Compassionate, if thou repent not, and that thou wilt be, unto the devil, an aider, and a companion in hell-fire.—He replied, Art thou a rejecter of my gods, O Abraham, and dost thou revile them? If thou abstain not, I will assuredly assail thee with stones, or with ill words; therefore beware of me, and leave me for a long time.—Abraham said, Peace from me be on thee! I will ask pardon for thee of my Lord; for He is gracious unto me: and I will separate myself from you, and from what ye invoke instead of God; and I will call upon my Lord: perhaps I shall not be unsuccessful in calling upon my Lord, as ye are in calling upon idols.—And when he had separated himself from them, and from what they worshipped instead of God, by going to the Holy Land, we gave him two sons, that he might cheer himself thereby, namely, Isaac and Jacob; and each [of them] we made a prophet; and we bestowed upon them (namely, the three), of our mercy, wealth and children; and we caused them to receive high commendation.

"We gave unto Abraham his direction formerly, before he had attained to manhood; and we knew him to be worthy of it. When he said unto his father and his people, What are these images, to the worship of which ye are devoted?—They answered, We found our fathers worshipping them, and we have followed their example. He said unto them, Verily ye and your fathers have been in a manifest error. They said, Hast thou come unto us with truth in saying this, or art thou [one] of those who jest? He answered, Nay, your Lord (the being who deserveth to be worshipped) is the Lord of the heavens and the earth, who created them, not after the similitude of anything pre-existing; and I am [one] of those who bear witness thereof. And, by God, I will assuredly devise a plot against your idols after ye shall have retired, turning your backs.—So, after they had gone to their place of assembly, on a day when they held a festival, he brake them in pieces with an axe, except the chief of them, upon whose neck he hung the axe, that they might return unto it (namely, the chief), and see what he had done with the others. They said, after they had returned, and seen what he had done, Who hath done this unto our gods? Verily he is [one] of the unjust.—And some of them said, We heard a young man mention them reproachfully: he is called Abraham. They said, Then bring him before the eyes of the people, that they may bear witness against him, of his having done it. They said unto him, when he had been brought, Hast thou done this unto our gods, O Abraham? He answered, Nay, this their chief did it: and ask ye them, if they [can] speak. And they returned unto themselves, upon reflection, and said unto themselves, Verily ye are the unjust, in worshipping that which speaketh not. Then they reverted to their obstinacy, and said, Verily thou knowest that these speak not: then wherefore dost thou order us to ask them? He said, Do ye then worship, instead of God, that which doth not profit you at all, nor injure you if ye worship it not? Fy on you, and on that which ye worship instead of God!"

Sale observes that the Jews tell this story, with a little variation. "They say Abraham performed this exploit in his father's shop, during his absence; that Terah, on his return, demanded the occasion of the disorder; his son told him that the idols had quarrelled and fallen together by the ears about an offering of fine flour, which had been brought them by an old woman; and that the father, finding he could not insist on the impossibility of what Abraham pretended, without confessing the impotence of the gods, fell into a violent passion, and carried him to Nimrod, that he might be exemplarily punished for his insolence."

M. Scheffer, dragoman to the French embassy at Constantinople, has communicated to the Société Asiatique of Paris the titles of various oriental works which he had purchased at that capital, amongst which are a Seljuk Nameh of the eighth century, a history of the Siege of Rhodes, and a history of the Khans of Maveranahar,—the work from whence M. Senkowski obtained the materials for his Supplement to the History of the Huns. He states that he was bargaining for a copy of a very rare work, تاریخ هشت بهشت; and that he expected to obtain from the library of Ahmed Pasha, late governor of Suleymania, who was disposing of it, a Rauzat-al-Safa and a fine copy of the Habib-al-Syer. M. Scheffer further states that he was in correspondence with various parties in Persia, including a celebrated bookseller at Tabreez and a late meerza of the French mission at Tehran, requesting them to make collections of MSS., which he intended to forward to the Society.

In a paper read by the Rev. Dr. Stevenson, at the meeting of the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society, on the 20th February, he endeavours to show that the numeral cyphers, used throughout the civilized world, which are by the learned usually derived from one source, had their origin on the banks of the Indus. Without any direct testimony on the subject being available (as far as the author is aware of), he imagines that the close similarity that exists between the initial letters of the numbers in the Scindian language and the numeral cyphers,—first those employed among themselves and in Northern India, and then partially, though not in the same degree, elsewhere,—clearly points to the mercantile marts on the Indus as the origin of this very useful notation. The Arabians, from whom the Europeans derived their system, lay no claims to the invention, and not only call the cyphers Indian, but write them from left to right, contrary to their usual practice in writing their own letters; and though at first view the similarity does not seem very striking, yet, if the papers be turned round so as to view 2 and 3 sideways, the resemblance immediately appears. It is only in the Scindian letters that there is any striking resemblance between the numeral cyphers and the initial letters of the words which express these numerals. No such correspondence exists in the other languages of India, or elsewhere.

Dr. Buist, of Bombay, in a paper laid before the Asiatic Society of Bengal, treating of the incrustation,—generally consisting of sulphate and carbonate of lime, with a portion of sea-salt,—in the recesses of flues and around the tubes of steam-boilers in India, mentions a curious variety of metallic deposit found in the steam-pipe of the P. and O. S. N. Co.'s steamer Pekin, which connected the fore and after boilers together, the boilers being of iron, the connecting pipe of copper. The deposit was about half an inch thick, and consisted of alternate layers of pure copper (about forty in number), and of copper slightly oxidized. "It is quite clear," he remarks, "that a complex series of chemical processes must have been going on to produce this beautiful specimen of electrottype copper, which was soft, and cut like black-lead when first received, though it has now assumed its proper hardness. We must first have had the copper dissolved by the steam or water in the pipe, the solution collected beyond the stop-valve must have been revived by galvanic action induced by the copper and iron on each other. It is probable that each layer was due to a single working of the boilers, and that the open film between was produced when the steam was down. No similar deposit has ever been met with by any of the engineers I have seen."

Certain students of the Hindoo College at Calcutta are proposing to print a drama in the vernacular tongue. The scene is laid in Oojein, and the object of the play is to point out the evils of old men marrying when on the verge of the grave.

A discourse on the era of Zoroaster has been published at Bombay, by Nowrojee Furdonjee, interpreter to the Supreme Court of that presidency. The pamphlet is an attempt to prove that Zoroaster lived in the second century before Christ, instead of the fourth.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

THURSDAY, April 17, 1851.

THE Ceylon question seems daily to acquire a progressive intensity of interest. It is not now the policy of a local administration, or the character of a high colonial functionary, that is alone in question, but the existence of a ministry, which is supposed to hang upon the result of Mr. Baillie's motion. Great as these incidents are, they are not the sole matters of importance which the inquiries of the Select Committee of the House of Commons have brought into the arena of discussion.

We have toiled through the enormous masses of evidence taken by that Committee, and have been oppressed less with fatigue, than with a sense of mortification and disgust. Whatever shall be the final issue of the question, we do not scruple to say that the details disclosed in this evidence will fasten a stigma upon the administration of this colony during the period of Lord Torrington's government. In saying this, we do not personally accuse that nobleman, who, we think, has been in many respects very harshly and unfairly treated; our reference is to the condition in which most of the public departments of the colony appear to have been placed by their internal disorganization, by the antagonism amongst their functionaries, by the eagerness with which, in some instances, private objects seem to have been sought, to the neglect, practically, of public duties. We refer, moreover, to the melancholy examples furnished in this evidence of the extreme laxity of moral obligation apparent amongst some of the officials of the Ceylon service, civil and military. From the highest, the governor himself, down to the lowest in rank who has been examined before the Committee, throughout almost all the gradations, civil and military, imputations are, with very few exceptions, made and repelled, denied and reiterated, which directly affect the veracity and personal honour of parties in the position of gentlemen. Lord Torrington himself stands convicted, under his own hand, of an act of manifest duplicity; and it is impossible to read the examinations, cross-examinations, and re-examinations, of Sir Emerson Tennent, the Colonial Secretary, and Mr. P. E. Wodehouse, of the Ceylon Civil Service, who was acting Colonial Secretary prior to the arrival of Sir Emerson, relative to facts respecting which there could be no room for mistake or misapprehension, without drawing a conclusion fatal to the veracity of one or the other. We say nothing of Captain Albert Watson's testimony, which is strongly at variance with that of one of his own officers, because both are about to undergo trial by Court-martial.

Much of this criminatory and recriminatory matter was the fruit of disclosures of a very extraordinary character, in which we think the Committee (salvâ reverentiâ) pushed their inquiries to the extreme verge of their legitimate power, namely, the production of confidential letters, containing reflections upon persons as well as things which would never have dropped from the pen of the writers unless they had relied upon a security, the breach of which the rules of good society visit with a heavy penalty. The case was, indeed, a peculiar one. The Committee found themselves embarrassed at every step by evidence most conflicting, and surmised, probably, that private correspondence might solve the enigma. Individual witnesses, again, like Sir E. Tennent, were astounded at evidence, documentary as well as oral, impeaching their character and conduct, which could be disproved by letters in their possession, written by the very persons whose testimony was pressed against them. It is difficult in such cases for the most skilful casuist to determine that, in a public inquiry like this, the Committee, or even the individuals, were wrong.

Turning aside from this very distasteful part of the subject, we shall, perhaps, assist those of our readers (and they must be many) who have not perused the evidence, by enumerating the principal charges against the Ceylon government which arise out of it, and by shortly stating the conclusions we have formed respecting them.

The first charge, in chronological series, is the imposition of new taxes in 1847 and 1848, which, in spite of the remonstrances of the native people, alleging their inability to pay them, were enforced, until discontent ripened into insurrection.

Now, upon this head, our opinion is clear, namely, that these taxes,—on guns, dogs, carriages, boats, shops, &c.,—were not the real cause of the insurrection, though, no doubt, they were craftily employed by its fomenters and leaders as pretexts. This conclusion is formed from facts stated by various witnesses; we adduce the testimony of Mr. Selby, the Queen's Advocate of Ceylon,—no partisan, but, as will appear, rather an assailant, of Lord Torrington's administration. That gentleman, upon being questioned as to the cause of the disturbances, expressly declares that the taxes did not create the excitement; that, in 1842, an attempt was made in the Kandyan country to excite disturbances of a similar character, when no taxes had been imposed; that certain returns were called for in 1848 for statistical purposes, which gave rise to an idea that more taxes were in contemplation, and that consequently more people joined the insurrection in 1848 than in 1842, when the common people, on being invited to join, said, "Why should we join—we have nothing to complain of against the government?"

The next accusation is, that martial law was unnecessarily proclaimed. In support of this charge, it is alleged that the insurrection was of a trivial and insignificant character, and that it might easily have been put down, as it really was, by a prompt display of a small force. This allegation derives some strength, primâ facie, from a declaration of the Chief Justice of Ceylon, Sir Anthony Oliphant, who from the bench of the Supreme Court, on the trial of some of the rebels, said "A more futile and contemptible attempt at rebellion than this has never before, to my knowledge, been made." This was said, however, it must be recollected, a month after the suppression of the insurrection, when its nature and extent had been pretty well ascertained. The question involves another, respecting which much diversity of opinion prevails amongst the witnesses, namely, who were the inciters of the rebellion? Was it an explosion of popular resistance to oppression, or a political movement by discontented headmen and priests? Upon this question, again, Sir A. Oliphant is an important witness; and if his testimony is resorted to for one purpose, it is available for another. In that same address he goes on to say:—

“Judging from the conduct of those who seem to have been most active in it, I hope I may be allowed to say, that the priests and headmen, as the evidence discloses, took the most active part in inciting the people; in fact, any one who attended the Court during the last fortnight, and listened to the evidence, can hardly doubt that the common people were driven to it like a flock of sheep. I therefore conclude, this rebellion was hatched by headmen or priests, or both by headmen and priests. That the priests have a cause, and a growing cause, of discontent, I am aware; it is known to the country generally, and therefore needs no further allusion to it here. They have kept a keen eye upon the decline of their religion, and it is quite natural that this should raise discontent in their minds; but I am aware, at the same time, and I speak from my own observation, that headmen have been always discontented, as far as their conduct has come to my knowledge, and it appears to me that the reason of it is as follows: the remembrance of the power and authority which they had exercised over the common people has not yet been effaced from their minds; neither is that power, as far as I can see from the evidence, altogether gone, or anything like gone, as is clearly shown by the evidence adduced in these trials. Their word appears to have operated as a law upon all inferior men in this affair.”

This, it must be remembered, is a judicial declaration from the bench, and completely neutralizes the effect of the judge's opinion respecting the “futility” of the rebellion, as a reason why martial law should not have been proclaimed. To the same effect is the evidence of Mr. Hanna, the police magistrate at Kandy, who, having characterized the insurrection as a “silly” one, and afterwards approved of the proclamation of martial law, was asked by Mr. Hume the reason of his “change of opinion.” He replied that he had not changed his opinion; “I think,” he says, “that the insurrection was silly, and that martial law was the best expedient that could be adopted to put an end to the disturbances.”

But then it is urged that martial law was unnecessarily continued from the 30th July, 1848, to the 10th October, the rebellion having been over in August; and, judging by the event, it is probable that it might safely have been terminated at an earlier date. Upon such a question, however, we are not at liberty to judge conclusively by the event, or to attach much weight to the opinions of persons at a distance from the scene. The Colonial Secretary, the chief military authorities, and those actually engaged in putting down the disturbances, decidedly approve of its prolongation; the Chief Justice, the Queen's Advocate, and Colonel Braybrooke, are of a contrary opinion. Sir E. Tennent, speaking two years after the occurrence, distinctly states that, if all the proceedings were to be gone over again, as regards the proclamation of martial law and the proceedings under it, there were no details he would alter. Colonel Braybrooke, who had nothing to do with the operations against the rebels,—which is a grave matter of complaint on his part,—considers that it would have been better to have stopped martial law at once, as, he thinks, it drove people from their homes.

The next question, as to the transactions which took place during and under martial law, is of far more difficulty, and raises, to our mind, the most formidable charge against the Ceylon government. Here, too, the evidence exhibits some of the painful contradictions to which we have adverted. We pass cursorily over, for want of space to investigate them properly, and because of their minor comparative importance, the charges of burning houses, and of confiscating property which should have been sequestered only. That houses were burnt is admitted. Lieutenant Henderson, the officer by whose orders they were burnt, pleads the instructions of Captain Watson, in a letter to him, which contains these words: “As to burning houses, I do not hesitate to do so in any bad case, but not generally.” Captain Watson distinctly denies that this “implies any authority to Lieutenant Henderson to burn houses.” The latter officer states, in his evidence, that he had asked Captain Watson for instructions as to burning houses, and that he received this letter in reply, which he considered and acted upon as instructions. As to the confiscation of property, it would certainly appear that the distinct meanings of the terms “confiscation” and “sequestration” were not always, in the confusion, present to the parties; but wrongs regarding property are more easily repaired than those which affect liberty and life; and here, we grieve to say, the evidence furnishes by no means a satisfactory exculpation of the authorities.

The manner in which the Courts-martial, which tried the prisoners, were conducted, even as represented by Captain Watson, the officer who superintended them, was most objectionable. The Courts held at Matelle, in August, 1848, consisted of three lieutenants, the age of the president being 29. The “general instruction” (for there was no special warrant) from Colonel Drought, who was at Kandy, sixteen miles off, directed that a judge advocate should be appointed; but in some, if not most, of the cases, none acted, and when one was appointed (a medical officer!), after he had acted on “one or two trials, or probably more,”—this is the loose way in which Captain Watson's evidence is expressed,—he says, he got an order from Colonel Drought to this effect: “You will discontinue your judge advocate, as it is not considered necessary.” The prisoners had no counsel. In the case of one of these prisoners,—an aratchi, or headman,—Capt. Watson is asked:—

“Did any person attend on his behalf as counsel, or to assist him in his defence, a judge advocate not being there?—He was assisted by the officers of the Court in his defence.

“Is it not considered, according to the usages of war, that the judge advocate is, in all cases, to attend to see that justice is done between the prisoner and the public?—That is the judge advocate's duty.

“But in this case there was no judge advocate?—There was none.”

The proceedings, which were “usually very lengthy,” were perused by Captain Watson, who confirmed the sentences, and the men were shot the morning after the trial. There were altogether nine capital cases.

The answer to the objections offered to this unusual mode of conducting such trials is, that there can be no doubt of the guilt of the men. This, if it be not a begging of the question, is no reason at all. But grave doubts were entertained as to their legal guilt. Mr. J. Selby, an advocate in the Supreme Court of Ceylon, produced to the Committee a letter from his colleagues, comprising, with one exception, the whole Kandy Bar, declaring that they had every reason to believe that, at the “illegal Courts-martial, many innocent people were, with indecent haste, condemned, and shot to death.”

The execution of the priest, who was shot at Kandy, has excited a peculiar degree of interest, from the circumstance of his having been put to death in his robes. But independently of this (as it is alleged) unnecessary degradation, the man's complicity in the rebellion is a contested fact. Mr. J. A. Dunuville (a native Kandyan), a proctor of the Supreme Court, who had been a pupil of the Queen's Advocate, by whom his probity is attested, in a statement laid before the Committee by the Queen's Advocate, dated "Kandy, 18th December, 1849," gives full details to show that the man was unjustly condemned. At the close of a long statement, Mr. Dunuville says:—

"On their return, the military party with Mr. Buller came to Kahall, and, without giving any explanation, seized upon and handcuffed the poor priest, and brought him to Kandy. He was on the day following brought to trial upon two distinct charges, to wit, first, for directly or indirectly holding correspondence with rebels, and not giving all the information in his power which might lead to the apprehension of a proclaimed rebel, he, Kadahopolle Unanse, professing to know his place of concealment, on or about the 17th August, 1848; second, for administering or conniving at the administration of a treasonable oath to one Keri Banda, on or about the 17th August, 1848. The Court-martial found the man guilty of these charges upon the evidence of the two Palemecoombes, and of the aforesaid Bootawattee Kangawa, alias Vidiawelli Widhane, and of Mr. Buller. The man's defence was a true narrative of the facts, and a discovery of the scheme laid to entrap him; they who say he confessed his guilt tell a deliberate lie, and will have to answer for that much more than for the murder. I was present at the trial; I was convinced of the man's innocence; I have solemnly sworn that I did not believe the evidence, and, as an act of duty towards my God, I now in his presence declare, that the priest was murdered. So help me God!"

Nothing can be stronger than this testimony as to the private opinion of this person, conversant with the English rules of evidence, as well as peculiarly qualified to judge of the value of native evidence. On the other hand, we have not only the general testimony of Sir A. Oliphant and others as to the tainted loyalty of the priests, but direct evidence that the prisoner confessed his crime. With respect to his being shot in his sacerdotal robes, there is in the appendix a copy of a letter from the chief priests of the two principal temples at Kandy, certifying that the execution of the priest in his robes was not, according to the laws of Budhoo, improper. There is, however, one distressing feature in this case which we should be glad to pass over, were it not of importance. It appears that the Queen's Advocate, who had officially, as a member of the Executive Council, protested against the continuance of martial law, was, on the afternoon of the day on which the priest was tried (the 25th August), visited by Mr. Smith, a proctor of the Kandy Court, who informed him that he (Mr. Smith) had been present at the trial, and was satisfied in his own mind that the priest was not guilty of the charge preferred against him, and that it was a conspiracy, stating several reasons which induced him to form that opinion. It was no part of the Queen's Advocate's duty, he says, to interfere in the matter; but, after conferring with his deputy (Mr. Stewart), who had been present when Mr. Smith made his communication, he determined (very properly) that he ought to acquaint the governor with the fact. Mr. Selby accordingly went to Lord Torrington, and reported to him what Mr. Smith had stated, adding that Mr. Dunuville and another member of the Bar concurred with him in opinion. The governor, however, expressed his determination that the sentence should be carried out, on the grounds that he had entire confidence in the officers who had sat upon the court, and that the prisoner had confessed his guilt. Being pressed to state the exact words used by the governor, Mr. Selby, after a decent resistance, said, they were these: "By God, if all the proctors in the place said that the man was innocent, he should be shot to-morrow morning." He adds that, upon leaving the governor, he went to the Chief Justice, then just arrived at Kandy from Colombo, who said, "Well, Selby, what is this? I hear they are going to shoot a priest to-morrow morning." Upon Mr. Selby saying "yes," the Chief Justice replied, "Well, I shall go down to the Governor about it," but he says, he dissuaded him, on account of the particular reply he had himself received from Lord Torrington. It is right to mention, that the words attributed to his lordship by Mr. Selby have been denied by him, and by the persons who were in a position to have heard them, if they had been used. The result was, however, that the Chief Justice, though he called upon his lordship, made no observation respecting the case of the priest. On the 23rd September, Sir Anthony did make a remonstrance upon the subject of the executions; when asked whether he had intimated to Lord Torrington that, if another man were executed, he would resign his office, Sir Anthony replies, that "it did not pass in that way," but declines to answer the question. He, however, subsequently admits that he did send a private and confidential communication to Lord Torrington on the day just mentioned; that "he felt the glory of his Sovereign was being tarnished, and the character of the country for humanity was being compromised," and therefore, he said, "he could remain passive no longer."

This is, we repeat, a part of the question respecting which we entertain grave doubts. Lord Torrington and his confidential advisers had many difficulties to struggle with, in the face of the party and family cliques into which the Ceylon civil service, according to Sir E. Tennent,* is divided. His administration has been subjected to a scrutiny which few colonial administrations, especially during a rebellion, will bear. He is entitled to the praise of having put down a rebellion promptly and at a less sacrifice of life than other similar outbreaks were attended with. But he cannot expect, in the ordeal to which he has been unfortunately exposed, to ride off upon general grounds. "Errors may have been committed," is his own candid admission, and the question will be the extent and character of these errors.

Meanwhile, we must repeat a remark heretofore made by us, that Ceylon is under the direct management of the Crown; that its administration was intended to be a model for the imitation of the East-India Company, and that, in the event of British India being transferred to the Crown, it cannot hope to be better administered than Ceylon.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

Sir,—Mr. Anstey must be informed that the cholera was not (as he stated in the House of Commons on the 3rd of April) introduced simultaneously with the E. I. Co.'s salt monopoly. The cholera broke out in March, 1781, on the march of Colonel Pearse's detachment through Cuttack, &c., to join Sir E. Cooté. I confidently state that the monopoly did not produce the cholera. The disease is an atmospheric affection, for which salt is not a bad remedy. The bad Mahomedan governments had a salt monopoly and a cruel capitation tax. The English salt tax (at one time 4,400 per cent.) was abolished in January, 1825. Where Mr. Anstey learnt the fact that there was any government (native) of India, during which those territories, when small in extent, and not subject to monopolies, yielded under former dynasties a revenue of never less than £30,000,000, I do not know. Mr. Bright erroneously thinks the Secret Committee is composed of the President of the Board of Control, the two Chairs, and the senior Director. Mr. Hume declared the Affghan war to have cost £12,000,000, and the Burmese war £9,000,000. This is reversing the position of the two sums. The Burmese war did (it is said) cost about £13,000,000: the cost of the Affghan war is not quite known to Mr. Hume. The disturbed state of India on the death of Aurungzebe (1707) will well account for the state of India till of late years. When we recollect that mail coaches were only used in England in 1780, and that people made their wills, a hundred years ago, before they travelled to York or Scotland, it may be well imagined that in India, 100 years ago, the followers of Sevajee, the founder of the Mahratta empire, and the nobles of the falling Mogul dynasty,—the first plunderers, the latter striving for the loaves and fishes,—must have caused any country to be unsettled. The rebellion of 1745 left England unsettled for a long time. Still, people in England expect railroads, &c. to be started all of a sudden, as if India had been as much civilized as any part of Great Britain.

Yours obediently,
W. H.

THE AGRA AND UNITED SERVICE BANK.

A complaint has been made to us that, by the insertion in the last Mail (p. 193) of an extract of a letter, addressed by Mr. Stowell, a shareholder of the Agra Bank, to the Mofussilite newspaper, concerning the affairs of that establishment, we have "given extended publicity to false and slanderous charges against a body of honourable men, and thereby,—however unintentionally,—injured them, and also prejudiced the interests of the shareholders generally."

Mr. Stowell's letter was published in (we believe) all the Indian journals brought by the last mail, in none of which had appeared (to our knowledge) the slightest contradiction of its averments, notwithstanding that, in one of the Bombay journals, it was observed that, "if permitted to remain uncontradicted, it must, when conjoined with recent banking disclosures, materially affect the opinions of the public." The allegations were not anonymous: Mr. Stowell, the writer, is a shareholder of the bank, consequently interested in upholding its credit; he had been in 1848 one of the auditors, and therefore must have been conversant with the bank's accounts. Under these circumstances, to have withheld this letter altogether would have been a breach of our duty to the public, whilst it would have been of no service, but rather an injury, to the bank itself. These are times in which banks, and especially Indian banks, are more liable to be injured by attempts to suppress publicity, than by the promulgation, on the responsibility of a known individual, of even unfounded charges, the refutation of which will establish the credit of a bank upon a sounder basis than before.

We published no other portion of Mr. Stowell's letter than the important facts alleged by him. We omitted much obnoxious matter, and we gave insertion to none of the unfavourable criticisms upon the occurrence contained in some of the journals. It is now necessary to be less abstemious, in order that the case may be properly understood.

In his letter, Mr. Stowell states that he had just returned from the meeting of shareholders of the Agra bank, where he was left in a minority, though well supported by the unbiassed resident shareholders, but the five directors, one of them the editor of the Delhi Gazette, formed a majority; that he was interrupted every time he attempted to speak; that his motion for the admission of a reporter (one being at hand) was lost; that the directors re-elected themselves, and successfully resisted a proposed amendment that they be elected by ballot, on the ground that a ballot could only, according to the deed, take place at the requisition of ten shareholders.

These statements we do not understand to be in any way impugned; and we must observe that the refusal to admit a reporter (upon the ground that he was not a shareholder, which would seem to be a reason why he should be admitted) was injudicious. Reporters,—who are indifferent persons, trebly responsible for their fidelity, to their employers, to the parties concerned, and to the public,—are admitted into the directors' parlour of the Bank of England, and were not excluded even from the meetings of the Union Bank of Calcutta. The Bengal Hurkaru states that the reporter's exclusion was carried by a majority of two only; and that "the votes would have been equal but for the appearance of Mr. Mead, the Delhi editor, a shareholder of six months' standing, and that of one of the clerks of the establishment." The Lahore Chronicle remarks: "Publicity is wholesome in cases of this kind, and the attempt to avoid publicity reflects an amount of discredit on the bank that must seriously injure the credit of that or any other institution."

Mr. Stowell proceeded to state, in the passage of his letter inserted by us, that, by dint of perseverance, he extorted an admission from the directors that they had cancelled, sold, or otherwise made away with, 826 shares, or Rs. 4,13,000, of the capital, and were not prepared to give any account of the same; that the directors, in their last report, had alluded to 367 of their shares as having been purchased in and cancelled by them, at a discount of 5 to 10 per cent., which discount was placed to credit of the Reserve Fund; but the remaining 459 shares, or Rs. 2,29,500, were never noticed in any way until he brought forward the subject; that he demonstrated to the meeting that the last dividend, declared on the 16th August last, of 8 per cent., and Rs. 64,927. 3a. 7p. to be carried to the Reserve Fund, was an "Hudsonian one," as Rs. 75,071. 5a. 8p. had previously been abstracted from the Reserve Fund, and which had not been noticed in the report or proceedings, and consequently the real divisible balance was less than 8 per cent. At this stage of the proceedings, he says, while arguing in support of his proposition, "that the accounts be not passed without further investigation,"—a very reasonable proposal,—he was interrupted and forced to be silent.

In reply to the foregoing allegations of Mr. Stowell, we have received from a highly respectable source in this country the following counter-statement:—"That so far from Mr. Stowell having extorted from the directors any admission that they had cancelled, sold, or otherwise made away with, 826 shares, or Rs. 4,13,000 of the capital, of which they were not prepared to give any account, the fullest explanation of all the particulars was given, to the satisfaction of the general meeting, Mr. S. alone excepted. That 459 of the above shares, of which a detailed list had been submitted to the half-yearly general meeting of 13th August, 1849, were then declared, by a public resolution of the proprietary assembled, to be cancelled and forfeited for causes which were stated. That the remaining 367 shares were, in like manner, and under the same authority, formally cancelled, and the cancellation was publicly announced, by the half-yearly general meeting of 16th August, 1850. That the alleged abstraction of Rs. 75,071. 5a. 8p. from the Reserve Fund, on the occasion of the half-yearly dividend for the six months ending 30th June, 1850, never took place. That there is no foundation whatever for any such charge, and that the difference in the Reserve Fund alluded to was occasioned by its having been debited, under the authority of the general meeting of 13th August, 1849, with certain losses then prominently noticed in the director's report, as having occurred, or being likely to occur, amounting to Rs. 1,07,699. 3a. 4p., but which was reduced, by subsequent recoveries, amounting to Rs. 82,627. 13a. 8p., from these and other insolvent estates, to Rs. 75,071. 5a. 8p., thus accounting, to a point, for Mr. Stowell's supposed deficit."

This counter-statement, which we regret was not made at Agra, is guaranteed to us by the respectable authority from which it emanates (we are not empowered to specify names), and supported by a reference to printed documents which accompanied it; one of which is the report of the directors submitted to the meeting at Agra on the 6th of February, of the affairs of the bank, with the accounts of the preceding six months, showing Rs. 3,12,418. 9a. 4p., available for a dividend, at 8 per cent. per annum; leaving Rs. 57,838. 9a. 4p. to be carried to the reserve fund. Appended to the report is the following note:—

"The present amount of the (paid up) capital of the bank will be explained by the following figures:—

Capital (paid up) 1st July, 1849	Rs. 67,77,500
Shares cancelled, per resolution 5, of 13th August, 1849	Shares 459
Ditto, res. 3, 16th August, 1850	367
Capital (paid up) 1st January, 1851	Rs. 63,64,500

We decline delivering any opinion of our own upon the questions at issue, which could not be satisfactory, unless it was the result of a more careful examination of the accounts than we have leisure or materials to make; but the impression we have always had, that the Agra Bank is an extremely well conducted establishment, inclines to confide in their accuracy.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS, APRIL 1.

CEYLON.—Lord Torrington moved, "that a message be sent to the House of Commons for a copy of the report and evidence of the Select Committee on Ceylon." In making this motion he observed that he was compelled to call their lordship's attention to the subject in consequence of the withdrawal of Mr. H. Baillie's notice of motion in the House of Commons, which left him no other means of meeting, without delay, the calumnies he had been exposed to. He asserted that his conduct in Ceylon had been in accordance with the views of the members of the civil Government, and, when measures of restriction became necessary, with those of the military authorities on the spot.

When he first assumed the administration of Ceylon, his attention was directed to the means of making the revenue equal to the expenditure, and the measures he adopted, both by improving the first and reducing the second, had been attended with success, and proved that he had the interests of the colony at heart. The proclamation of martial law when disturbances occurred had been made a matter of charge against him, but, when the treacherous habits of an Eastern population, as contrasted with those of an European, were duly considered, he felt persuaded that the necessity of taking strong and decisive measures to secure the tranquillity of the country would be admitted. He denied that the courts-martial were improperly conducted, and he asked, looking to the character of the officers employed, whether it was likely they would lend themselves to acts of cruelty and injustice. The ordinary civil power could not have preserved the peace of the country, and the Legislative Council in 1848 and 1849 approved his conduct; and he read addresses from European colonists and merchants at Ceylon expressing regret at his resignation.

Earl Grey thought his noble friend had done right in calling the attention of the House to this subject, as he had been for two years and a half the mark of all kinds of calumny, and garbled portions of the evidence taken before the Committee of the House of Commons had been published in Ceylon to his prejudice. To say that no abuses took place during the existence of courts-martial was more than any man, even the noble Duke (Wellington), could assert, but he would maintain that his noble friend's administration of Ceylon had been only such as redounded to his credit.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, APRIL 3.

THE COMPANY'S GOVERNMENT.—Mr. Anstey moved an address, praying her Majesty to appoint a commission to inquire, in India, into the operation and results of the existing laws touching the government and management of the territories under the administration of the East-India Company. On former occasions, inquiry had been considered a condition precedent to the renewal of the Company's exclusive privileges; the last extension of their term of rule was of the nature of an experiment, and the Act of 1833 was unduly precipitated—facts which rendered preliminary inquiry, before the lease was again renewed, the more necessary. The grievances which existed in 1833—ryotwar tenures, the monopolies of opium, salt, and tobacco, the exclusion of natives from offices of trust—remained unredressed, and their effect was visible in the “low and abject condition of the cultivating population of India,” declared in the Report of the Cotton Committee of 1848. He insisted upon the oppressive character of the assessment—the land-tax (or rent, as it was termed) reaching to 45 or 50 per cent., payable in money before the crop was carried; upon the severity of other imposts; upon the harsh restrictions and compulsions to which the labouring classes in India were subjected, and under which nine-tenths of them were annually sold up. Did not these things, he asked, deserve inquiry? Adverting, then, to the machinery of Indian administration, which, he alleged, equally demanded inquiry, he taxed the Court of Directors with supineness; he denounced the vices of the judicial system and the abuses in the dispensation of justice; and, on the subject of foreign politics, he enlarged upon the disregard of treaties with native States, and the readiness to engage in war which characterised the Indian Government, and which tended to destroy the confidence once felt by the people of India in English justice.

Lord J. Russell thought the House was hardly in a state to enter into a consideration of the various subjects referred to by Mr. Anstey, who had mistaken the position both of the Government and the house. Lord Broughton had rightly said it was not the intention of the Government to appoint a committee upon East India affairs this session, but that every information that could be obtained should be laid before the House; it would then be time to decide whether it would be requisite to appoint a committee. Mr. Anstey proposed an inquiry in India, which he (Lord John) believed would be the worst mode that could be adopted, since it would produce great excitement, and interfere with the governing authorities in India; it would be far better, if inquiry were needed, that it should be conducted by a committee of that House. With reference to a suggestion of Mr. Anstey, that the administration of India should be vested exclusively in the Queen's Government, Lord John disapproved of a proposition for dispensing with the assistance of the able and experienced men composing the Court of Directors.

Mr. Hume, though he did not approve of sending a commission to India, considered inquiry necessary, which could be assisted by Company's servants in that country. He suggested various points to which that inquiry might be directed, especially the political department. The Afghan war, he observed, had been begun, conducted, and closed without the knowledge of the Court of Directors, by the orders of the President of the Board of Control, who was a despot, though not so intended by Parliament. With Lord J. Russell he deprecated the abrogation of the Court of Directors.

Sir J. Hogg said, none could be more anxious for an open and searching inquiry into Indian affairs than the Court of Directors; but Mr. Anstey had acted unfairly and uncandidly, for, while professing to call for inquiry, he had cast the vilest imputations, without, and even contrary to, evidence. One of the great grievances which he said were unredressed was the exclusion of the natives from office; but Sir James showed, from the extensive employment of Sudder Ameens and Moonsiffs, that his statement was unfounded. He rectified other misapprehensions of Mr. Anstey respecting the land revenue, the monopolies of salt and opium, and defended Lord Dalhousie against some reflections of Mr. Hume, observing that no man ever went to India to whom this country and India were more indebted than to that nobleman, for his energy and humanity and his extraordinary talent for administration.

Mr. Bright thought it would have been better if Mr. Anstey had framed his motion so as to recognise the necessity of a full and searching inquiry before the renewal of the charter, since many would doubt the expediency of sending a commission to India. He condemned the anomalous constitution of the home Indian government, the functions of the secret committee, and the power of the president of the India board, and suggested that the use of the patronage was not quite so pure as might be hoped for. That India had been misgoverned, he inferred from the acknowledged fact that the labouring classes were in a state of abject poverty; and he contrasted the small sum expended by the Government in improvements with the vast sums they had derived from taxation. He complained of the dilatory character of the Indian Government and the absence of responsibility, which was its great defect.

Mr. Mangles replied to several points in Mr. Bright's speech and observed that when such men as Lords Dalhousie and Hardinge were sent to India, practically a Royal Commission was sent to that country.

Mr. Anstey, deferring to the opinion of the House, withdrew his motion.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE DIRECTION.—On the 9th inst., a ballot was taken at the East India-house for the election of six directors, in the room of Mr. William Butterworth Bayley, Mr. Russell Ellice, Sir Richard Jenkins, G.C.B., Mr. Ross Donnelly Mangles, M.P., Mr. John Masterman, M.P., and Major John Arthur Moore, who go out by rotation. The scrutineers reported that the election had fallen on Mr. John Cotton, Mr. John Loch, Mr. Charles Mills, Mr. William Henry-Chicheley Plowden, M.P., Mr. Henry Shank, and Mr. Henry St. George Tucker. A Court of Directors was also held, when the thanks of the court were voted unanimously to Mr. John Shepherd (chairman), and Sir James Weir Hogg, Bart., M.P. (deputy chairman), for their great application and attention to the affairs of the East-India Company during the past year. At a Court held on the 10th, these gentlemen were re-elected chairman and deputy chairman for the year ensuing.

TRADE WITH INDIA.—From the annual report of the East-India and China Association of the British tonnage entered inwards and cleared outwards from and to places within the limits of the East-India Company's charter, from the 1st of January to the 31st of March in the years 1850 and 1851, it appears that the entries inwards show an increase in the port of London of ten vessels, of 3,029 tons, the difference between 132 vessels, 65,127 tons, in the first quarter of 1850, and 142 vessels, 68,246 tons, in the corresponding period of 1851. At Liverpool, the increase is 36 vessels, 18,839 tons, the difference between 51 vessels, 22,410 tons, in the former, and 87 vessels, 41,249 tons, in the latter quarter. The gross increase is 54 vessels, 24,963 tons, the number of vessels which entered inwards being 208, of 96,448 tons, in the first quarter of 1850, against 262, of 121,431 tons, in the same period of 1851. The chief arrival of vessels constituting this increase was from Madras, Bombay, China, and the Cape of Good Hope. Of the vessels entered outwards, the general results are as follows:—The decrease in the port of London has been 23, of 12,820 tons, the difference between 131 vessels, 62,028 tons, and 108 vessels, 49,208 tons. Liverpool has an increase of seven vessels, 66 tons, the respective numbers being 78 vessels, 36,869 tons, and 71 vessels, 36,803 tons. The gross decrease amounted to 65 vessels, 23,715 tons, the difference between 263 vessels, 118,487 tons, in the first quarter of 1850, and 198 vessels, 94,772 tons, in the same period of 1851. The chief decline has been in the departures for Calcutta, Bombay, Ceylon, Singapore, New South Wales, and the South Seas.

THE GENERAL SCREW STEAM SHIPPING COMPANY have received the sanction of the Board of Trade for an augmentation of their capital from £200,000 to £1,000,000, and the company state that the extension of their line to Madras and Calcutta, via the Cape of Good Hope and the Mauritius, will be effected as soon as possible, ships of 1,700 tons and 300-horse power, with an average speed of not less than nine knots, being in course of construction for the service.

ST. HELENA.—The revenue of the island of St. Helena in 1848 and 1849 amounted respectively to 16,535*l.* 14*s.* 7*d.* and 15,921*l.* 9*s.* The largest sources of revenue are the customs, which produced 9,698*l.* in 1848, and 8,940*l.* in 1849; and the licenses, which yielded 2,132*l.* in the former year, and 2,014*l.* in the second. The total expenditure in 1848 was 22,653*l.*, the civil establishment costing 8,934*l.*; the judicial 2,468*l.*; pensions 3,400*l.*; and public works and buildings, 2,144*l.* In 1849 the expenditure was 23,867*l.*, of which 8,977*l.* 19*s.* 6*d.* went to the civil establishment, 2,343*l.* to the judicial, 2,830*l.* to pensions, 3,619*l.* to public works, and 1,050*l.* to the widows' and orphans' fund. The salary of the Governor, Major-General Sir Patrick Ross, is 2,000*l.*; that of the Colonial Secretary, Mr. R. C. Pennell, 600*l.*; and that of the Chief Justice, W. Wilde, 700*l.* The colonial treasurer, the collector of customs, and the colonial chaplain have 500*l.* a year each.—Times, April 11, 1851.

The ship Trafalgar has been engaged for the conveyance of stores to Bombay.

This Society offers a lower and more economical scale of Premiums for Life Assurance than hitherto demanded by the established Offices in India.

Annual Premium for assuring 1,000 rupees:—

CIVIL.			MILITARY AND NAVAL.
Age.	With Profits.	Without Profits.	Age.	With Profits.	Without Profits.
20	Rs. 33	Rs. 31	20	Rs. 38	Rs. 35
30	38	35	30	44	41
40	49	45	40	53	49
50	63	59	50	66	61
60	82	77	60	84	79

All holders of Policies in India on the Profit scale, who may have paid five annual premiums, will be entitled, at the expiration of the fifth year, to a year's profit, calculated on the average of the preceding five years; such profit to be paid in cash, or to go in diminution of the future premiums payable, or to be added to the sum assured by the policy, at the option of the holder, after the calculation of the profits shall have been made in London.

After the expiration of 1851, the profits will be declared annually, and the payers of five complete annual premiums be regularly entitled to a participation therein, with a like option as to the mode of application.

Parties assured in India for Life shall, on their return to England for a permanency, and on the first half-yearly premium becoming due, be entitled to come upon the English rates of premium, and be placed under the rules and conditions of the Society there obtaining.

All parties assured for Life, or for terms other than for Life, whatever the number of payments, or the permanency or otherwise of their residence in Europe, shall, after completing a full year from the date of their quitting India, and on the first half-yearly premium thereafter becoming due, be entitled to a reduction of their premium to the English rates, such reduced rates being continued during their further residence in Europe.

Notices of Assignments of Policies will be duly registered at the Office of the Secretaries.

The Society also grants ENDOWMENTS and DEFERRED ANNUITIES for India, the Tables for which, with full information, may be had at the Office of the Family Endowment Society, No. 12, Chatham Place; or at the Office of the Secretaries in Calcutta, Messrs. GORDON, STUART, and Co.

HINDUSTANI WORKS BY JOHN SHAKESPEAR, Esq.

NEW EDITION, with GREAT ADDITIONS.

This Day is published, the 4th Edition, in 1 vol. 4to. price £5 5s. in boards, SHAKESPEAR'S HINDUSTANI and ENGLISH DICTIONARY, ORGATELY ENLARGED: to which is added, a DICTIONARY, ENGLISH and HINDUSTANI, ENTIRELY NEW.

* To the First Part of this Dictionary, the author has, by laborious study of Hindustani works, both printed and manuscript, made the most extensive additions. In the Hindustani and English Part, the Hindustani words are printed in their proper characters, together with the pronunciation in Roman letters. The Derivatives, which are traced from the Sanskrit, Arabic, Hebrew, Persian, and Greek, are given respectively in the character peculiar to each of those languages.

The Second Part, English and Hindustani, is ENTIRELY NEW. It comprises the most common English words, and also numerous usual phrases, with the fittest corresponding translations into Hindustani.

REVIEW in "TIMES," Jan. 3.—"Much attention has been paid to the collecting of scientific terms, especially botanical ones, as well as to the correct rendering them into the technology of Europe." * * * "The Hindustani and English Part of it now contains upwards of 53,000 words and phrases explained, being 7,000 more than in the last edition, and 11,000 more than in any other Dictionary of the like description now extant." * * * "In India, as well as in Europe, the character of this work has long been fully established, and the present edition will greatly enhance its reputation."

5th Edition, 1 vol. royal 8vo. price 14s.

A GRAMMAR of the HINDUSTANI LANGUAGE. To which is added, a short Grammar of the Dakhni.

1 vol. royal 8vo. price £1 10s.

AN INTRODUCTION to the HINDUSTANI LANGUAGE. Designed especially for those who have no Instructor.

In 2 vols. 4to. price £1 16s.

MUNTAKHABAT-I-HINDI; OR, SELECTIONS in HINDUSTANI. With a verbal translation and grammatical analysis of some parts, for the use of Students of that language. London: PELHAM RICHARDSON, 23, Cornhill.

GREAT EALING SCHOOL, MIDDLESEX, for the SONS OF GENTLEMEN, in number Fifty, conducted by DR. FRANCIS NICHOLAS, of WADHAM COLLEGE, OXFORD, and established in the same family upwards of 130 years. The house is delightfully situated in the village of Ealing, and has been lately built by Dr. Nicholas, with baths, and every requisite to promote the health and comfort of his Pupils. The Schools and bed-rooms are particularly airy, and four acres of land are laid out for play, gymnastic, and cricket grounds. Ealing is the first station on the Great Western Railway.—Terms, for board, separate bed, laundress, church sitting, education in the English, French, Latin, and Greek languages, Writing, Arithmetic, Mathematics, Geography, with the use of the Globes, FIFTY GUINEAS PER ANNUM: for TWELVE Pupils under Twelve years old, in the junior department, which is conducted by Mrs. Nicholas, with the assistance of Ladies, FORTY-FIVE GUINEAS, and includes Dancing and Drilling. Extra charges for books only, and the personal wants of the Pupil. Residence during the VACATIONS (six weeks at Midsummer, also at Christmas), One Guinea and a Half per week—no extras.

THE NEW TOOTH-PICK TOOTH-BRUSH,

thoroughly cleansing between the teeth when used up and down, and polishing the surface when used crossways, the hair warranted never to come out; in four strengths—viz. No. 1, hard; No. 2, less hard; No. 3, medium; No. 4, soft. The double anti-pressure nail-brush, which does not divide the quick from the nails. The triple hair-brush, which thoroughly searches and cleanses the hair in one-fourth part of the time of any other method, and acts as both comb and brush combined. The medium shaving-brush, being a selection of the strongest badgers' hair, so well secured in the socket as never to come loose. And, though last not least, the newly-invented "Renovator" clothes-brush, which makes an old coat look like a new one, and a new coat to look new double the usual time. Invented and made only by ROSS and SONS.

THE ATRAPILATORY, or LIQUID HAIR DYE.—The only dye that really answers for all colours, and does not require re-doing but as the hair grows, as it never fades or acquires that unnatural red or purple tint common to all other dyes. ROSS and SONS can, with the greatest confidence, recommend the above DYE as infallible; and ladies and gentlemen requiring it are requested, if convenient, to have it done the first time at their establishment, which will enable them to use it afterwards themselves, without the chance of failure. They think it necessary to add, that, by attending strictly to the instructions given with the dye, numerous parties have succeeded equally well without coming to them.

BOTANIC WATER and BEARS' GREASE.—When the hair is becoming thin, and falling off, the only effectual remedy, besides shaving the head, is the use of the two above-named articles, applied alternately—the botanic water to cleanse the roots from scurf, and as a stimulant, and the bears' grease as a nourisher. If any further evidence was required of the virtues of bears' grease for renovating and preserving the hair, Mr. Catlin's account of the quantity used, and the length of hair obtained, by some of the North-American Indians, would be a sufficient answer.—ROSS and SONS, who first introduced the use of bears' grease in this country, and who fat and kill the animals, recommend the public to purchase none other but with their names and address printed on the pot, or the chances are, their obtaining a spurious article.

ROSS and SONS, 119 and 120, Bishopsgate Street, London.

TO LADIES.—The high and universal celebrity which ROWLANDS' KALYDOR continues to maintain as an active, yet mild and soothing, extirpator of all impurities of the skin, is, during the period of Spring, most pleasingly evinced. This preparation, eminently balsamic, restorative, and invigorating, is equally distinguished for safety in application, as for unfailing efficacy in eradicating all redness, tan, pimples, spots, freckles, discolorations, and other cutaneous visitations. The radiant bloom it imparts to the cheek, and the softness and delicacy which it induces on the hands and arms, render it indispensable to every toilet. To ladies during the period of nursing, and as a wash for infants, it cannot be too strongly recommended. Gentlemen, after shaving, will find it allay all irritation and tenderness of the skin, and render it soft, smooth, and pleasant. Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle.

ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL, for the growth, and for preserving, improving, and beautifying the human hair. Price 3s. 6d. and 7s.; family bottles (equal to four small), 10s. 6d., and double that size, 21s. per bottle.

ROWLANDS' ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE, for preserving and beautifying the teeth, strengthening the gums, and for rendering the breath sweet and pure. Price 2s. 9d. per box.

* BEWARE OF SPURIOUS IMITATIONS.—The only genuine of each bears the name of "ROWLANDS," preceding that of the article, on the wrapper or label. Sold by them at 20, Hatton Garden, London; and by chemists and perfumers.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS, a CERTAIN CURE for BILE, HEADACHES, and also for WEAK and DERANGED STOMACHS.—Incurable diseases affecting the heart, the liver, or the lungs, are frequently engendered by intemperance to the disordered state of the stomach, which causes loss of appetite, loss of strength, and loss of energy. To counter these distressing symptoms, it is only necessary to take a few doses of Holloway's inestimable Pills, which will be the means of purifying the blood, and thereby give a healthy action to the vital functions. Their effect on the system is such as to imperceptibly restore to the soundest health and strength even the most weakened constitution.

Sold by all Druggists, and at Professor Holloway's establishment, 244, Strand, London; and by all European and Native vendors of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

VARIKOSE VEINS, WEAKNESS, FRACTURES, SPRAINS, &c.

HUXLEY'S SURGICAL CAOUTCHOUC ELASTIC STOCKINGS, KNEE-CAPS, &c., are now daily patronized by all the leading members of the profession. Their superiority over every other fabric for artificial support is admitted by all who inspect them. They afford an equal, comforting, and permanent pressure on every portion of the limb, and are drawn on with the facility of an ordinary stocking. H. and Co. guarantee a comfort and support hitherto unknown in any other form of bandage. It is well known that all kinds of Surgical Stockings lately used have a tendency to impede the free and healthy action of the muscles, thereby producing relaxation and great diminution of the limb. Only to be obtained at HUXLEY'S Parisian Shirt Warehouse, 5, Vere Street, Cavendish Square.

THE HAND-BEDSTEAD FOR CADETS, weight 17 lbs.

BESMERES and SONS, CLOTHIERS, OUTFITTERS, and ready-made Linen Warehousemen, invite overland travellers to India to inspect this PORTABLE BEDSTEAD, price 12s. 6d., invented and made only by them. Although so light, it is strong, compact, of full size, and may be used without a mattress; it passes readily into a bag 6 inches in diameter, 24 long. Bedstead, bedding, blankets, sheets, quilt, &c., packed in one of their Waterproof Regulation Overland Trunks, weigh under 50 lbs. Overland Trunks, One Guinea each. Lists of Outfit for Cadets and Assistant-Surgeons, estimates and information of every expense of the passage and journey, forwarded by post. Lists of Linen, priced, may also be had.—Outfitting Warehouses, Nos. 61 to 64, Houndsditch, London.

EMIGRATION AND COLONIZATION.

IMMIGRATION being much required in AUSTRALIA, NEW ZEALAND, &c., and as the supposed expense of an OUTFIT often prevents individuals emigrating, S. W. SILVER and Co., CLOTHIERS, OUTFITTERS, and CONTRACTORS (having a large interest to maintain in those Colonies), have been advised to make known that they can supply a comfortable OUTFIT, including Bedding, for MALE or FEMALE Emigrants, from Four Pounds (net) upwards, or less (Two Pounds if needful, and for Children in proportion, at No. 4, BISHOPSGATE STREET WITHIN, (opposite the London Tavern), where lists will be given on application.

S. W. S. & Co., being the makers of nearly every article in all the Outfits they supply, and as one of their objects is to promote EMIGRATION, they neither receive from Agents, or pay the too usual commission to any person introducing Passengers to be fitted out, so that the Passage and Outfit may be procured at the least possible expense; but they will, on application, advise Passengers how to obtain the most economic passage to the Colonies. They have a Representative in every Australian Colony, to whom they ship Clothing monthly; thus they would forward small parcels free of expense.

NAVAL and MILITARY OFFICERS, MIDSHIPMEN, CADETS, CIVILIANS, LADIES, &c., are outfitted as heretofore, at the CARLIN-PASSENGER OUTFITTING Warehouse, Nos. 65 and 67, CORNHILL (the Emigration Outfitting being exclusively at No. 4, BISHOPSGATE STREET WITHIN, LONDON, and each branch at ST. GEORGE'S CRESCENT, LIVERPOOL.

KIDSTON'S MECHANICAL LEECH.

WM. KIDSTON and Co., 18, Bishopsgate Street Without, London, in directing the attention of the medical profession to their newly-invented instrument, termed "Kidston's Mechanical Leech," think it would be superfluous and presumptuous to make any comment in its behalf, further than drawing their attention to the testimonials in its favour, published in the "Lancet" of September 28, and in the Pharmaceutical Journal for October.

Full instructions for use will accompany the instruments. Price per set of instruments,—i.e. three "Leeches," or Vacuum Glasses, with Puncturing Instrument electro plated, in neat morocco case, complete,—£2. 3s.

IMPORTANT FAMILY MEDICINE.

THE GREAT NUMBER OF NEW MEDICINES which have within the last few years been offered to the Public, would have prevented the Proprietor from submitting to their notice this valuable Extract, had not the fullest and most decided evidence of its superiority convinced him that, as far as he could, it was strictly a duty on his part to make it generally known. It is purely Vegetable, being extracted from CAMOMILE FLOWERS; hence, in all cases where the stomach does not rightly perform its office, it is at once the most harmless, pleasant, and efficacious assistant possible.

With the weak, the sickly, and the sedentary, the preventive art of Medicine must be an object worthy of particular attention. The effect of a few doses will fully prove its efficacy; for whether the constitution is naturally bad, whether it has been seriously injured by severe attacks of illness, or by some inferior dilapidating cause, or whether it has been impaired by time or by neglect, the general effect is similar, and, consequently, the repairing and propping up of the system can only be accomplished by invigorating and bringing into proper action the digestive organs, thus preventing the general breaking up of the constitution. The Proprietor, from experience, confidently recommends an occasional dose of this valuable Medicine, being assured of the most happy result, and that the period of life may be extended many years by the use of

NORTON'S CAMOMILE PILLS,

The most certain Preserver of Health;

AND, AS A NATURAL CONSEQUENCE, A PURIFIER OF THE BLOOD & A SWEETENER OF THE WHOLE SYSTEM.

INDIGESTION is a weakness or want of power of the digestive juices in the stomach to convert what we eat and drink into healthy matter, for the proper nourishment of the whole system. It is caused by everything which weakens the system in general, or the stomach in particular. From it proceed nearly all the diseases to which we are liable; for it is very certain that if we could always keep the stomach right, we should only die by old age or accident. Indigestion produces a great variety of unpleasant sensations; amongst the most prominent are a want of, or an inordinate, appetite, sometimes attended with a constant craving for drink, a distension or feeling of enlargement of the stomach, flatulency, heart-burn, or sickness; in some cases of depraved digestion there is a complete disrelish for food, but still the appetite is not greatly impaired, as at the stated period of meals persons so afflicted can eat heartily, although without much gratification; a long train of nervous symptoms are also frequent attendants, general debility, great languidness, and incapacity for exertion. The minds of persons so afflicted frequently become irritable and desponding, and great anxiety is observable in the countenance; they appear under great apprehension of some imaginary danger, will start at any unexpected noise or occurrence, and become so agitated that they require some time to calm and collect themselves; yet the mind is exhilarated without much difficulty; pleasing events, society, will for a time dissipate all appearance of disease; but the excitement produced by an agreeable change vanishes soon after the cause has gone by. Other symptoms are, violent palpitations, restlessness, the sleep disturbed by frightful dreams and startings, and affording little or no refreshment; occasionally there is much moaning, with a sense of weight and oppression upon the chest, night-mare, &c.

It is almost impossible to enumerate all the symptoms of this first invader upon the constitution, as in a hundred cases of indigestion there will probably be something peculiar to each; but, be they what they may, they are all occasioned by the food becoming a burthen rather than a support to the stomach; and in all its stages the medicine most wanted is that which will afford effectual assistance to the digestive organs, and give energy to the nervous and muscular systems,—nothing can more speedily or with more certainty effect so desirable an object than NORTON'S EXTRACT OF CAMOMILE FLOWERS. The herb has from time immemorial been highly esteemed in England as a grateful anodyne, imparting an aromatic bitter to the taste, and a pleasing degree of warmth and strength to the stomach; and in all cases of indigestion, gout in the stomach, windy cholice, and general weakness, it has for ages been strongly recommended by the most eminent practitioners as very useful and beneficial. The great, indeed only, objection to their use has been the large quantity of water which it takes to dissolve a small part of the flowers, and which must be taken with it into the stomach. It requires a quarter of a pint of boiling water to dissolve the soluble portion of one drachm of camomile flowers; and, when one or even two ounces may be taken with advantage, it must at once be seen how impossible it is to take a proper dose of this wholesome herb in the form of tea; and the only reason why it has not long since been placed the very first in rank of all restorative medicines is, that in taking it the stomach has always been loaded with water, which tends in a great measure to counteract, and very frequently wholly to destroy, the effect. It must be evident that loading a weak stomach with a large quantity of water, merely for the purpose of conveying into it a small quantity of medicine, must be injurious; and that the medicine must possess powerful renovating properties only to counteract the bad effects likely to be produced by the water. Generally speaking, this has been the case with camomile flowers,—a herb possessing the highest restorative qualities, and, when properly taken, decidedly the most speedy restorer, and the most certain preserver of health.

These PILLS are wholly CAMOMILE, prepared by a peculiar process, accidentally discovered, and known only to the proprietor, and which he firmly believes to be one of the most valuable modern discoveries in medicine, by which all the essential and extractive matter of more than an ounce of the flowers is concentrated in four moderate sized pills. Experience has afforded the most ample proof that they possess all the fine aromatic and stomachic properties for which the herb has been esteemed; and as they are taken into the stomach unencumbered by any diluting or indigestible substance, in the same degree has their benefit been more immediate and decided. Mild in their operation, and pleasant in their effect, they may be taken at any age, and under any circumstance, without danger or inconvenience; a person exposed to cold and wet a whole day or night could not possibly receive any injury from taking them, but, on the contrary, they would effectually prevent a cold being taken. After a long acquaintance with, and strict observance of, the medicinal properties of NORTON'S CAMOMILE PILLS, it is only doing them justice to say, that they are really the most valuable of all Tonic Medicines. By the word tonic is meant a medicine which gives strength to the stomach sufficient to digest in proper quantities all wholesome food, which increases the power of every nerve and muscle of the human body, or, in other words, invigorates the nervous and muscular systems. The solidity or firmness of the whole tissue of the body which so quickly follows the use of NORTON'S CAMOMILE PILLS, their certain and speedy effects in repairing the partial dilapidations from time or intemperance, and their lasting salutary influence on the whole frame is most convincing, that in the smallest compass is contained the largest quantity of the tonic principle, of so peculiar a nature as to pervade the whole system, through which it diffuses health and strength.

As NORTON'S CAMOMILE PILLS are particularly recommended for all stomach complaints or indigestion, it will probably be expected that some advice should be given respecting diet; though after all that has been written upon the subject, after the publication of volume upon volume, after the country has, as it were, been inundated with practical essays on diet, as a means of prolonging life, it would be unnecessary to say more, did we not feel it our duty to make the humble endeavour of inducing the public to regard them not, but to adopt that course which is dictated by nature, by reason, and by common sense. Those persons who study the wholesomeness, and are governed by the opinions of writers on diet, are uniformly both unhealthy in body and weak in mind. There can be no doubt that the palate is designed to inform us what is proper for the stomach, and of course that must best instruct us what food to take, and what to avoid; we want no other adviser. No'ing can be more clear than that those articles which are agreeable to the taste were by nature intended for our food and sustenance, whether liquid or solid, foreign or of native production; if they are pure and unadulterated, no harm need be dreaded by their use; they will only injure by abuse. Consequently, whatever the palate approves, eat and drink, always in moderation, but never in excess; keeping in mind that the first process of digestion is performed in the mouth, the second in the stomach; and that, in order that the stomach may be able to do its work properly, it is requisite that the first process should be well performed; this consists in masticating or chewing the solid food, so as to break down and separate the fibres and small substances of meat and vegetables, mixing them well, and blending the whole together before they are swallowed; and it is particularly urged upon all to take plenty of time to their meals, and never to eat in haste. If you conform to this short and simple, but comprehensive advice, and find that there are various things which others eat and drink with pleasure, and without inconvenience, and which would be pleasant to yourself, only that they disagree, you may at once conclude that the fault is in the stomach; that it does not possess the power which it ought to do; that it wants assistance, and the sooner that assistance is afforded the better. A very short trial of this medicine will best prove how soon it will put the stomach in a condition to perform with ease all the work which nature intended for it. By its use you will soon be able to enjoy, in moderation, whatever is agreeable to the taste, and unable to name one individual article of food which disagrees with or sits unpleasantly on the stomach. Never forget that a small meal well digested affords more nourishment to the system than a large one, even of the same food, when digested imperfectly. Let the dish be ever so delicious, ever so enticing a variety offered, the bottle ever so enchanting, never forget that temperance tends to preserve health, and that health is the soul of enjoyment. But should an impropriety be at any time committed, by which the stomach becomes overloaded or disordered, render it immediate aid by taking a dose of NORTON'S CAMOMILE PILLS, which will so promptly assist in carrying off the burden thus imposed upon it, that all will soon be right again.

On account of their volatile properties, they must be kept in bottles; and if closely corked, their qualities are neither impaired by time nor injured by any change of climate whatever. Sold by all Medicine Vendors, price 13s. 1d. and 2s. 9d. each, with full directions. The large bottle contains the quantity of three small ones, or Pills equal to fourteen ounces of Camomile Flowers.

* * Be sure to ask for "NORTON'S PILLS," and do not be persuaded to purchase an imitation.

ARRIVAL OF MAILS.

The Feroze, with the mails, left Bombay on April the 3rd, made Aden on the 12th, and arrived at Suez on the 18th ult. The mails were forwarded on to Alexandria, which port they left on the 21st (per Medina), reaching Malta on April 25th, whence they were conveyed (per Triton) to Marseilles, arriving on the 28th ult.

DEPARTURE OF MONTHLY MAILS FROM LONDON TO INDIA.

Viâ Southampton (from London), at 8 o'clock in the morning of the 20th. It is advisable to post letters in London on the previous evening; if that day be Sunday, then on the evening of the 19th; if Monday (of course) before 8 o'clock on that morning.

Postage (payment optional), letters under $\frac{1}{2}$ oz. 1s.

" Newspapers, free.

Viâ Marseilles, on the 7th and 24th; if either of these days be Sunday, then on the 8th or 25th.

Postage (must be paid here), letters, under $\frac{1}{2}$ oz. 1s. 10d.

" " " $\frac{1}{2}$ oz. 2s. 3d.

" Newspapers, 3d. each.

* * * The Marseilles mail of the 24th overtakes the Southampton mail of the 20th, at Malta; they arrive in India together.

Letters and papers for CHINA should be sent by these mails, and must be pre-paid.

(Our publication commenced at 6 o'clock this morning, May 5.)

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

ALTHOUGH this mail is freighted with few incidents of either political or local interest, the intelligence it brings, estimated by its intrinsic importance, is of the highest moment: profound tranquillity throughout our Indian empire; the prospect of a plenteous harvest; general content even in the recently-conquered territory, and a surplus revenue. For objects like these we must submit now and then to the inconvenience, incidental to such a state of things, of barren journals.

The Governor-General had completed his tour, and was on his way from Peshawur to Simla. It is anticipated in all quarters that it will be followed by substantial benefits; that useful reforms and works of public utility will owe their origin to the practical direction of his inquiries into the social condition of the Punjab. The Delhi Gazette observes:—

"It is not too much to expect that the measures about to be adopted will embrace the military defences of the Derajat; an attempt to establish an efficient military police to support the rural and detective police already in existence; the establishment of a regular monthly or periodical steam communication between Kurra- chee and some point on the lower Indus, from which vessels will be sent, as the necessities of the public service require them, up the Indus and Jelum; a survey of the two rivers by an able officer of the Indian Navy; the construction of practicable roads between the principal stations along the Indus; the suppression of smuggling the Kohat salt; the establishment of a central station in the Siude Sagur Doab; and lastly, the development of those articles amongst the mineral products of the Salt Range that are likely to be inquired after as of considerable commercial value."

During his progress up the valley of the Indus, his lordship pitched his camp for a day or two in the vicinity of Kalabagh, where, it is said, he made some effectual arrangements for securing the peace of that district, by giving directions for the organization of a force of mounted police, whose duties will be limited to the suppression of robberies and the inroads of the Wuzzeerees and other plunderers.

The increasing audacity of the marauding tribes in our trans-Indus territory calls for prompt measures. Captain Daly, the commandant of the Fort of Kohat, was shot at by the Afreedees whilst on his way to pay his respects to the Governor-General at Peshawur, and an orderly who was in attendance on him was shot dead by them. On the frontier of Bunnoo, the Wuzzeerees, who had been hovering about for some time, ready to pounce upon any unprotected part of our line, showed themselves in force near the Goo-muttee Pass. Capt. Walsh, commandant at Bunnoo, took the field with three guns, a squadron of the 2nd Punjab Cavalry, under Lieut. Browne, and the 2nd Punjab Infantry, under Lieut. Eckford (in all about 100 horse and not quite 400 infantry); also 200 police, horse and foot, under Lieut. Cox, and proceeded to the pass. The enemy took to the hills on each side of the head of the pass, and remained in groups; the guns opened fire, which had the effect of making them seek the shelter of the rocks: after a few rounds, the force being too small to undertake the pursuit, and penetrate the pass by crowning the heights, it was withdrawn, the movement being masked by three or four companies of the 2nd Punjab Infantry thrown out as skirmishers, to keep the enemy from making a rush on the guns. The Wuzzeerees appeared to dislike coming to close quarters, and merely kept up a fire on the skirmishers, which was returned with interest, the enemy having suffered a much greater loss than on any former occasion. Of the Bunnoo troops, five men were wounded, including a native officer.

Mr. John Lawrence, a member of the Lahore Board of Administration, has been invested by the Governor-General with full power to repress, by the most summary acts of rigour, the outrages committed by the Afreedees, several of whom he has executed. It is proposed to transport summarily to the lower provinces any border tribes-men caught trespassing on our lands. Martial law is to be declared paramount until the depredations and murders now so prevalent are put an end to.

A letter from Peshawur states that military preparations were going on very quietly, and a force had been ordered to be ready to move at a moment's warning towards Kohat. "That there is to be some fighting in that quarter," the writer adds, "there is not a shadow of doubt about. All I have been able to gather is, that Sir Colin Campbell has been ordered to collect 950 mules and 500 camels for carriage of provisions for two months for the force now ordered to the frontier. It is rumoured that the Governor-General has offered the Wuzzeerees a certain ultimatum, and, if they refuse, coercive measures are to be adopted."

The settlement of the Punjab has been most successful. Though more lightly taxed than any other district in India, it already yields a surplus revenue of 325,500*l.*, exclusive of the sums realized for confiscated property, which will be much increased when the extensive canals for irrigation, now in progress, are completed. The employment to native workmen afforded by these works, and by the new stations, has caused a demand for labour in excess of the supply, and thus removed one of the principal sources of danger to which every newly-acquired country in which large establishments have been disbanded is at first exposed. The improvement of the navigation of the Indus is now the great desideratum for the Punjab. The little steam-tugs now on that river are incapable of developing the commercial capabilities of the stream, and it is suggested that river steam-boats of a larger size, and on the American model, which has recently been adopted with so much advantage on the Ganges, should be substituted for those at present in use. It is stated that a depôt is about to be formed at Kurrachee for the reception of military stores from England destined for service in the Punjab.

Golab Singh, it is said, received with undisguised satisfaction the intelligence that Lord Dalhousie had given up the idea of visiting Cashmere, having had nothing to hope and much to fear from the presence of such an observer in the territories subject to his rule. The Maharajah is at variance with his eldest son, Meean Runbeer Singh, who is frank in the expression of his dislike for the paramount power.

It is represented that Dost Mahomed is once more on terms of amity and correspondence with our Government, and that "something is sure to come of it." On the other hand, according to the Lahore Chronicle, Saeed Mahomed Khan, the third own brother of Sultan Mahomed Khan, and a half-brother of the Ameer of Cabul, was in the valley of Jelalabad, at the head of a rabble, some four thousand men strong, bent partly on plunder, and partly on inciting the Khyberees, Afreedees, &c., to more decided acts of hostility against their British neighbours than they had as yet ventured on; and it is added that he has expressed his intention of moving south to Kohat, and thus creating a diversion in that direction.

The Englishman's correspondent at Hyderabad states that nothing had appeared at that capital to confirm the rumour of annexation, but, on the contrary, the bent of opinions inclined to the opposite side. The affairs of that state were in as much disorder as ever. The Nizam having been urged by the British Resident to appoint a responsible Minister, invested Gunesh Rao with the insignia of that post, a man utterly unknown, ill-bred, and almost illiterate; the only reason assigned for his selection by the Nizam being, that his grandfather, seventy years ago, had been Minister to Nizam Ali Khan. On the 26th February, this man was introduced to the Resident by Rasheed-ool-Moolk, the new minister's moonshee; paid his visit in great state, and was received with all the honours paid to his predecessors. When he left, the Resident held some conversation with Rasheed-ool-Moolk, who subsequently was closeted with the Nizam, and Gunesh Rao, the same night, quitted the large mansion prepared for him, leaving behind him all the paraphernalia of State, and retired to his lowly and obscure dwelling, after being "in power" two days! No Minister had been appointed up to the date of the last advices from the capital.

The Commander-in-Chief, after exhausting all the sights of Upper India, and spending several days, at Delhi and Meerut, in reviews and balls, had started for the hills.

The incidents at the presidencies are few and unimportant. At Calcutta, the affairs of the unfortunate Union Bank had come again before the Supreme Court, on an application from Messrs. Glyn, Hallifax, and Co. to test the validity of the registration memorial of 1847, which was sworn to otherwise than in literal accordance with the act of incorporation. The railway was to be commenced immediately after the rains. That of Bombay was making rapid progress.

CASUALTIES BY DEATH IN THE ARMIES OF INDIA REPORTED SINCE OUR LAST PUBLICATION.

BENGAL.

THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL BEYOND THE INDUS.

The Governor-General reached Peshawur on the 8th of March, the troops being drawn up in line, on the race-course, to receive his lordship. In the afternoon of the same day, a levee was held for the reception of all officers. On the 10th, the Marquess rode out some distance from cantonments, and in the evening entertained a considerable portion of the station at dinner. On the 11th, his lordship meant to have ridden out towards Jumrood, but heavy rain put a stop to his intention for the time. It continued to pour occasionally from that day till the 15th. A second dinner party was postponed in consequence, and the attendance at the ball of the Marchioness, on the 13th, was for the same reason very scanty. The officers of H.M. 98th Foot excused themselves in consequence of the dangerous state of Captain Grantham. On the 12th, the Medical officers of Peshawur were summoned to attend a meeting, at which it was proposed to take into consideration the effects of irrigation on the health of the troops. The assembled conclave were further called upon to suggest such measures as might seem to them best calculated to prevent a recurrence of the great sickness of the last hot season.

The men of H.M.'s 61st and 98th foot performed, on the 14th, the Golden Farmer and the Irish Dragoon. The Marquess and Marchioness of Dalhousie were both present, and "occupied a large kind of throne, decorated with flowers."

On the 15th, the Marquess held a durbar, at which all the petty chiefs in the vicinity were present. "Amongst them," says the Mofussilite, "it was discovered that there was one man, 'a wolf in sheep's clothing,' i.e. covertly an enemy to the British Government, and a friend of our neighbour Dost Mahomed. This gentleman was very coolly walked out of the durbar by Mr. John Lawrence."

On the following day, the Governor-General proceeded to the fort of Jumrood, distant 24 miles, escorted by his body guard and the principal civil and military authorities. He rode back again to attend a ball given on the 16th by the Artillery. It seems that most summary measures are being adopted towards the Afreedies. Mr. John Lawrence is invested with full authority, as a single member of the Board, to pass sentence on them, and hangings take place almost daily.

"The Marquess of Dalhousie is realizing, during his present tour, the most sanguine expectations with respect to the pacification and improvement of our extreme north-western frontier. As a preliminary measure towards acquiring a just appreciation of the character of the country, of the depth and breadth, as well as of the peculiarities, of the rivers which intersect the plains of the Punjab — of ascertaining the mineral wealth of its mountain ranges, and the agricultural resources of its inhabitants, Lord Dalhousie despatched well-qualified officers some time prior to his visit, giving them instructions to make the most searching inquiries into all the matters specified above. Dr. Fleming and Mr. Purdon were deputed to examine the salt-range; and the latter gentleman has also prepared a report on the levels and other engineering characteristics of the surrounding country; whilst Dr. Fleming's task has been to collect all the information that was attainable respecting the mineral contents of that stupendous range, which are known to be abundant and valuable. Lieut. Grounds, of the Indian navy, took charge of the river department; and by the time the Governor-General reached Kalabagh, where the Indus pierces the salt-range, these gentlemen had obtained a tolerably accurate idea of the resources and peculiarities of the country, and had prepared provisional reports for Lord Dalhousie's guidance. His tent was pitched at Maree, on the cis-Indus side. It was at this spot that the various forerunners of the Governor-General presented the results of their labours, forming a very striking scene, and a most remarkable contrast to that which was presented in the same neighbourhood last year, when Sir Charles Napier carried fire and sword into the villages of the hill tribes, but signally failed in producing the slightest effect upon them.

"The establishment of a mounted police and of a series of fortified stations at intervals through the lower pass from Kalabagh to Kohat, was, we are given to understand, one of the chief topics of discussion; we find that it is contemplated to carry out the project much upon the same principle that the Irish mounted constabulary are organized, that is to say, police officers with military accoutrements and partial military discipline. The accumulation of stores and ammunition at one of the stations on the Indus below or next to Kalabagh will, it is supposed, constitute another of the measures consequent upon his lordship's personal investigations on the spot. Whether the difficulties of the navigation can be surmounted so as to give steamers from below a clear run up to Attock, we have not been informed; but we presume if there are no such whirlpools, cataracts or natural obstacles as exist on the Nerbudda, the engineering skill of Mr. Purdon will enable him to devise measures for removing the ledges of rock across the river which form natural waterfalls, and which, save in heavy floods, cause serious impediments to the steamers engaged in the navigation of the Upper Indus."

NIZAMUT ADAWLUT, 8TH FEBRUARY.

Government v. Meer Jalalooddeen.—Charge.—1st. Writing a placard with a view to seduce the sepoy of the 30th reg. Madras N.I. from their allegiance, and to excite them to mutiny and murder. 2nd. Attaching the above placard to a tree in the immediate neighbourhood of the lines of the 30th reg. Madras N.I., in order that it should be noticed and read by the sepoy of the regiment. Offence perpetrated on the 1st of October, 1850; committed for trial by R. B. Garrett, Esq., magistrate. Trial held before W. S. Gilmore, Esq., sessions judge of Cuttack.

The particulars of this case are as follows:—At daybreak of the morning of the 1st of October, when the sepoy of the 30th reg. Madras N.I. were assembling on the parade-ground, the placard, of which the following is a translation, was discovered attached to a tree in the immediate neighbourhood of the bells of arms and lines of the D company of the regiment:—

"Whoever sees this } Petitions for } This paper should paper should first } the bat- } be read at musread it. } talion. } ter.

"O men of the regiment, namely, enemy-slaving sepoys, nalgues, extirpators of the enemy, brave havildars, powerful jemadars, just subadars, and intelligent boys, be it known to you, that the sway of the Kafirs has increased to that extent, that all men, from Mussulmans to Hindus, obey and serve them. They keep the regiment so much under their authority, that, even in the middle of the night, all must be present at their call; at drill, the sepoys must walk like sticks, and, in the event of their moving, they are sent to knapsack-drill. If they commit the slightest fault,—for instance, quarrelling with a shopman in the bazar, although it may be the fault of the shopman,—they are either confined to the solitary cell, or to the barrack-guard; in fact, they are such wretched creatures, they remain quiet, like helpless bulls and other animals. Look when one of the Bengal regiments was here, what fear and trepidation there was! the awe of the inhabitants of Cuttack was so great, that the English also used to tremble, and the men of the regiment to roam at pleasure, and did not even consent to shave their beards. Some of you are also low and mean, that you work all day, and, immediately on night arriving, you go to liquor-shops, or houses where bang is sold, or to the houses of bad women, and there fight with slippers; and it is on this account that the English have made Mussulmans slaves. Curses on those Mussulmans, who, having lost all regard for the names of their fathers, and having forsaken their religion, have become degraded! Oh, friends! if in future any man does improper things, I will publish his name clearly. Oh, brothers! reflect that such actors as related above are not worthy of man; if there is any man among you who is fearless of his life, let him do some brave action by which his name shall be known to the whole regiment, and the English tremble in future; that is to say, in your regiment there is a dreadful Kafir, whom everybody curses; he takes away one man's bread and gives it to another; seduces the men's wives, and gives naigueships and havildarships to them, and also takes bribes and promotes them; for instance, he unjustly took away the lance-naigueship of Subadar Syed Modeen's son-in-law, Shaik Shaw Ally, and gave it to another, and exactly in the same way he took off the stripes of Shaik Oomer, of the 4th company, and gave them to another, and has promoted a great many juniors above their seniors. He has also, for bribes, taken away the employment of the Telooogoo schoolmaster, of the Mussulman moonshee, and of sepoy Mahommed Ameer, son of the wandering moonshee, and given it to others. There is now no justice to be had at the hands of the English. You, men, no doubt think that this is all the major's doings; no, no,—it is all the artifice of Adjutant Smith. If any man is willing to sacrifice his life, well just let him shoot this adjutant, or stick him with his bayonet, that thus every one may escape his tyranny, and bless the slayer for his deed. But the slayer must not then die, like that cowardly Hindu, who killed his wife and then himself, but who would have acquired a name if he had killed the adjutant instead. I do not think that by killing the Kafir a man will suffer unlawful death, because killing a tyrant is like freeing the poor from misery; although our fathers are in the regiment, yet God grant that they may soon be freed from that cursed one's tyranny; jemadar adjutant, be you in safety. You must show this paper to the major, and if he has a proper idea of justice, and is of noble birth, he will send this paper to the Governor of Madras, and intimate to him that the men of the regiment thus curse Adjutant Smith; but if the major is a mean fellow, he will conceal this paper here. Although the adjutant has never ill-treated me, yet it is not right that he should annoy people generally."

On the discovery of the placard being communicated to the officer commanding the regiment, and its being also reported to him that the prisoner, Meer Jalaloddeen, son of Meer Roza Hossein, the late regimental moonshee, who had been recently dismissed from his office, had been seen near the tree to which the placard was attached, about the time when the second bugle was sounded; and the adjutant of the regiment, Lieut. Smith, having stated that he believed the placard to be in the handwriting of the said moonshee, the prisoner and his father were arrested, and the books and papers found in their house were taken before a Court of Inquiry, assembled at the house of Capt. Findlay, where they were examined, and inside one of the books was found a piece of paper, which corresponded exactly and is piece of the same sheet of paper as that on which the placard is written. A packet containing English writing-paper, of the same description as that on which the placard is written, was also found among the papers taken from the prisoner's house; and, in addition to the above, some coarse brown paper or pasteboard, similar to that on which the placard is pasted, was found in the house of a person with whom the prisoner carried on some joint speculations; and these facts, and the similarity of the handwriting of the placard with the handwriting of the prisoner, Meer Jalaloddeen, which was deposited to by a witness, had been further corroborated by papers acknowledged by the prisoner to have been written by him, comprised the evidence against him.

The prisoner pleaded Not Guilty, and stated that the case had been got up against him in consequence of a dispute existing between his father, himself, and Sheik Ahmed and Mahomed Abdool Kadur, the witness above alluded to, about certain questions relating to the Mahomedan faith, and named several witnesses to establish the fact.

The Sessions Judge decided that the facts proved and the handwriting raised a violent presumption of guilt, and sentenced the prisoner to seven years' imprisonment, with labour in irons.

Minute by J. R. Colvin, Esq., Judge.—This is a conviction under Act XIV. of 1829, of an endeavour to stir up sepoys to commit mutinous practices by inflammatory exhortations and incitements contained in an anonymous placard. It appears to me very doubtful whether such a mode of incitement, not carrying with it any personal influence or endeavour by solicitation or encouragement, is within the meaning of the Act. Were it even, however, to be decided to be within the scope of the Act, the proof must be complete, that the party charged affixed the placard, or caused it to be affixed, for the purpose of being seen by, and inciting the sepoys, either having written it himself, or with a full knowledge of its criminal contents and purport. The offence must lie, not in the mere writing or preparation of the placard, but in these coupled with the giving of publicity to it, so that it might excite the minds of the sepoys. The evidence wholly fails to satisfy me that the prisoner was a party to the attaching of the placard to the tree on which it was found. It is stated by the witnesses only that the placard was seen on the tree very soon after the first bugle sounded on the morning of the 1st of October last, and that the prisoner was seen near the tree shortly after the second bugle, or nearly half an hour afterwards; this is obviously no proof that the placard was affixed by, "or by the directions of, the prisoner." On the contrary, it is certainly improbable that the prisoner, whose house was at a considerable distance, should, had he had any part in the criminal design, have committed himself by remaining close to the tree for so long a time after the placard had been fixed up. There is, therefore, no evidence which can establish against the prisoner what, under any construction of the Act, is of the essence of the offence, namely, the publishing of the mutinous paper.

Besides this, the evidence as to the handwriting is not satisfactory; and it is clear, from the statements of the witnesses as to the manner of search of the house in which the prisoner lived with his father, and especially from the statements of Lieut. Smith, that no such strict precautions were employed as would have thoroughly excluded the introduction of small articles, such as the piece of paper, on which much stress is laid, as the ground of conviction recorded by the Court below.

For these reasons, I am of opinion that the guilt of the prisoner has not been established, and direct his release.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE BENGAL BANK.—The election of a secretary for the Bengal Bank, March 13th, terminated in favour of Mr. William Grey, of the civil service. It is understood, that the six elective commercial directors gave him their unanimous suffrage, and that not a single vote was offered for any of the other thirteen candidates. The post has thus been restored to the service after having been dissevered from it for eleven years.

THE UNION BANK IN LIQUIDATION.—From the explanations which have been given through the medium of some of the journals in Calcutta, it appears, that the unfortunate shareholders of the Union Bank are not to be called on for any other contributions to meet the liabilities of the bank beyond the amount at which they were assessed.

ARTICLES SENT TO THE EXHIBITION.—The Lahore Chronicle has published a final account of the value of the articles contributed by the northern Rajahs to the great Exhibition. The amount is not nearly so great as was at first reported. Golab Singh contributes articles to the value of Rs. 16,000, and the Rajahs of Pateala, Nuba, Jheend, and Wuzer Singh, the Ranees Sookhan, the Nawab of Mulhair Kotela, and the Nawab of Mundote, have contributed about Rs. 9,000 more. The Lahore committee have also spent about Rs. 15,600, so that the total value of the Punjab specimens is Rs. 42,000.

A list of contributions sent from Bengal contains an enumeration of 2,699 articles. The central committee have ransacked every corner of Bengal, not only to obtain that which is "rich and rare," but also that which is mean and poor, when illustrative of the skill, habits, or social condition of the inhabitants. From the Delhi gem engravers and the Cuttack jewellers, to the poor "chicken-walla," and the poorer shoe-maker, every trade carried on in these vast provinces, is fitly represented; while every production, from emeralds and sapphires down to oil seeds and the innumerable varieties of rice, all find an appropriate place.

ANOTHER DEFICIENCY has been discovered in the cash of an institution which has been peculiarly unlucky in the management of its funds. The amount is stated to be between five and six thousand rupees. It may perhaps not cause a loss to the institution, since we hear that it is in contemplation to charge with the deficiency certain parties who are connected with the management, though they are not suspected of any greater offence than want of sufficient vigilance. We hear that it has already led to the resignation of one of its managers—Englishman, March 22.

LEAVE TO THE HILLS.—We understand that the Commander-in-Chief is disposed to follow out the policy first adopted by his immediate predecessor, in the matter of "leave to the hills." The presence of an officer with each company will, it is thought, be insisted upon, and if so, it follows of course that but few applications will be attended to.—Delhi Gaz., March 25.

MINERAL RESOURCES OF THE PUNJAB.—We have seen a private letter from the Punjab, referring to the geology of that country, in which the writer speaks of the various notices which have appeared, as a needless puffing up of the mineral resources of the Punjab. Coals have been said to be where there are no coals, copper where there is no copper, &c., in fact, an El Dorado in the barrenest hills ever seen. "Only think," says the writer, "a large heap of belemnites (a fossil shell resembling a slate pencil) actually collected on a ghât for coal."—Englishman. The mistakes the Englishman's correspondent refers to must have been committed by amateurs or beginners. There is an abundance of men of the highest scientific attainments at present engaged in these inquiries on the Indus, and by none of them, we will be bound, were any of the blunders here referred to committed. We had occasion the other day to refer to the minerals around Kalabagh, as matters of scientific interest to the accomplished men in the suite of the Governor-General; and this statement appears to have been perverted into a specific affirmation as to the mineral wealth of the Punjab.—Bombay Times.

THE PENINSULAR AND ORIENTAL COMPANY starts an extra steamer from Calcutta to Suez next month, for the accommodation of parties proceeding home to the Exhibition. The same company has also advertised its intention to commence the long-desired direct communication betwixt this port and China in May next.—Hurkaru, Mar. 24.

CAPT. FARRE.—A letter from Nainee Tal thus announces the death of Capt. Farre, of the 72d, N.I.:—"A gloom has been cast amongst us by the death this morning of poor Capt. Farre, of the 72d Regt. N.I. Poor fellow! he had been for many years adjutant of his regiment, and by his gallant bearing in the field, and his courteous and kind conduct to all who came in contact with him in barracks, had gained the love of his brother-officers and the esteem of his men. One of the latter, having obtained a few days' leave, came in from Bareilly to this place, to see his officer, who, alas! was too ill to see him."—Agra Messenger, March 22.

ENLISTMENT OF SIKHS.—A circular issued from the Adjutant-General's office, addressed to commanders of divisions, regarding the enlistment and treatment of Sikh recruits, directs as follows:—"1st. No Sikh is to be required to cut either his beard or the hair of his head, and all who enter the service with the kis, are to be required to continue to wear the hair after that fashion. 2nd. Not more than 200 Punjabees are to be introduced into a regiment, and not more than 100 of them are to be Sikhs. 3rd. The Sikhs are on no account to be formed into a distinct company, but are to be interspersed, in equal proportions, throughout the several companies of corps. 4th. Every countenance and encouragement is to be given to their comparative freedom from the bigoted prejudices of caste, every means adopted to preserve intact the distinctive characteristics of their race, their peculiar conventional and social customs; and commanding officers must exercise strict unceasing watchfulness, and the firm intervention of their power, to prevent all bullying and browbeating of the Sikhs by the other classes of the regiment, and to crush all schemes and attempts to persuade the Sikh to abandon the social peculiarities of his class for the tenets and customs of strict Hindooism. 5th. The Pahol, or religious pledge of Sikh fraternity, is on no account to be interfered with. 6th. During the early part of their instruction, the Sikhs are to be drilled in distinct squads, and the greatest care and circumspection is to be exercised in the selection of instructors as regards equanimity of temper and superior intelligence, and they are to be strictly warned and cautioned against the use of abusive or taunting language, the cane, or of any violent or rough treatment whatsoever."

THE NORTH-WEST BANK.—It has transpired that the Commander-in-Chief has forwarded the papers connected with the recent inquiry at Meerut, for the decision of the Governor-General; but though Sir W. Gomm avoids the responsibility of pronouncing what might be a final opinion upon the merits, he has not hesitated to speak out his mind upon the case as it stands. He has addressed a letter to Capts. Blois and Watt, exculpating them from the imputation of "fraudulent motives," but saying that their laxity in monetary dealings was most unpardonable. By a mistake, this epistle, which was intended for the exclusive delectation of the parties addressed, has been sent as a circular from the D. A. G.'s office, and, almost as a matter of course, went through several hands, to the sore discomfort of the former. Capt. Watt has been advised by the Commander-in-Chief to pay back the sum received from Capt. Barlow, a recommendation which will not, we opine, be rejected this time.—Delhi Gaz.

The insidious notice in the Delhi, of the decision of the Commander-in-Chief on the cases of Captains Watt and Blois, is designedly calculated to misrepresent the truth, and to mislead the public into an impression that the result of the court of inquiry was not favourable to these officers. We have reason to know that, in the document in question, it is distinctly stated that it was a source of satisfaction to Sir W. Gomm to find Capt. Blois's character cleared by the late inquiry from all imputation of having partaken in the fraudulent proceedings of the late secretary; but H. E. conceives that there was an incantation on Capt. B.'s part, and an inattention to the due discharge of the duties which he had taken upon himself to perform as a director of the bank, and as auditor of accounts. He is accordingly recommended to be more cautious and circumspect for the future. The Commander-in-Chief, however, adds that the confidence replaced in Capt. Blois by the directors of the bank, since the inquiry was instituted, affords the best proof of the estimation in which Capt. Blois is held by them. In Capt. Watt's case we have also good grounds to believe that the Commander-in-Chief has expressed much satisfaction in finding by the same inquiry that the acts of dishonesty imputed to Capt. Watt have in like manner proved unfounded; but, under existing circumstances, his Exc. suggests to that officer to cancel the transaction in question, as the best proof that he can give of his having been actuated by an honourable and proper feeling in the matter.—Lahore Chron.

Mr. Joseph Smith has been charged with the investigation of the accounts of the North-West Bank. He is to have Rs. 5,000 for his labour, and his travelling expenses are also to be paid.

THE ENGINEERS AND SAPPERS.—The Delhi Gazette has heard, on good authority, that the order for increasing the corps of engineers has reached the Governor-General, and that the sappers are to be remodelled upon the old system, consisting of ten companies, each company commanded by an engineer officer.

CAPT. GRANTHAM.—The wounds received by Capt. Grantham, 98th foot, from the Affreedie marauders, proved fatal on the 15th March.

ESCAPE OF PRISONERS.—A very bold, daring, and partially successful attempt to escape was made by some prisoners at Dehra Ghazee Khan, on the night of the 2nd inst. It appears that, about midnight, the sentry observed the light in the room where the prisoners under trial were confined, suddenly extinguished; on going to inquire the reason, a rush was made at the door, and the prisoners burst out, ran about a hundred yards to the wall of the inclosure, and threw themselves over it. The sentry, who had roused the guard, fired on the fugitives, who were not expected to get over the wall, as the drop on the outside is at least twenty-five feet; however, the native officer with a guard went round outside the jail, and warned the prisoners that he would fire on them if they continued their flight: this caution was replied to by a volley of stones and shouts, which induced the native officer to give the order to fire; the result was, that fifteen men were killed and one wounded. Some of them were re-captured, but twenty-six effected their escape. Capt. Jacob, commanding the Punjab Cavalry Regiment, at the requisition of the civil authority, sent parties of horse in every direction. The guard from Capt. Gastrell's regiment turned out, and every possible means were adopted to arrest the flight of the prisoners. Amongst the killed, four were on trial for murder, and the rest for crimes of comparatively small importance. Of those who escaped, four were accused of murder, and the remainder were cases of cattle-stealing, petty theft, &c.—Delhi Gazette, Mar. 25.

MILITARY ON-DITS.—Col. Markham is to command the brigade at Peshawur; Brigadier Sir C. Campbell, K.C.B., will command at Lahore, and Umballa will fall to Gen. Battine, C.B. Col. Brooke, who lately passed through Delhi to join, will command H.M.'s 32nd foot. There is some probability of Sir Colin Campbell remaining at Lahore, in which case General Battine will go to Umballa. The foot artillery return to Anarkullee, and the horse artillery remain at Meean Meer. Capt. W. L. Scott, of the 1st L.C., has sent in his papers to resign the service; by which arrangement Capt. Irving obtains his captaincy, and Cornet Forbes his lieutenantcy. Capt. Wilcox, of the 4th N.I., will retire in May. Col. Roberts, on his way out to India, being the senior officer for a brigade, will get the first vacancy; which, in all probability, will be Delhi. Capt. Meares, of the 42nd N.I., goes to England on leave. It is said that the general commanding the Meerut division has applied for another native regiment, the present force being insufficient to perform the station duties. The 46th regiment, at present with the head-quarters of the Commander-in-Chief, is mentioned as the regiment likely to go, and it is not improbable that on the head-quarters camp reaching Kalka, the 46th will return to Meerut. Lieut. Col. Dick, at present commanding 54th N.I., has applied for permission to proceed to England on medical certificate.

NEW SANITARIUM.—A committee, consisting of Mr. Montgomery, Major Burn, and Dr. Hathaway, has been appointed to visit Chumba Range and report on its fitness as a sanitarium. The range is 8,000 feet above the level of the sea, and within two days' dāk of Lahore.

THE CHILLIANWALLAH MONUMENT.—We have been favoured with certain correspondence on the subject of the Chillianwallah monument. It appears that the funds in hand are inadequate to the work, and Lieut. Maxwell finds himself tied down in a measure from making the best use of present circumstances. There is no responsible authority to sanction a departure from the original scheme, and a meeting called at Wuzerabad on the last anniversary of the battle was attended by two persons only. In this dilemma, an effort is necessary to raise additional subscriptions, and the Governor-General has expressed his willingness to give a sum out of his private purse. His lordship declines to lend any aid on the part of Government, thinking that "so expensive and conspicuous a monument," if erected at all, "would be more appropriate for Goojrat than Chillianwallah."—Delhi Gazette.

CAPT. G. A. TYTLER, Assist. Commissioner Trans-Sutlej States, died at Jullunder on the 8th March. He was formerly in the 53rd Foot, and quitted H.M.'s service on obtaining civil employment under the Board of Administration. For this he was peculiarly qualified as an excellent linguist, a man of severe application and devotion to his work. He had recently been suffering much from disease, and was on his way to Simla on sick leave at the time of his death.

JOTER PERSHAUD'S TRIAL still holds for the 27th March. Mr. Wyly, C.S., had come over from Bareilly, to conduct the case on the part of the Government.

CIVIL CHANGES.—The Hurkaru is informed that Mr. Bidwell will officiate temporarily for Mr. Plowden, as senior secretary to the Board of Revenue, and Mr. Samuells, as junior secretary, vice Bidwell. Mr. A. Young is reported as likely to become deputy secretary in the home department, vice Grey, and Mr. Devereux, collector of Abkaree, vice Young.

THE UNION BANK.—The Supreme Court yesterday, in the suit of Glyn and Co. against the Union Bank, granted a rule to shew cause why writs of Scire facias should not issue against certain shareholders of the Bank, mentioned only in the memorial of 1846. This will raise the question, whether the memorial of 1847 was duly verified and enrolled under the Act. The objection taken to the latter memorial is, that it was sworn to before Mr. Holroyd, acting as a sort of deputy or attorney for Mr. W. P. Grant, in September, 1847, during the absence of the latter in Ceylon, and signing Mr. Grant's name, under a general order of the court. The Act expresses that the memorials are to be verified before "the Master in Equity," and contains no alternative words.—Hurkaru, March 19.

THE AGRA BANK.—An address to the shareholders of the Agra and U. S. Bank, accompanied by a letter to Mr. C. S. Stowell, both from Mr. F. R. Neilson, the secretary, in refutation of the statements contained in Mr. Stowell's letter published in the Mofussilite, appear in the Delhi Gazette of the 15th March. The great length of these documents (which would occupy eight or nine columns of this journal), renders it impossible for us to republish them. In reply to Mr. Stowell's charge, that a reporter was not admitted to the meeting, Mr. Neilson says, that the directors could not sanction his admission, because the deed provides only for a "meeting of shareholders," and that a gentleman connected with the press, who was a shareholder, was present and reported the proceedings. In answer to Mr. Stowell's allegation, that, at the meeting, "although well supported by the unbiassed resident shareholders," he was, "as usual, in a minority," Mr. Neilson observes, "There were sixteen shareholders present, five of whom were directors, and two who may be supposed to be under their influence, but the remaining nine, the majority, were as free and as 'unbiassed' in every respect as himself; how then, if he was 'well-supported,' was that majority against him?" Mr. Stowell's assertion, that "the directors re-elected themselves," Mr. Neilson emphatically denies. The mover, the seconder, and the supporters of the resolution, were all "unbiassed shareholders." The letter to Mr. Stowell enters into very minute details of accounts, from which we extract the following passage:—"The great error that pervades your letter of the 28th ult. and which, when stated, is of itself a sufficient reply to the whole, is that you have mixed together and confused three matters entirely distinct. 1. The amount noticed by the auditors of the 13th August, 1849, as outstanding on the security of the bank's stock to the extent of 59 (or 106) shares. 2. The transactions on which 459 shares were cancelled; and, thirdly, the buying of 367 shares. These three batches of shares, with a single slight exception, have no connexion whatever with each other. They belonged to different parties, and had relation to different accounts. No wonder, then, that you cannot explain how cancellation of 459 shares could arise out of 106, for except 19, the 106 are uncanceled to this day. You assume that the 367 shares bought in are those alluded to in resolution 5 of 13th August, 1849, whereas that resolution had no reference at all to those 367 shares. It appears to the directors that you have been led into much misapprehension, by not clearly distinguishing between a direct and a general loan on stock. A proper understanding of this will at once explain the difference between the auditor's statement, referred to by you, of 106 shares, and the secretary's of 95 shares, being held as security for the same balances; and it will also show on what grounds the 459 shares were cancelled." Mr. Neilson gives a full explanation upon the subject of the Reserve Fund.

ROADS.—The Governor-General was, we learn, much pleased with the new line of road, traced by Lieut. Hart, from Rawul Pindee to Kalabagh, a distance of 113 miles, and which, in the face of numerous difficulties, has been opened for the past three months, with the exception of the last few miles into Kalabagh, or, more properly speaking, Maree, which is to be the terminus on this side the Indus. Indeed so much satisfaction has the line afforded to the Marquis of Dalhousie, and so deeply is he imbued with a sense of its importance, in a military and commercial point of view, that he has determined on sanctioning a second line, from Maree to Atok, along the left bank of the Indus, which is to be commenced upon immediately.—Lahore Chron.

BHURTPORE.—Great alterations and improvements are being made in and about the town of Bhurtpore; the principal street, leading from the Agra gate to the Koombheer gate, is being made of uniform width, and the new fronts of the houses set off with facings of stone, carved and ornamented to the utmost of the mason's skill. This street, and the roads for some distance outside of the two gates, are metalled. Shrubs and weeds have been suffered to spring up in the ditch, and from the scarp of the town wall; whilst the works which covered the gates have been cut through to open the new roads, and as defences demolished. The belt of forest, celebrated in sporting history, which formerly encircled Bhurtpore, is fast disappearing: the ruling powers of the territory having discovered, no doubt, that it is more profitable to the state and advantageous to the people to have the town surrounded by rich fields of grain, instead of an uncultivated jungle, occupied alone by deer, wild hog, &c. One portion of the forest, to the south-east of the town, has been left as a preserve for the recreation of the rajah, when he unbends from the cares of state, and of European gentlemen who may obtain permission to follow the chase in that direction.—Delhi Gaz.

RAWUL PINDEE.—A letter, dated the 17th March, informs us that Brigadier Hodgson arrived at Kohat on the 12th, and inspected the force there. "Two horses of Captain Pollock's Mooltanee force having been stolen by some of the numerous thieves in the neighbourhood, the Commandant told a Sayud that if he would recover the lost property, he would be rewarded with the sum of Rs. 15. The temptation, strange to say, proved sufficiently great, and the Sayud started off on his mission, tracked the robbers to their mountain retreat, secured the horses while the robbers were asleep, brought them back over the mountain again, and reached the plains as he supposed all safe. Unfortunately, however, he was observed just as day was dawning, for, as he emerged from the gorge, he was fired at from the hill above him, and the ball taking effect in his shoulder, he fell off his horse, and was, as a matter of course, cut to pieces, the horses galloping back to their original possessors at Kohat, who were at a loss to account for their sudden and unexpected appearance. The above may be taken as a sample of the reckless way in which these people hazard their lives for a trifle. Perhaps the deceased expected his enemies to spare him, as it is believed in that part of the country, that the slaughter of a Sayud is an unpardonable offence, and likely to be visited upon the perpetrators with vengeance in after-life. The 1st Punjab Cavalry are to march in a few days for Luckee, about thirty miles south-west of Bunnoo. A troop of cavalry is considered sufficient for Kohat, while there may be work for the remainder on the borders of the Wuzereer country, where the late disturbances took place, and where probably more skirmishing is expected."

ARCHAEOLOGICAL SOCIETY OF DELHI.—At a meeting of this society, Delhi, present Sir Theophilus Metcalfe, Bart., chairman; Brigadier T. Palmer, vice-chairman; Captain R. Robertson, Palace Guards; and J. O. B. Saunders, it was resolved—1st. To adopt immediate steps for the publication of No. 2 of the Journal. 2nd. Adverting to the peculiar facilities existing at Delhi for the publication of Oriental texts of rare MSS., both in respect to the existence of large and valuable private libraries of Persian and Arabic authors, as well as to the number of well-educated native gentlemen fully competent to undertake the editing of any work selected; that the society devote a certain portion of each number of its Journal to the publication of Oriental texts of peculiar interest or rarity, increasing or diminishing the number of pages so to be devoted, according to the amount of space required, or the original contributions available at the moment. The adoption of this plan offers the additional advantage of enabling the committee of papers to exercise a more critical discretion in the acceptance of English articles, which an implied engagement to fill a given number of pages with original matter would considerably circumscribe. 3rd. That in order more fully to take advantage of the position held by the society in this part of India, as well as in the hope of introducing a taste among the native community, for the study of historical subjects, it is proposed to invite native gentlemen to become contributors to the objects of our institution, not in the shape of any money donation, but in the communication of such information as their local, linguistic, or other knowledge may enable them to supply with greater readiness and accuracy than our Western Orientalists usually arrive at. That in order to hold out such inducement as may be at the command of the society to further this end, it is determined to confer the title of "Honorary Member" upon such contributors of this class as may in any way distinguish themselves or contribute papers or information accepted by the society.

EXTENT OF LAHORE.—Baron Hügel speaks of Lahore as extending "miles" in a direct line; subsequent writers have followed his assurance, and many persons, who have been for many years residing here, are under the impression that the circumference is between five and six miles. An accurate measurement has been recently made, from which it appears that the circumference of the walls of the town, within the rownea, is three miles and eighty-two yards. So much for the accuracy of travellers, who allow their imagination to guide their pens.—Lahore Chron.

FALSE CLAIMS FOR DEBT.—The new system of punishing debt, by withholding leave from officers who have been summoned to Courts of Request, has been adopted in several instances which have come to our knowledge. No reasonable man will object to measures that have a real tendency to check extravagance; but if debt in the military service is to curtail disabilities of a very unpleasant kind, and men are to pay both in purse and in person, let the authorities, by all means, do their best to suppress the common practice indulged in by the natives, of bringing forward false claims. There is no penalty with which Courts of Request can visit the institution of fraudulent suits, and in many stations there are said to be persons who make a livelihood by entering claims for small sums against gentlemen who have never had any dealings with them. They take their chance of the defendants choosing not to appear, or being unavoidably absent; in which cases an ex-parte decision is given in their favour. If the party summoned attends, they prudently abscond, or at once accept a nonsuit.—Delhi Gaz.

REGIMENTAL MESSES.—A circular from the Adjutant-general's office is to the following effect:—"Several representations having been submitted to the Commander-in-Chief, relative to the injurious consequences of its being left optional with the officers of regiments to assist or not, as they may think fit, individually, in maintaining messes in their corps, and his Excellency, being desirous of having a question of so much importance to the respectability, welfare, and comfort of the European officers, and the interests of the service, decided by the Government and the Hon. the Court of Directors on the fullest information procurable, in view either to make the support of messes compulsory on all, whether present or absent, or that they shall be wholly discontinued, has directed me to request you will have the goodness to call upon every officer commanding a regiment under your orders, to favour me with his opinion, in duplicate, on this important subject, for the consideration of Sir William Gomm."

LEGISLATIVE ACTS.—The draft of a proposed Act, read in Council for the first time on the 21st of February, entitled "An Act for securing the Land Revenue at Madras," premising that it is expedient that the land revenue accruing due to the East-India Company within the limits of the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Judicature at Madras, be ascertained and collected in a summary manner, as in other parts of the territories under the government of the East-India Company, enacts that all assessable land, not the property of the East-India Company, within the town of Madras, and within so much of the surrounding country as is situated within the limits of the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Judicature, of which the rate of assessment is not known, or which has not heretofore been assessed, shall be assessed at the rates which are now in force for similar lands. Another draft of a proposed Act, read in Council for the first time on the 7th March, entitled, "An Act for the prevention of Gambling in Bombay," premising that the vice of gambling has of late years much increased, and many gaming-houses have been established within the town and island of Bombay, for suppression of which the laws now in force are inadequate, enacts that every person who shall keep a common gaming-house, or any room or other place used for the purposes of a common gaming-house, or who shall have the care or management thereof, or shall in any manner conduct the business of any such common gaming-house either as banker, shroff, croupier, or otherwise, shall, on conviction before the court of petty sessions, be punishable by fine not exceeding Rs.1,000, or, in the discretion of the said Court, may be imprisoned, with or without hard labour, for any period not exceeding six calendar months; and that every person who shall be found in any such common gaming-house playing or gaming with cards, dice, counters, money, or other instruments of gaming, or who shall be found there present during such playing or gaming, or for the purpose of gaming, or who shall be found gaming with cards, dice, counters, money, or other instruments of gaming in any public street or thoroughfare within the said town and island, whether playing for any money, wager, stake, or otherwise, shall be punishable, on conviction before the court petty sessions, by fine not exceeding Rs. 500; or in the discretion of the said court, may be imprisoned, with or without hard labour, for any period not exceeding three calendar months.

SOME STATE PRISONERS (the Ex-rajah of Cachar and four princes) are now en route to Dacca, escorted by a portion of the Sylhet detachment; but their final destination has not transpired.—Delhi Gaz.

THE NAWAB OF BAHAWULPOOR has been at Feerozpoor, on his way to the Mahometan shrines of Delhi and Ajmeer. He had already visited that of Shaikh Furreed-ood-deen Skukurgunge, at Pak Patun, and is reported to have started with fifty-seven lacs of rupees, which it is his intention to spend in the course of his present pilgrimage. His Highness, some time ago, applied to the British Government, to know whether he would be permitted to nominate his third son his heir? He was informed he must do as he pleased, and has sown the germ of future dissension in his family by following the bent of his own inclinations. His pilgrimage will last between three and four months.

At the monthly meeting of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, held on the 5th March, the following interesting communication was read, from Mr. T. B. Mactier, of West Burdwan:—"While conversing with the natives concerning their idea of the origin of aërolites, one mentioned that, many years ago, he had seen in the middle of the jungle, some 100 coses to the S.W. of this, the remains of what he called 'an enchanted city, the inhabitants of which had all been turned into stone.' He describes one street as a bazaar, in which tradesmen, such as chutars, moiras, &c., were to be seen in the act of carrying on their various trades; other persons had heard of the existence of such a place, but none could give me exact information of its whereabouts. As my informants could have had no motive in telling me a complete falsehood, I am inclined to think there may be a grain of wheat in this bushel of chaff, and I am now trying to obtain more perfect information, as this may refer to some interesting remains of by-gone ages. I will let you know hereafter of the result, but in the mean time it might perhaps be as well to ascertain whether there is any mention made of the ruins of this description among the Transactions of the Society." We have some recollection of having heard this story before, some natives having come upon a ruined city in the direction indicated, but not so far south from West Burdwan. The vast jungle existing in that direction, and which, according to a large map in our possession, contains scarcely any villages, may well shroud a ruined city or a ruined province.—Friend of India.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

HABITUAL DRUNKENNESS IN H.M.'S SERVICE.

Head-Quarters, Camp Begunabad, March 13, 1851.—The following Horse Guards circular memorandum is published for the information and guidance of her Majesty's regiments serving in India:—

Circular Memorandum.

Horse Guards, Dec. 31, 1850.

It appearing, on reference to the proceedings of courts-martial received from some of the foreign stations, that the intentions of the legislature, in regard to prosecutions for the crime of habitual drunkenness, are not fully understood, or duly carried out, the Commander-in-Chief desires that, henceforth, the last instance of drunkenness—or that which may have induced the commanding officer to bring the delinquent to trial—shall, in all cases, be specifically charged against the prisoner, as well as recorded in the defaulters' books, as required by the 78th Article of War, and prescribed by the circular memorandum of the 20th September, 1848; and his grace has, accordingly, been pleased to substitute the following forms of charges for those promulgated to the army, by the circular memorandum of the 2nd August, 1847, viz.—

First Case.—For having been drunk on duty under arms (or as the case may be) at Winchester, on or about the tenth day of Dec. 1850—this being the fourth (or as the case may be) time of his having been drunk within twelve calendar months, and thereby constituting the crime of habitual drunkenness; the other instances being as follows, viz.—

" 30th March " drunk in barracks at Weedon.

" 1st October " drunk in the streets at Winchester.

Second Case.—For having been drunk in barracks (or as the case may be) at Winchester, on or about the 15th day of May, 1851, this being the second time of his having been drunk since the 12th of December, 1850, on which day he was duly convicted of habitual drunkenness; and thereby again constituting the crime of habitual drunkenness,—the other instance having occurred on the 17th of March, 1851, when he was drunk in the streets (or as the case may be) at Winchester.

Third Case.—For having been drunk on the line of march from Andover to Winchester, on or about the 10th day of December, 1850 (or on, or for duty, or parade, as the case may be), and on parade at Weedon (or on, or for duty, or on the line of march, as the case may be) on or about the 16th of March, 1850,—thus being once drunk on parade and once on the line of march, within twelve calendar months, and thereby constituting the crime of habitual drunkenness.

Fourth Case.—For having been drunk on duty under arms at Winchester, on or about the 15th day of May, 1851 (or on, or for parade, or on the line of march, as the case may be) within six calendar months of the 12th day of December, 1850, on which day he was duly convicted of habitual drunkenness, and thereby again constituting the crime of habitual drunkenness.

By command.

(Signed) G. BROWN, Adjutant-General.

CAPT. ANDREW GRAM BRINE, H.M.'s 32ND. REGT.

Head-Quarters Camp, Meerut, March 13, 1851.—In publishing the following letter from the military secretary at the Horse Guards, the Commander-in-Chief directs that the officer commanding the 32nd foot will give the necessary instructions to Capt. A. G. Brine to return to England, reporting himself to the adjutant-general on his arrival:—

Horse Guards, Feb. 6, 1851.

Sir,—The judge advocate general having notified, in the usual manner, to the Commander-in-Chief, the proceedings of the general court-martial, whereby Capt. Andrew Gram Brine, of the 32nd regiment, was tried at Jullunder, on the 25th of October, 1850, and sentenced to be cashiered, which sentence was approved and confirmed by Gen. Sir Charles Napier, G.C.B., who, for the reason stated in his remarks appended to the proceedings of the court-martial, did not publish the result of the trial, directed that the prisoner should remain in arrest at large, until the orders of his grace should be received respecting him; I have now the honour to acquaint you, with reference to Sir Charles Napier's letter of the 22nd November last, and to the proceedings of the special medical committee assembled at Jullunder on the 18th of September, to report upon Capt. Brine's state of mind, that the Commander-in-Chief has recommended to the Queen that Capt. Brine should receive her Majesty's pardon, and be restored to her Majesty's service, with the view of being placed upon half-pay on his arrival in this country.

Her Majesty having been pleased to approve thereof, his grace desires that you will order Capt. Brine to return to England, reporting himself to the adjutant-general on his arrival.

I have, &c,

(Signed) FITZ ROY SOMERSET.

PUNJAB IRREGULAR FORCE.

Camp near Kalabagh, Feb. 15.—Various changes and modifications having been made from time to time in the organization of the Punjab irregular force, under the immediate orders of the Governor General, his Lordship is pleased to direct the issue of the following general order:—

The force raised in the Punjab by G. O. G. G. dated 18th May, 1849, shall be denominated the Punjab irregular force, and shall consist of three light field batteries of artillery, five regiments of infantry, and five regiments of cavalry.

The Punjab irregular force is for general service in the Punjab, and the trans-Indus provinces under British rule, as well as beyond these limits, should the exigencies of the service require it.

The force will be commanded by a brigadier, on a consolidated salary of Rs. 2,000 per mensem.

A brigade-major is allowed for the staff duties, and will receive in addition to the pay and allowances of his rank, the staff and office allowance of a brigade major of a station, viz. Rs. 354 per mensem.

No additional batta will be allowed to the native portion of the artillery or infantry of the force when on field service, or marching, but a proportion of camels and mules, to be fixed hereafter, will be attached to each corps for the carriage of the men's baggage.

No additional or extra pay, beyond the rates stated in the table, will be granted to either artillery, cavalry, or infantry, while employed in any part of the British territories.

The artillery and infantry will be entitled to hutting money.

The native officers and men of the force are admissible to invalid and to wound and family pensions, according to the regulations applicable to local and irregular troops.

Men who have been transferred from the line or irregular cavalry will retain all pensionary claims to which they were entitled at the time of their transfer.

The full proportion of camp equipage will be attached to the artillery and infantry.

The three light field batteries now ordered to be attached to the Punjab irregular force, will be formed from the troops of durbar horse artillery to whom service was guaranteed.

Men belonging to the late durbar establishment to whom a higher rate of pay than now laid down or other advantage has been guaranteed, will be entitled to retain such advantage and superior pay.

CAPTAIN CHRISTOPHER HASEL, 48TH N. I.

Simla, March 10.—In promulgating the recent trial of Capt. C. Hasel, 48th N.I. that officer was ordered to continue in arrest, the C.-in-C. having determined on causing him to be arraigned on a fresh series of charges arising out of his having, contrary to express order, re-agitated the subject of his differences with his commanding officer, through the medium of a pamphlet which he is alleged to have circulated, containing much that was deemed highly objectionable; his Excellency has, however, abandoned the intention of trying Capt. Hasel, in consequence of his commanding officer having earnestly solicited that the proceedings about to be instituted against that officer might be stayed, on the ground of Capt. Hasel having made full and free admission of his highly erroneous course of conduct; and having respectfully sought the indulgent consideration of his commanding officer, and of the superior authorities interested in preserving the discipline of the army inviolate.

Capt. Hasel's admission of error, which is as frank as it is ample, is so worthy of an officer who has distinguished himself by gallantry in the field, and the cordial recommendation of his appeal to favourable notice, is so honourable to the feelings of his injured commanding officer, Maj. Troup, that the C.-in-C. has no hesitation in acceding to the request in full.

Sir W. Gomm has, moreover, such confidence in the tone of Capt. Hasel's expressed contrition, and in his resolution to co-operate with his commanding officer, henceforward, in upholding the discipline and harmony of the regiment, that his Excellency feels himself further justified in remitting the remaining portion of Capt. Hasel's sentence of suspension: that officer will accordingly be released from arrest, and return to his duty.

Although the C.-in-C. is glad of an opportunity of pardoning one whose gallantry in the field has won for him the approbation of so many distinguished officers (as appear by the testimonials recorded on the proceedings of Capt. Hasel's recent trial), his Excellency takes this occasion of assuring the army, that he never can or will permit discipline and subordination to be violated by officers appealing to public opinion respecting any grievances, real or imaginary, which they have to complain of; and his Excellency is determined to put a stop to a system, at once so improper and unsoldierlike, by visiting with severity all who may thus offend.

COL. THOMAS MONTEATH, C.B.

Fort William, March 14, 1851.—The Hon. the Court of Directors having intimated that Col. Thomas Monteath, C.B., of the 35th reg. of Light Infantry, aide-de-camp to the Queen, has obtained the royal licence and authority to take and henceforth use the surname of Douglas, in addition to and after that of Monteath, the hon. the president in council is pleased to direct that that officer shall hereafter appear on the strength of the army under the name of Thomas Monteath Douglas.

MADRAS.

MISCELLANEOUS.

OFFICERS OF THE SUPREME COURT.—The Madras Spectator says, it is on the point of being decided that the officers of the Supreme Court at Madras shall henceforth receive fixed salaries, instead of partly deriving their official incomes from fees; which latter will be carried to the account of Government, as at Calcutta. An exception will, however, be made in favour of the registrar, so far as regards his commission as administrator-general, which he is to receive in addition to the fixed pay proposed. The amounts of some of the salaries have transpired; Rs. 25,000 per annum is the highest figure spoken of.

MR. CHANNING.—We regret to announce the death of Mr. T. W. Channing, which occurred at Belgium, on the 29th March, from cholera. The deceased was in charge of the public experiments to increase the growth of cotton in the southern division, and his merits have been repeatedly recognized by Government.

THE NAWAB OF THE CARNATIC received his one-fourth share of Punjum Hissa, and also his usual salary from the Government this month—notwithstanding which he has not paid the allowances, which the Government some time ago directed should be punctually paid to his family. We believe that the allowance granted by Government to him is for the support of himself and family, and not to be given away to other parties, thereby starving; his own family and feeding his favourites. His grandmother's allowance, we understand, has not been paid up, and the large balance due to her on a former account, has been withheld. This old lady has a grand-daughter residing with her, who when born was betrothed to the present Nawab; and if we mistake not, a royal salute was fired on the occasion. This contract never was completed, through the intervention of interested persons, who feared that if the marriage should take place, the uncle would become friendly with his highness, and destroy the influence of the clique, who at present exert such pernicious sway over the young prince.—Athenæum.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

OFFICERS IN CHARGE OF RECRUITS.

Head-Quarters, Choultry Plain, March 7, 1851.—The Commander-in-Chief having had under observation certain circumstances that occurred on board the ship Gloriana on her recent passage to Madras, on which occasion two officers were placed in arrest upon insufficient grounds, deems it necessary to record in general orders his sentiments for the information of officers of the army generally.

1. In October last Capt. Lockhart, of the 45th regt. N.I., was nominated by the Honourable Court of Directors to the charge of certain recruits on board the above vessel; Brevet Capt. Greenlaw of the 46th, Lieut. Robertson of the Artillery, and Ensign Gahagan, 10th regt. N.I., having been appointed to do duty with the detachment.

2. Capt. Lockhart, without special authority for such proceeding, appointed Capt. Greenlaw to act as adjutant of the detachment.

3. In December Lieut. Robertson remonstrated against Capt. Greenlaw's appointment, on the ground that it imposed extra duty on himself and Ensign Gahagan.

4. In reply to this remonstrance he was informed, that the appointment was for the good of the service, and that this proceeding of his commanding officer was not to be animadverted on. Shortly Captain Greenlaw reported to Captain Lockhart, that Lieutenant Robertson had made use of expressions in general conversation on the poop which were derogatory to himself and Captain Lockhart—these expressions having been construed into a reflection upon Captain Greenlaw for not having done his duty.

5. For this Lieutenant Robertson was reprimanded by Captain Lockhart, but Captain Greenlaw reagentated the matter and sent in charges against Lieutenant Robertson, on which the latter officer, deeming it more prudent to leave his case to the decision of the Commander-in-Chief, declined explanation, and was placed in arrest.

6. Immediately after some of the passengers, among whom was Lieutenant Bristow of the 8th regiment N.I., addressed a communication, which was, however, never despatched to Capt. Greenlaw, declining his further acquaintance, on the ground that he had carried a private conversation to Captain Lockhart—the private conversation in question being the report made to Capt. Lockhart, regarding Captain Greenlaw's having left duty to be performed by others.

7. Upon this circumstance coming to Capt. Lockhart's knowledge five or six weeks after, Lieut. Bristow was placed in arrest for having contemplated sending a paper, although the intention of sending it was never carried into effect, and had been altogether abandoned!

8. There is much to be regretted in the proceedings, of which a very brief outline is given above. They evince throughout a want of judgment on the part of Captains Lockhart and Greenlaw, which the Commander-in-Chief was not prepared to meet in officers of their standing and presumed experience.

9. From the first, Capt. Lockhart acted very injudiciously in making so much of a trifling affair; and, supposing Lieut. Robertson's conduct called for his interference, the matter was properly disposed of by the reprimand given to that officer.

10. Neither was Capt. Greenlaw justified, after he had submitted the matter to his commanding officer, in reagentating it; and his framing a serious charge out of such flimsy materials was equally unwarrantable.

11. The case of Lieut. Bristow is one of peculiar hardship. He was a mere passenger, and in no respect under Captain Lockhart's orders, yet he was placed in arrest on the 9th Feb. by that officer, and kept so until the end of the voyage, being precluded from attending at the cuddy table, and availing himself of accommodation for which he had paid! It does not even appear that he was furnished with any charge, or that he was informed of the offence of which he was accused, and to the present hour the offence attributed to him is not apparent.

12. The Commander-in-Chief has ordered Lieuts. Robertson and Bristow to be released from arrest, and it only remains to dispose of Captains Lockhart and Greenlaw.

13. His Excellency hopes that this public expression in General Orders, of his marked disapprobation of the injudicious conduct of these two officers, will prove sufficient to deter others from similar mistakes.

14. Commanding officers of detachments of recruits should bear in mind the extreme severity of the punishment of arrest on board ship, and that no officer should be subjected to it for trivial offences. Nothing but the most pressing and extraordinary circumstances can justify the resort to such a measure in the case of passengers not under their orders. The obvious course to be pursued on such occasions is to make the conduct of officers so situated the subject of report to superior authority on arrival at the presidency.

15. The regulations for officers in charge of recruits provide in detail for the various duties on ship-board, and for any deviation therefrom, the Commander-in-Chief must hold commanding officers personally responsible.

MEDICAL CONTRIBUTIONS TO REGIMENTAL BAND FUND.

Fort St. George, Mar. 25, 1851.—The Hon. the Court of Directors having decided to decide that such medical officers as are only nominally posted to regiments, and are performing duties at other stations, should not be required to contribute to band funds, and that the practice of placing superintending surgeons on the nominal strength of regiments, which is peculiar to the Madras presidency, should be abolished. The Right Hon. the Governor in Council is pleased to direct that from the dates on which the removal from the strength of regiments of the medical officers in question may be directed in General Orders by his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, and as long as they remain unposted to corps, those officers shall be exempted from further contributions to regimental band funds.

LAW.

SUDDER ADAWLUT, 14TH FEBRUARY.

Narrayan Ramchundur v. Lurmeebae, wife of Narrayan Ramchundur.—This was a special appeal from a decision of the judge of the zillah of Admednugger.

In this case, the appellant originally sued to gain possession of his son, a boy about seven years of age, from the defendant, the said son's mother and appellant's wife, but separated from him since his conversion to Christianity.

The principal Sudder Ameen held that, in the absence of any Act of Parliament, Regulation of Government, or usage of the country that could be applied to the case, and in the absence also of any "specific law" bearing on it in the Shastre, the law of the defendant, it must be determined according to justice, equity, and good conscience; and proceeding to state his opinion at considerable length that the natural right of the father to the guardianship of his child was beyond dispute, and that the appellant, by adopting Christianity, had committed no act that rendered him morally unfit for the exercise of that right; and he passed a decree in his favour, awarding him possession of his son.

The judge, on appeal, reversed this decision, on the ground that the Hindoo law on the point was clear, and that according to it a Brahmin renouncing his religion becomes an outcast, and resigns and forfeits all his civil rights, comprising the guardianship of his children lawfully begotten prior to his renunciation.

The appellant prayed for the admission of his special appeal, which was admitted, to try whether a Brahmin on becoming a Christian forfeits his rights to the charge of his children.

The following minute was recorded by the sitting judge, P. W. Le Geyt, Esq. —

"Since the decree now appealed against was passed, Act 21 of 1850 has become the law of the land. This law clearly provides that any law or usage that inflicts on any person forfeiture of rights or property, by reason of his or her renouncing the communion of any religion, or being deprived of caste, shall cease to be enforced as law. This being so, it appears to me that the special appellant, under the existing law, cannot be debarred from exercising the rights of a parent over his infant child by reason of his renunciation of the Hindoo religion, but, on the contrary, is entitled to all the natural rights and privileges of a parent.

"I am, therefore, not prepared to affirm the decree of the zillah judge, and refer the case to be tried by a full Court."

The above view was fully concurred in by the other judges, Mr. Bell and Mr. Warden, and it was ordered that the costs of the appeal should be borne by the respondent.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE COMMERCE OF BOMBAY.—The Report of the Commerce of Bombay for 1849-50 shows an increase on the year in the value of imports from Great Britain and the colonies of Rs. 1,12,14,722, besides an increase of treasure of Rs. 3,707; the increase of exports amounts to Rs. 92,18,385: the exports of treasure have fallen off no less than Rs. 19,35,325.

THE AMERICAN COTTON PLANTERS.—The Bombay Times, in a notice of Mr. Chapman's book, observes:—"There is nothing more easy to explain than the failure of the American cotton planters; the majority of them, in fact, were not cotton planters at all, but village attorneys, carpenters, and mechanics, who seemed to have come here in the belief that India was an El Dorado, and with the sole object of making their fortunes and returning home as speedily as possible. We know that few of them knew anything about the elements of mechanics,—we doubt much if they knew more of farming: it was no marvel that they failed—a miracle if they had succeeded."

THE LATE XX-PESHWA, BAJEE RAO.—A correspondent of the Bombay Gazette relates the following anecdote:—"In the year 1827, a native, evidently of rank, entered the counting-house of a distinguished house of agency of that day, asking for the head of the firm, saying he was the bearer of a confidential message to him from Bajee Rao. He was led into a private room. After some time, the merchant sent for a youth, the élève of the house, and a mass of Government paper, blank endorsed by Bajee Rao, was shown to this youth, which he was informed it was Bajee Rao's wish "to deposit for safety in Mr. —'s hands." The amount was between 20 and 21 lacs of rupees. The man declined to endorse the paper; his master wished the transaction to be a profound secret; he had state reasons or fears for wishing the thing unknown. He would not even accept a receipt for the paper. His reliance was entirely on the personal word of honour of Mr. — that the paper would be taken care of till called again for by the Peshwa. He exacted a promise of secrecy from both, and went away, leaving the paper in their hands! They immediately had drawn out a legal instrument, declaratory of the circumstances, and of the rightful ownership. The paper was sealed up, and kept in an iron safe in the young gentleman's keeping for nearly a year and a half. During that time no interest was drawn on it, nor had the parties ever any communication about it. The same man then returned, and claimed and received back the whole. The trust-deed was shown him, and he was a little grieved at it at first, as if they did not reciprocate the confidence he had manifested in them; but its propriety, as protection against risk of death, was explained to him, and was satisfactory. It was torn up in his presence, and the Government paper returned to him thereupon."

COLONEL JERVIS, who has for eight years been our chief engineer, leaves us for England by this day's steamer, and in him we lose one of the most able, active, and energetic of our public improvers. He has now been well nigh forty years in India; he was one of the first secretaries to the Native Education Society, and has for thirty years been one of the most active promoters in all departments of native education. To his pen we owe many of the best translations of scientific school books we possess, and to him the society was mainly indebted for the organization which enabled them, twenty years since, to send forth a batch of publications exceeding in number and in value anything of the kind since attempted—to which the Government contributed the munificent sum of 30,000*l.* sterling, in the space of five years, for works published for native use!—Bombay Times, April 2.

FAMILIES IN THE PUNJAB.—We understand that it is in contemplation to issue an order for the immediate retirement within the eastern boundaries of the Sutlej river, of all the ladies and families of the political and military officers who are engaged in the administration of the Punjab.—Bombay Telegraph, April 3.

THE BARODA RAILWAY, connecting the Guicowar's capital with the shipping port of Tankaria, is now likely to make good progress. A working committee of five officers, and others in the Company's service, has been constituted at Bombay, of whom Major French, the great promoter of the scheme, is one.—Ibid.

A VERY FINE FRIGATE, built of teak, was nearly ready to be launched from the Government Dockyard. She is intended for the mail-packet service.

A WOODEN TRAMWAY, four and a half miles in length, has just been completed at Dholera in Goozerat, for the purpose of facilitating the shipment of cotton. It cost 7,000*l.* in all, or a little over 1,400*l.* per mile. With the exception of Capt. Full-james, commanding the Goozerat irregular horse, its engineer and projector, and to whom the construction of the railway is entirely due, and Capt. Wallace, resident at Sadra, the money has been subscribed exclusively by the merchants of Ahmedabad. It is expected to yield a tolerable return in the shape of dividends, and a still more liberal one in the shape of saving in the expense of shipment.—Bombay Times, April 2.

BANK OF BOMBAY.—Major J. Swanson and Mr. T. S. Cowie have been elected directors of the Bank of Bombay, in room of Messrs. R. F. Remington and A. Hadden returned to England.

EARTHQUAKE AND STORM.—A letter from Kattiwar, dated the 21st February, states that an earthquake had occurred in the province, accompanied by a storm of rain, with vivid lightning and thunder. The electric fluid struck a house in the town of Jooria, in which was stored a large quantity of gunpowder, which exploded with such violence as to destroy a large portion of the town, and kill a number of the inhabitants.

INDIAN FINANCES.—For the first time since 1841 our income has been more than able to meet our expenditure—the balance of from half a million to a million and a half, which for ten years past has stood every year against us, is now transformed into one of a quarter of a million in our favour. The Punjab promises henceforth to yield from a quarter to a half million a year of free return. Scinde continues to cost, as it has cost us every year since its conquest, some three quarters of a million annually. So much for the contrast betwixt a conquest made in the latter case without pretence of justification, and one in the former which was forced on us. We have had, and are having, our reward. From a return recently published, it would appear that an average expenditure of about a quarter of a million sterling has been made on public works annually during the three years preceding 1846, when we were requiring to borrow about a million a year, to make the two ends meet.—Bombay Times.

COTTON-CLEANING MACHINES.—Mr. Laidlaw, a cotton-grower in Khandeish, has succeeded in erecting saw-gin machinery, which has given great satisfaction. He had one large gin of seventy-three saws at work, which cleaned 6,000 lbs. of cotton per diem.

SPONTANEOUS IGNITION OF COALS.—The ship Rosalind, bound for Aden, laden with coals for the Peninsular and Oriental Company, and the ship St. Clair, also laden with coals, bound for Bombay, have both been destroyed by fire at sea,—the coals having, in both cases, spontaneously ignited.—Bombay Times, April 2.

PUBLIC WORKS.—The Bombay government has followed the example set them by the Bengal and Madras authorities, by appointing a Public Works Commission. Col. Moore is president, with Mr. J. D. Inverarity, C. S., Capt. Turner, engineers, and Capt. Gaisford, artillery, members; the latter officer acting also as secretary. The commission is to "inquire into the existing system of public works, both as regards superintendence and execution."

M. BRASIER.—The Telegraph publishes a notice of the life, times, and death of M. Brasier, the "Soyer of the East," the best artiste in the culinary line, who ever rejoiced the stomachs of Anglo-Indians. He was a sort of Indian Vatel, and like him as tenacious of his dignity, though, instead of falling on his own sword, he contented himself with challenging a gentleman, who, in a fit of dyspepsia, had criticised his dishes.

THE WHEEL-TAX COMMISSION commenced their inquiries in the town barracks on the 31st March, sitting with open doors, so that the fullest publicity will be given to their proceedings.

THE TABLE OF MORTALITY for the month of March, shows that, on the Island of Bombay and Colaba, the deaths amounted to the large number of 1,953 of which 1,002 were from cholera alone. The deaths from natural causes amounted to 945, and from violence to 6. Of the European community, 5 died from cholera, and 13 from other diseases, during the month.

PERSECUTION OF CHRISTIAN CHINESE.—A very extensive movement in the interior of our island has taken place against the converts to Christianity among the Chinese pepper and gambier planters. A simultaneous attack was made upon the bangsals or plantations of these persons in all quarters of the island by their heathen compatriots, instigated, it is believed, by the secret societies, which exert such a baneful influence over our Chinese population. Upwards of thirty bangsals were plundered, and the unfortunate owners and their coolies driven out. The police in the interior was augmented, and warrants issued against a number of persons; but a very determined resistance was offered, and the police were obliged several times to fire in self-defence, by which it is believed ten or a dozen of the Chinese were killed. A party of military was sent out to strengthen the police, but it was afterwards deemed advisable by the authorities to suspend the further execution of the warrants, and to recall part of the military. The Chinese are indisposed to submit, saying they wish to be allowed to fight out their quarrel with their Chinese countrymen, and that the police have no business to interfere in the matter. The utmost they can be brought to concede is, that, if no further proceedings are taken in executing the warrants, they will not give further annoyance to the Christian converts. They threaten the most determined resistance should any attempt be made by the police to apprehend any more of their body. In most of the plantations all work has been suspended for some time, and the effects of these lawless proceedings are likely to be most disastrous to all concerned. Several of the parties first apprehended were tried at the Session of Oyer and Terminer, and, being convicted, were sentenced to transportation to Bombay. This does not seem, however, to have made much impression, as the Chinese appear to rely on their powers of combined resistance to avert further measures against them.—Free Press.

CHINA.

TEA PLANTS FOR INDIA.—By the Lady Mary Wood, leaving this morning, Mr. Robert Fortune proceeds to Calcutta with a large quantity of tea plants, selected in the green tea districts, in which this gentleman for some time past has been on a continuation of his "wanderings." Mr. Fortune, on his return from China about three years ago, was engaged by the Directors of the East India Company to proceed again to the Celestial Empire, and procure and transmit to India such a quantity and variety of the tea plant, that its cultivation in the north-western provinces would be a matter of mere manual labour. Mr. Fortune has entirely succeeded; the plants transmitted have flourished as well as could possibly be expected, and in the course of a few years there is every probability that tea will form an article of export from our Indian presidencies. Mr. Fortune also takes with him eight Chinese from the district of Wei-chow, who have agreed to serve for three years: six of them are regular tea manufacturers; the other two are pewterers, whose sole business is that of preparing lead casings to tea chests. The greatest distance to which Mr. Fortune penetrated into the interior was about 300 miles; and during the whole of his absences from consular ports he has never been molested, nor in any way insulted. To adopt the Chinese dress and mode of living will have naturally entailed a considerable degree of hardship, for which Mr. Fortune will doubtless be suitably rewarded.—Friend of China, Feb. 26.

BORNEO.

The Rev. T. F. McDougall, in an account of the Church Mission at Sarawak, states that there have been received into the Mission School several children of a most interesting race of people, the Dyako-Chinese, of Pemangkat, from 4,000 to 5,000 of whom had lately emigrated thither. "They emigrated several generations back from the Kay country in China,—which, from their description, seems to be a mountainous region in the interior of the Fokein province,—and settled as gold-workers at Montrado, in the Sultan of Semba's territories. There they married Dyak women, and remained until about thirty years back, when, on account of differences with the Takong-kimsi, who originally emigrated with them from China, but are a much more numerous and powerful people, they left Montrado, and settled at Pemangkat, at the mouth of the Sambas river, where they became great rice-growers, and supplied the Sambas and Montrado people with it. Lately there has been war between the Montrados and the Dutch on account of the opium farm, and the Pemangkat people sided with the Dutch and the Sultan against their countrymen, who attacked them in great force, drove them out of their country, and possessed themselves of their rice-grounds and gold-works, which they still hold, in spite of the Dutch, and are likely to do so, if a large force is not brought from Batavia to dislodge them, as it is said the Montados are divided into seven kimsis, and each kismi can furnish 10,000 fighting men. Nearly all the Pemangkat people who escaped fled here (Sarawak) en masse, bringing their wives and children, and all the little property they could stow away in their boats. Several of these boats, crammed with people, foundered at sea; and many of the refugees, journeying overland, perished of starvation by the way. The poor creatures who arrived were all in a state of destitution and terror; they were afraid lest their enemies should follow them, or lest we should not be able to protect and assist them. They all declared that they fled here, instead of going to Pontianak, with the one hope of being allowed to settle, and received as subjects of our Rajah. Lands, tools, and implements for their houses, have been given to every applicant, with a monthly allowance of rice, and in many cases pecuniary assistance, to keep them until they can derive their own support from their gardens, paddy-grounds, or gold-works. These Dyako-Chinese are a fine race, being an improvement both on the original Chinese and Dyak. Instead of the small oblique eye and sinister expression of the Chinaman, they have the large beaming eye and kindly look of the Dyak; while in stature and strength they do not seem to have degenerated from their Chinese progenitors. Their language seems peculiar, and they have great difficulty in communicating with the other Chinese here, but many of them understand the Chinese written character. They are orderly and industrious, and have already made large clearings for their farms and gardens, which are making great inroads into the jungle around us, and in other places, both down and up the river."—Colonial Church Chron.

MANILLA.

The Straits Times informs us, that the Governor-General of Manilla persists in his determination to conquer Suloo, and has declared that he will not return alive to Manilla, until the Sulos are subjugated or exterminated. The most active preparations are in progress at Manilla; seven merchantmen have been taken up at a great expense by the Government, and five thousand soldiers, many of them raw conscripts, but provided with an unusual quantity of artillery and ammunition, are about to sail for Saloo.

NEW ZEALAND.

EXCURSION FROM AUCKLAND TO THE HOT SPRINGS.—Having obtained permission from Sir G. Grey to take advantage of the Government brig going to Tauranga, in the Bay of Plenty, a party of six officers of H.M.'s 58th regiment, from the garrison of Auckland, embarked and landed at Tauranga. Passed over the Lake Rotoitei, and on landing on the opposite shore, we got the first sight of the hot springs, situated across Rotorna, the margin of which we reached by a short walk across a neck of land at the Pah Ohimenuetu; we were well received by the chief, who pitched a tent for us, and found food and fire with alacrity. Settling all these matters, we rambled over the place, visited the numerous springs, looked into a very respectable Roman Catholic chapel, and then strolled with the gun for ducks. Shot two birds, and tried the effect of one of the springs, which instantly took off the feathers, and would have soon boiled them if we had only a way of holding them. After dinner, again visited the pah, which was evidently of great antiquity, from the style of carvings in all directions; and from its formation, it must, at one time, have been of vast size and strength. The hot springs in the pah are very numerous, and the heat at 211° and 205°, at about 200 or 300 feet above the level of the sea. The water from these springs was conducted by the natives into baths, and the temperature reduced to about 100°. These baths were constantly filled with natives of both sexes, from the infant to the aged. In one I counted twenty-one young girls, with one old woman and five or six infants. We started for Terawara Lake, after a comfortable sleep, and a good wash at the spring, which was so hot we could hardly dip in our hands; walked till about mid-day through fine scenery, and the first peep of the pah to Okeraka was certainly beautiful—the pah prettily situated, and the distant mountains covered with snow; walked on through the pah, rounded the other half of the lake, then through a gorge and sighted Terawara; reached the halting-place (a pah called Galilee), tired and hungry, having gone five and a half hours without any food, except two potatoes. We applied to Mr. Spencer, the resident here, for the loan of the chapel to sleep in. He gave us the use of the school-room, which was far more acceptable, for many reasons. Here the cold was so excessive that the efforts of a large blazing fire could only comfort the side next to it. On waking next morning, the ground was covered with ice, and the cold most nipping. Got a canoe, after much bargaining and idling on the part of the natives, and started at eight, A.M., for Rotomohacco, across the Terawara Lake. Saw the smoke of Rotomohacco while we were feeling like lumps of ice. Landed in the neighbourhood of the snowy hills, and in a few moments more got sight of the object of our walk, Rotomohacco. At first it looked like a large limekiln, but on nearing it, became striking and wonderful. Sat down on the margin of this freak of nature—this link with White Island—this great immense boiling caldron—smoked the calumet of peace—bid a portion of our party (proceeding over-land to Auckland) adieu, and prepared to retrace our steps; re-embarked at half-past eleven, crossed Terawara and Okeraka by three P.M., and reached Mr. Chapman's by a fresh road at half-past five, in time to make ourselves comfortable for dinner. Got well off the following morning by eight o'clock, with the intention of pushing on as far as possible for Mackata. Cold here was excessive, and ice more than an inch thick.—Colonial Magazine.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

The latest intelligence from the frontier is to the 25th February; the incidents of the war, in the interval since the date of the preceding advices, are as follows:—

On the 3rd of February, Col. Mackinnon moved from King William's Town against Seyolo, but the Caffres evaded our troops, though, it is said, the prophet had a very narrow escape. About 800 head of cattle were captured, 100 of which, however, were afterwards lost from carelessness.

Sir H. Smith, finding that the burghers had not come forward to join Gen. Somerset, appointed general commandant of this force, and who required strong reinforcements of Europeans to enable him effectually to crush the Kat River and Blinkwater rebel Hottentots, on the 3rd of February issued a proclamation regretting the apathy and unwillingness which had been manifested, and warning the inhabitants of the horrors likely to ensue should they not rally round the authorities at Fort Hare or Port Beaufort. This appears to have roused the spirit of the Boers, and large parties collected at Graaf-Reinet and other places. Capt. Davis left Port Peddie to join Sir H. Smith with about 400 new levies; to avoid Seyolo, he proceeded by way of Wesleyville, and reached King William's Town in safety. His Excellency was also joined by 500 more men from Cape Town on the 11th February, including 70 marines and seamen from H.M.'s ship Castor, in Simon's Bay, who were placed in garrison at Fort Glimmergan, at East London, relieving a company of the 73rd, who proceeded to King William's Town.

On the 19th of February, Col. Mackinnon again marched with five companies of the 73rd regiment, the European levy of 400 men, 200 mounted riflemen, and the Hottentot levies, with two 6-pounders—in all about 2,760 men. He proceeded first to Port White, again encountering some opposition at the Debe Neck; on the 14th, the troops marched to Fort Hare, by the broad drift of the Keiskamma, destroying the crops, kraals, and huts on their way. Upon joining Gen. Somerset, a movement was made up the Chimie valley, as far as the missionary station, the crops being destroyed and the fields laid waste. The troops returned to Fort Hare on the 16th. A division was detached by Gen. Somerset towards the Iguni Hoek, part of the Kat River settlement, but was recalled in consequence of Col. Mackinnon's return. The European regiment (400 men) was left with Gen. Somerset, and the remainder of the force returned by the Middle Drift, ascending the stream to Fort Wiltshire, in order to lay waste the country of Botman, Kona, and Tola. On this day's march, through a rugged bushy country, the attacks of the Caffres on the rear guard were continuous and resolute; pouring out of every lateral valley, they incessantly harassed the line of march, and, though repeatedly charged and driven back, they persevered until night-fall, causing a loss of 8 killed and 17 badly wounded. Col. Mackinnon states the loss of the Caffres to have been very heavy, and that several of their men of note were supposed to be shot. The troops accomplished the object of the expedition by marching 110 miles through the most populous districts of Caffreland, and inflicting a severe punishment on the enemy, by destroying his means of subsistence,—the only way of bringing the war to a speedy termination. Mr. Brown, the missionary at Chumie, and the widow of the missionary Chalmers, were quietly residing at that station, and refused to quit it.

While the attention of the Caffres was diverted by the march of the troops under Col. Mackinnon, 300 Fingoes from Fort Peddie crossed the Keiskamma, and drove off 440 head of cattle belonging to Seyolo and Umlangeni.

Thus Sir H. Smith has complete command of the whole of Caffraria, but apparently is not strong enough to attempt clearing the Amatola fastnesses, the garrisons in the forts much weakening his disposable force. The road from Buffalo Mouth to King William's Town had been kept clear by Pato and his tribe, which facilitates the passage of supplies.

The defection of the Hottentots had caused much alarm; those at the Kat River settlement have hitherto been faithful to the colonists in former wars, and their brethren from the missionary villages of Genadendal, Groenekloof, and others in the western districts, form the greater part of the reinforcements which have yet reached Sir H. Smith. The Moravian missionary station at Shiloh, situated near the border of the Tambookie country, was attacked by a large force of Mapessa's Caffres, and was immediately given up by the Hottentots there, who joined the enemy, and united with them in attacking Whittlesea on the 31st of January and following days. They were, however, beaten back and pursued to Shiloh, where they were in turn attacked, and after a desperate resistance forced to take refuge in the chapel, which was too strong to be stormed; not, however, without the loss of one Englishman, five Fingoes, and five of Kama's Christian Caffres, who were killed, and many wounded, in this gallant action. The loss of the Caffres must have been considerable. Commandant Joubert arrived with a party of Boers from Cradock too late to take any part in the conflict. His Excellency expressed great satisfaction at the conduct of Capt. Tylden at Whittlesea, and the gentlemen who aided him in the defence of that place. The ravages of the Blinkwater people and Kat River Hottentots in the western parts of Fort Beaufort district and Somerset have been most distressing.

Further to the north-east, Commandant Joubert, with a commando on an expedition to bring Capt. Read and his people from the White Kei, were engaged with Mapessa's Caffres, and also with the Bitterhout tribe. About 150 Caffres were killed, and 3,000 head of cattle taken. Mr. Joubert's burghers had returned to Colesburg.

The Tambookies appeared to be upon the march for the colony, and were about to cross the Orange river.

In Albany, predatory parties of Caffres have done much mischief, but have been followed up by the volunteer company of rangers under Mr. Stubbs, who have been almost constantly in the saddle. At one time it was supposed that at least 2,000 Caffres were on the Zuurberg and in the Addo bush, as a small party of burghers from Uitenhage was beaten back with the loss of one of their number, Mr. Franz; but it seems probable that their numbers did not exceed 200 or 300. On the 19th of February, a dozen waggons, unescorted, from Port Elizabeth, were captured and plundered of merchandize, &c. by the Caffres on the Quagga Flats, near Graham's Town, who also drove off 112 oxen. This, however, is the fault of their owners, who wished to save expense.

The Zulus were not permitted to leave Natal, on account of apprehension being entertained of an attack from Panda during their absence.

A despatch from Major-gen. Somerset, dated from Fort Armstrong, February 23rd, announces what the Graham's Town Journal terms "Glorious news,—a decisive victory over the Kat River rebels:—"

"We took Fort Armstrong yesterday morning at 12 o'clock, having stormed it with the Cape Mounted Rifles, headed by Major Somerset, supported by burghers, volunteers, and levies. The burghers were fighting from day-dawn until I joined them. I was attacked before dawn at Chumie ridge by a body of Hottentots, having two men and two horses wounded. This delayed me an hour and a half, and I did not join the burghers until half-past 10. The fort was in possession of the enemy. We then stormed it with Cape Mounted Rifles. I shelled the fort for some time. The rebels then mixed themselves up with the women and children. The greatest trouble I had to contend with was to separate the women and children, and to save them from destruction, before we could storm the place. The men in the tower would not surrender, but kept firing upon us out of the portholes. We could not take it. I was obliged to blow it up with shells. They fought desperately in the fort after it was stormed. We killed twenty-seven Caffres and Hottentots in the fort, nine in the tower. The burghers had a desperate fight before I came up,—three men killed and fourteen wounded, with Fingoes. They had to contend against thousands, and fought most bravely. I have four men dangerously wounded, and four horses killed—Serg. Pitt badly shot through the leg; also Daly, and two native soldiers. I have upwards of 160 prisoners, 70 to 100 stand of arms, 400 women and children. I have destroyed the fort and all its contents. We have several waggons, but very few cattle but what fell into the hands of the Fingoes. Sandilli was at Philponton on the 21st, and gave his orders to the rebel commanders, and it is supposed went back. I am busy to-day arranging about prisoners, and women and children. I believe the rebel bands are much broken up, and gone off to the Amatola, but we had so hard a day yesterday I have not gone out to-day. I shall clear the Eland's-river country to-morrow, and try and get to Eland's-post. This, I think, will break the neck of this rebellion. I have all their women and children, and shall keep them, which will bring the men out. I send this express to calm the mind of the public. I have not received the commandant's report, but shall do so in a day or two.

"The brave conduct of the burghers is beyond all praise. The whole colony is indebted for its salvation to the conduct of these burghers for the last six weeks, particularly yesterday.

"H. SOMERSET.

"To Lieut. col. Sutton, commanding at Fort Beaufort."

By a memorandum on the outside of the despatch, the prisoners then amounted to 220. Our loss was 6 killed and 25 wounded.

The journal of Commandant Currie states that the enemy "were taken by surprise, and for about an hour we had it all our own way, until supported by a lot of rebels from Fort Armstrong, when we were obliged to defend ourselves, and make two or three charges to clear some rocks, whence the enemy were annoying us, and about 12 o'clock we drove the enemy into Fort Armstrong, helter-skelter, where we were met by Major-gen. Somerset, with about 1,400 men and two cannon; and in less than two hours after, the fort was carried, sacked, and burnt down; and altogether we have made a pretty example of the Kat River people of this post."

NETHERLANDS INDIA.

The Press of the 7th February states, that the Chinese on the west coast of Borneo, who have for some months maintained a contest with the whole power of the Government of Java, have at length been compelled, by the want of provisions, to submit, to the great relief of the Dutch authorities. The Dutch have also succeeded in quelling the disturbances in Banka, and have inflicted a severe blow upon a pirate fleet, which had been harassing the coast of Java. The piratical prahus, from their light draught, were enabled for a long time to baffle the Dutch steamer; but the commander of the latter, Lieut. Henlopen, ultimately succeeded in destroying five prahus, besides one other which he brought away, and capturing fourteen pirates. The pirates also lost the greater portion of their slaves, and all the booty they had obtained in two former engagements.

In the valley of Spiti, in the Himalaya country,—described as "a mass of nearly bare rocks, with small patches of cultivation, almost entirely without trees,"—the priesthood (Buddhist) forms one-eighth of the entire population. The valley is divided into five kotis, containing sixty villages, and the entire population consists of only 1,607 souls, including children and priests, the latter numbering 193. These priests comprise a head gelong, or high priest, and five other gelongs, the rest being chumbas and chelabs. They are strictly prohibited from exercising any other functions but those of religion, and are entirely supported by the people. Nevertheless, the country is represented by Capt. Hay, the Assistant Commissioner, as in a prosperous state, the people being well housed, well clothed, possessing abundance of food, contented and happy.

Abbas Pasha has officially announced his intention of making a railroad between Cairo and Alexandria, thus bringing into close proximity the two principal towns in Egypt,—a boon of inestimable benefit to the country, and which will give increased facilities to the transit to India. It is confidently expected that the works will be commenced in the course of the present year, and under the auspices of Mr. Robert Stephenson, who highly approves of the line; it will thus accelerate the means of communication with our Indian possessions.

Earthquakes appear to have been felt pretty extensively over the Punjab, or the North-west Provinces, on the 17th and 31st January, and on the 4th, 6th, and 14th of February: no injury of any note has been occasioned by them.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

In an Essay on the Early Relations of Continental India with Sumatra and Java, by the Rev. W. Taylor, published in the Madras Journal of Literature for June last, he has investigated the pretensions to Bauddhistic origin attributed to the architectural and sculptured antiquities of the latter island, the most remarkable portion of which are found at Brambānam, which were visited and sketched by Colonel Mackenzie in 1812, and subsequently by Captain G. Baker, whose report to the Government contains facts of some value towards an elucidation of the question. "One of these arises from the circumstance of his having been accompanied by a sepoy, who would seem to have been a Brahman himself, and had resided two years among the Brahmans at Benares. Colonel Mackenzie considered these ruins at Brambānam to be decidedly Bauddhistic; the sepoy, on the contrary, regarded them as Brahmanical, though surpassing in number and style of execution anything of the kind which he had seen in India. Without deciding this difference, for the present, it may be noted that what Colonel Mackenzie supposed to be images of Budd'ha, the sepoy considered to be those simply of tupās warri (tapasvari); and though in the temples at Loro-Jōngrang, a division of those at Brambānam, certain Jaina or Baudd'ha images were pointed out to him as contradicting his opinion, having long-extended ears and short-curved hair, he still maintained that these were simply devotees in the act of tapas; and that what was supposed to be short-curved hair, was nothing more than a tūpi, or kind of cap worn by ascetics, common throughout Hindustan proper, and made for that purpose by a particular class of people. Though I differ from the sepoy on the main question, and think I am able to reconcile the two opinions, yet the immediate point of notice is the curled hair, or cap. I was so much struck with this observation, on first reading the passage, that I made it a point of special inquiry, and find, from competent Hindu information, that this kind of skull-cap used actually to be worn by ascetics performing penance. The mass of plaited hair, or hair allowed to grow without cutting or restraint, is unquestionably one of the indications of the rishis performing penance; but the skull-cap, exhibiting the outward appearance of curled hair, it seems, is another mode of head-dress among the severer ascetics. Thus the sepoy by the simplicity of truth, and Captain Baker by the record of it, have furnished the means of setting aside much apparently learned and irrelevant speculation.

"The love of learned display was with Sir W. Jones almost a passion, verging sometimes to weakness; and it led the imitator and caricaturist of his faults, Wilford, into the extravagancies of absurdity; every just principle of analysis or deduction being sacrificed before a few false and dazzling etymological resemblances, or perverted comparisons. Sir W. Jones did not run into such extremes, though at times sufficiently desultory and fanciful. Thus, with his mind full of the Dionysiacs of the monk Nonnus, he sought for resemblances between the hero and the Sacya, whom his researches had led him to identify with Budd'ha; and then came the curly hair of the images of Budd'ha, with the conclusion that Sacya, or Budd'ha, must have been an African negro; followed by discussions whether he invaded India from Egypt or Assyria, issuing in the great probability of the latter hypothesis! A magnificent house of cards, blown down by the breath of a not very learned sepoy! Here I cannot but again acknowledge the service done to inquiries into past Indian ages by the late Honourable G. Turnour, in his translation of the Mahawanso (a genuine book of Pāli or Bauddhistic annals), because of its clear statement of the origin of Bauddhism at Māgadha, in Bengal, and the manner of its origination. It has become clear, that the first stages in the process of the great schism were not perceptible to the Brahmans of that day, because it only assumed the aspect of carrying Brahmanism itself on towards greater refinement and purity; and Budd'ha, though of royal descent, was at first a close ascetic; so that, from the union of royal blood and abstracted devotedness, we may readily perceive how the Brahmans were disposed to consider him as an avatār of Vishnu,—a circumstance not easily to be read back again afterwards, though now the Brahmans generally execrate the idea, and contrive a double avatāra in the family of Crishna to supply the chasm. But Budd'ha, while simply a devotee, wore the before-mentioned devotee's cap of curly hair, as proved by his images and pictures everywhere; and the long ears and flattened nose are not peculiar characteristics of Africans, for they are found in Assam, and provinces contiguous to the ancient Māgadha, and may have been common there also. A very simple explanation thus seems to be afforded of a knotty point, which it cost Sir W. Jones extraordinary pains and learning to endeavour to untie, in consequence of too hastily assuming that Budd'ha Sacya must have been an African, and without after all succeeding beyond mere hypothesis, crumbling at the simplest touch of the wand of truth.

"To return to the antiquities of Brambānam and other places, it appears to me, that, though there is apparent a sufficient mingling of relics having evident relation to Brahmanism, such as Siva's bull, figures of Ganēsa, and possibly of Dūrga; yet that the prevailing characteristics of the temples and relics seem Bauddhistic. I write doubtfully about Dūrga, because I nowhere discern her lion vehicle; and she seems to me to be rather trampling upon a cow, the emblem of Hinduism, than contending en face with the buffalo Mahisa, concerning which emblem there has been much fine-spun speculation among some writers of its emblemizing the abstract power of evil, with which Dūrga, or the abstract typification of virtue, is contending. Such a blending of Western with Oriental ideas has done much disservice to the cause of simple truth. I know no point of comparison whatever in which the sanguinary Dūrga can be duly made to represent the ideal personification of virtue incarnate on earth. She is the destroying power, in exertion, of the destroying deity, Siva; and the bull, or buffalo, Mahisa, I rather think, typifies the species of schism of the Bauddists, which, though it was like Hinduism at the outset, yet soon manifested a nature as diverse as the buffalo differs from the cow; and whereas Dūrga, on her lion, contending with the buffalo, might aptly typify the inveterate and hostile struggles (attended with no common destruction of life) of Brahmanism against Bauddhism, even so the reverse would not be inappropriate in Bauddhism being emblemized by a female, something like Dūrga, but differently armed, grasping in one hand the hair of a wretched Brahman, while in other hands weapons of destruction are flourished, and she tramples under foot the prostrate helpless cow, the emblem of the Brahmanical system. Such seems to me to be the rendering of the hieroglyphical sculptures found in Java; but I may possibly hypothematize, as well as others, and therefore do no more than place opinion in comparison with opinion."

A Correspondent, referring us to a fact, mentioned in the last files of Calcutta papers, of the fall of an aerolite, which buried itself some feet in the ground, whence it was exhumed by, and received divine honours from, the natives,—inquires whether the worship of large stones, or amorphous masses of rock, in different parts of India, may not be traced to this source. We have little doubt that a great deal of this absurd superstition may be, to a certain extent, rationalized by supposing that the original object of worship was a meteoric mass, the descent of which from the regions of the air might, with ignorant men, very excusably invest it with supernatural attributes and a divine character; and that, in process of time, the original having decayed or been removed, it might have been replaced by a lithic substitute of similar form. The Asiatic Society of Calcutta are in possession of a mass of meteoric iron, weighing 160 lbs., which had fallen near Monghyr, and had been worshipped by the natives in the vicinity for many years.

Colonel Rawlinson, in a paper read before the Royal Geographical Society on the 21st April, upon the identification of the Biblical cities of Assyria, and the geography of the Lower Tigris, gave some interesting explanations, from the cuneiform inscriptions, of the city of Nineveh, the ruins of Koyunjuk, Nabbi Yunas, Karamles, and Khorsabad. He identified Nemrood with Reheboth, a suburb of the large city of Alassar (the Larissa of Xenophon), as Koyunjuk and Khorsabad were suburbs of Nineveh. He gave a description of the great Nahrwan Canal of irrigation, constructed by Nushirvan, and the Chal-i-Nemrood, supposed to mark the Median wall of Xenophon, but which was only a dyke formed to collect the waters in a reservoir, whence the neighbouring lands could be irrigated. The Median wall was probably a part of the enceinte of Babylon. The ruins of Sekheriah marked the site of the Mesene of the Greeks. The bifurcation of the Tigris, he observed, had been very accurately described by Pliny. The river had changed its course several times. At the Christian era it was divided into two streams. Under the Sassanians, the left or eastern branch was alone navigable. In A.H. 7, the right-hand or western branch was reopened, while in the 15th century of our era the river took the form which it retains. The tract of country between the two arms, owing to its natural depression, had been always more or less subject to inundations, and boats had passed from Wasit to the Euphrates, along tracts artificially formed for them in the marshes. The character of the country was the same at the present day, and the Tigris, from the tomb of Abdullah Ibn Ali to Kurna, now ran in a channel formerly named the Abul Assad Canal, and which had been cleared out, under the Caliph Mansur, for the purposes of navigation. Below the confluence of the Tigris and Euphrates, Colonel Rawlinson showed that four cities had been successively built, as the sea had retired before the deposit of alluvium, to serve as commercial emporia. These cities were, the Havileh of Genesis, Beth Yakina of the Assyrian inscriptions, Tereдон of Nebuchadnezzar, and Obillah of the Sassanians. The increment of land about the delta could be chronologically traced, and was found since the commencement of the Christian era to have taken place at the very extraordinary rate of a mile in thirty years. Some account was then given of a famous city, named Taba Duniyas in the Assyrian inscriptions, thought to be Susa; and the paper closed with a notice of the two cities on the Haffar Canal, which had often been confounded, but were in reality distinct places. One had been formerly named Perath, or Perat di Misan, and more recently Bahmen Ardeshir, now corrupted to Bahmishir. The other was Spasinu Charas, first fortified by Alexander, which had been the capital of an independent state under the Parthian monarchy, and, having been named Kerkhi Misana (Charax of Meseue) and Costerabad by the Sassanians, and Mahezzi by the Asaba, was now represented by the port of Mahamrah.

Mr. Cherbonneau has translated from the Arabic into French a historical account of the dynasty of the Beni-Hafes, the sovereigns of the principality of Constantina, in Africa, from the 6th to the 8th centuries of the Hegira. In his notes he states that the two principal mosques of the city of Constantina under the dynasty of the Hafsites were the Jama al-Casba and the Jama al-Kebir. In visiting the latter, a vast edifice, he remarked, he says, that the sanctuary must have been constructed upon the ruins of an ancient Greek temple, the roof being supported by about forty stone columns of a Byzantine style of architecture. The six columns on each side the mihrab have Corinthian capitals, the elegant sculpture of which is, however, obliterated by the thick coat of lime which the Musulmans are accustomed to spread upon monuments, under the pretence of whitening them. One of the capitals has been scraped and cleaned, and its delicate foliage and ornaments attest the skill of the artists employed by Constantine in reconstructing the Cirtensian colony. Moreover, there is a Latin inscription upon a stone, worked into one of the minarets of the mosque, which is remarkable, as recording the fact that a Berber had been admitted, not only to the privileges of a Roman citizen, but to the offices of Edile and Questor. The inscription is as follows:—"Concordia coloniarum Cirtensium sacrum. C. Julius C. fil. Quir. Barbarus Quest. Ed. statum quam ob honorem Edilitatis pollicitus est sua pecunia posuit. D.D.D."

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

MONDAY, May 5, 1851.

INDIA, it appears, takes a prominent position in the magnificent spectacle now exhibited in this country to the gaze of the world. A list of her chief contributions to the specimens of the operative industry of mankind collected in the Crystal Palace shows that, whilst she is not behind many European nations in certain departments of the useful arts, her prime distinction consists in the display of her raw products, vegetable and mineral,—the chief sources of her wealth,—of some of which Nature, who has been most bountiful to her, has secured to her a monopoly. Her manufactures, though very few of them can rival the artistic finish of the European, are, perhaps, as objects of curiosity, more remarkable when we compare the means employed by the respective producers,—the rude looms and implements of the Eastern artizan, with the wonderful perfection of English machinery. The delicacy of those exquisite fabrics, the Dacca muslins,—a manufacture now almost extinct,—no modern nation has been able to attain; yet the looms that produced them were little more than a few sticks connected by the simplest contrivances, without even an expedient for rolling up the warp. From this contrast Mr. Mill drew one of his strongest arguments against the civilization of the Hindus. "While dexterity in the use of imperfect tools," he observes, "is not a proof of civilization, a great want of ingenuity and completeness in instruments and machinery is a strong indication of the reverse; nor would it be easy to point out any single circumstance which may be taken as a better index of the degree in which the benefits of civilization are anywhere enjoyed than the state of the tools and machinery of the artists."

Amongst the practical advantages likely to accrue from the congregation and juxta-position of specimens of man's skill, the most obvious is the stimulus which will be given to those nations in the rearward, by competition, and the suggestion of various inventions for shortening and economizing labour, and solving problems in mechanics and the arts. The exhibition of raw products, which are new or but little known, will afford stimuli and suggestions of a different kind. Crude products are the primary materials which science and mechanical skill convert to the purposes of commerce, and the wants, comforts, and luxuries of society; and the more their number is multiplied, the greater will be the resources of the manufacturer, and the variety and beauty of his productions. The amount of utility which has of late years been extracted from these materials is wonderful. We will refer, by way of example, to two foreign vegetable products, which, by mechanical and chemical agencies in this country, have been transformed into an almost infinite variety of articles, the uses of which are as important as they are extensive. A comparatively short time back, caoutchouc, or india rubber, was supposed to possess no other property than that of obliterating the marks of blacklead upon paper; it is now applied, in innumerable forms, to manufactures, from the cloak which it renders impervious to moisture, to bands for securing parcels. Gutta percha, again,—a purely Eastern product,—has been adopted to uses still more various and valuable.

The Indian raw commodities exhibited at the World's Fair will doubtless attract the notice of that class of practical philosophers who make the principles of science subservient to the improvement of the industrial arts and the manufactures of their country, and if any of those articles can be rendered more generally applicable to this object, whilst mankind in the gross will gain by the discovery, fresh impulses will be given to native industry, and new mines of commercial wealth be opened, in the country which yields them. For a long time to come, and until many important changes have been made in its social condition, India must continue to be an agricultural country,—a rich and inexhaustible source of those elementary materials which the artizan and manufacturer of other countries can turn to the uses of life, by working them up into objects to satisfy the exigencies of mankind at large; and all she wants, in addition to the demands of her own population, is an increasing market for the rude and semi-prepared productions of her luxuriant soil.

The names of the scientific men who have contributed their aid to this great experiment,—comprising some of the highest eminence in the various branches of practical knowledge,—afford not only a security for the fair adjudication of merit, but a pledge that nothing which, in a utilitarian point of view, can be converted to general benefit, will be overlooked; that the humble resins, dye-stuffs, oils, and earths of India, will not be eclipsed by the mechanical wonders of English industry, or by her own brocades and diamonds.

WHEN Sir John Hobhouse (now Lord Broughton) was asked in the House of Commons, on the 10th of February, whether her Majesty's Government intended to propose an inquiry, by a Select Committee, into East-India affairs, previous to the expiration of the Act of 1833, he replied distinctly in the negative, intimating at the same time that, if any material changes were contemplated in the system under which these affairs are now managed, timely notice would be given. The inference drawn from this answer was, that no change was meditated.

On the 3rd of April, after a crisis, and a discovery that the present ministers retain office rather through the weakness of the only party that can replace them than by any strength of their own, Lord John Russell qualified the ministerial declaration upon this point, by stating that, although there was no intention to appoint a Committee this session, the expediency of such a measure next session might depend upon circumstances.

If it were not vain to hope that the evidence taken by a fresh Committee would share a better fate than the multitude of volumes of evidence taken by previous Committees, which are, generally speaking, treated as mere lumber, read only by a very select few, we should be as impatient for an inquiry as any of those who inculcate the present system of Indian administration can possibly be, in order that they might obtain a little enlightenment upon this subject. Mr. Anstey, though somewhat confident and obtrusive, is a man of talent and industry; yet what a lamentable poverty of real information did he exhibit in his late motion for sending a Commission to India, to inquire into the operation of the system under which it was now governed! Alleged grievances, hackneyed and obsolete, either non-existent or removed, formed the ground of imputations against the Indian Government, which neither Mr. Hume nor Mr. Bright would venture to endorse. The latter, to be sure, more so, threw out suggestions of not a very complimentary kind against the head of the India Board, the local Government of India, the Court of Directors, and the unoffending proprietors of India Stock; but even Mr. Bright, who is "nothing if not critical," would not subscribe to Mr. Anstey's opinions, or support his motion.

The system of the Indian administration, the principles which regulate it, the machinery by which it is carried on, need no inquiry; they are patent. The question is, how far, theoretically and practically, they are susceptible of amendment; and this question can be decided by the Legislature, upon the evidence already at its command, without either Commission or Committee. There are, undoubtedly, matters involved in this question deserving of consideration, and none more than those upon which Mr. Bright dwelt, namely, the exorbitant power which has been absorbed by the head of the India Board, contrary, as would appear, to the design of Parliament at the last settlement; and the dispersion and practical absence of responsibility. Thus the freaks of an arbitrary President of the Board of Control would be expiated by the Court of Directors, who, indeed, deserve to be made the scape-goat, if Mr. Bright's "belief" be the fact, that the Directors "have no more personal interest, beyond the interest of the patronage they possess, in the government of India, than the directors of the Great Northern Railway."

When the fit time arrives, we shall not shrink from discussing these points.

Two cases before the highest native Indian tribunals,—one in the Nizamut Adawlut, or chief Criminal Court, of Bengal; the other in the Sudder Adawlut, or chief Civil Court, of Bombay,—reported in our present issue, claim attention, as well from the peculiarity of their incidents as for their importance.

In the first case, the late regimental moonshee of a native regiment was tried for writing a placard of a very inflammatory kind, with a view of exciting the sepoys of the regiment to mutiny and murder, and attaching it to a tree in the neighbourhood of the lines of the regiment, in order that it might be read, as it was read, by the sepoys. The placard, which enlarges upon the despotism of the English, accuses the European adjutant of the regiment of tyranny and corruption, and calls upon some man in the regiment to shoot him, or "stick him with his bayonet," which is held up as a praiseworthy deed,—killing a kafir and a tyrant being "like freeing the poor from misery." The prisoner, who had been recently dismissed from his office, was seen near the tree early in the morning when the placard was affixed to it; the adjutant deposed that he believed the writing to be the prisoner's; a piece of paper was found in the house inhabited by the prisoner and his father, which appeared to be part of the same sheet as that to which the placard belonged, and a packet of similar paper was also found there; some coarse pasteboard, similar to that on which the placard was pasted, was found in the house of an acquaintance of the prisoner, and the writing on the placard resembled that on papers admitted to have been written by the prisoner.

The defence was, that the whole was a conspiracy, got up against the prisoner in consequence of a religious dispute; but the Sessions Judge, upon the facts proved and the handwriting, held the prisoner's guilt to be established.

The Judge of the Court of Appeal, however, took a very different view of the case. He doubted whether such a mode of incitement, without personal influence, was within the meaning of the law; but, independently of this, he was of opinion that the offence lay, not in the mere writing of the placard, but in the writing coupled with the giving publicity to it, and the evidence did not satisfy him that the prisoner was a party to the attaching of the placard to the tree. He accordingly acquitted him.

When we bear in mind how difficult it is to rely upon native oral evidence in India, the strength of the presumption arising from the circumstantial proof, and that the circumstances proved leave little doubt that the prisoner was the writer of the placard, it will appear to many that Mr. Colvin strained the technical objection too far. It being, however, on the side of mercy, his scruples are not to be condemned.

The other case originated in a suit by a Hindu convert to Christianity to recover possession of his son, a boy of seven years of age, from his own wife, the son's mother, she having separated from him since his conversion. The Sudder Ameen,—whether a Hindu or a Musulman does not appear,—was of opinion, upon the ground of natural equity, there being no positive law to the contrary, that the father, by adopting Christianity, had committed no act which forfeited his natural right to the guardianship of his son, which he accordingly decreed to him. The Zillah Judge, an Englishman, however, reversed this decree, holding that, by the Hindu law, a Brahmin, renouncing his religion, forfeited all his civil rights, and amongst them the guardianship of his children.

The Appellate Court was not called upon to decide the question upon the state of facts in the Court below, but, applying the wholesome law of 1850, which enacts that no person renouncing his or her religion shall forfeit any civil rights, determined that the appellant, notwithstanding his renunciation of Hinduism, was entitled to all the rights and privileges of a parent.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SIR,—A most erroneous statement, regarding the support received by this Club from the members in the Bengal presidency, having appeared in your last number, copied from the Friend of India, and by that paper from the Mofussilite, which is calculated to mislead, if not contradicted, I am instructed by the committee of management to furnish you with the following particulars, feeling assured that you will be glad to correct any error inadvertently circulated in your journal.

The number of members in the Bengal presidency, on the 31st of December last, was 921, of which only 18 were wholly in arrears, the remainder having entirely, or to a great extent, paid their subscriptions to that date, while upwards of 90 have paid half the donation.

The Club is relatively even better supported in the adjoining presidencies, the entire service in India furnishing a list of 2,293 paying members.

Apologizing for this intrusion on your time,

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

BUNBURY TAYLOR, Sec.

East-India United Service Club,
14, St. James's Square, 28th April, 1851.

INDIA'S CONTRIBUTION TO THE GREAT EXHIBITION.

The contribution of India to the stock of materials provided for the entertainment of the representatives of nations meeting at the World's Fair, is, compared with that of many European states, very respectable in point of quantity. The number of packages is 446. The articles include the following:—Specimens of coal, carbonate of soda, potter's clay wrought into forms of great beauty, blacklead from the Himalayas, and wootz steel; samples of wheat, barley, and oats, rice and pulses; dried fruits; opium, tobacco, and bang; fermented liquors and distilled spirits, one of the latter (20° over-proof) made from the bassia latifolia, which yields a dye as well as a vegetable oil; substitutes for arrowroot and starch; sugar in its various forms; gums and mucilaginous products, including the soap-nut, resins, &c.; native manufactures in gutta percha; fatty and solid vegetable oils, and essential oils and perfumes, one of which is the kus-kus grass, with baskets made of it in elegant shapes; dyes, the most remarkable being a black vegetable dye from Nepal, which is unalterable; tanning and medicinal substances; clothing and cordage materials; substitutes for flax and hemp, with specimens of manufactures, especially in rope and paper; timber and fancy woods; a fine display of horns; a large fish, capable of yielding isinglass; edible birds'-nests, &c. The manufactured articles consist of goldsmiths' work, and works in metals, ivory, pottery, and mosaics; Cashmere shawls, carpets of silk, muslins wrought with silver and gold, kincobs or Benares brocade, mats, &c.; a native bed from Lahore; a huge tent manufactured by the reformed Thugs at Jubbulpore; fans, toys, models of houses, temples, and nautical vessels of every description; representations of public spectacles, and the costumes, habits, and implements of the various grades of the working classes of India; rich elephant-trappings; utensils of metal, some of which are said to rival in purity of design and gracefulness of form the best specimens of Etruscan vases; stone dishes, and marble couches; ornamental wood-work of surprising lightness and elegance; cutlery, gold and silver filigree work, bracelets, and chains as flexible as silken cords; warlike instruments; tools of trades, including the Dacca loom, and the distillery apparatus for attar of roses; lastly, the Lahore jewels, and the wonderful koh-i-noor.

GREAT INDIAN PENINSULAR RAILWAY.

The half-yearly meeting of this company was held on the 30th ult.; Lord Wharncliffe in the chair.

Mr. Nicholson read the report, which stated that, since the last half-yearly meeting, the works between Bombay and Tannah have been let to responsible English contractors, upon terms considerably below the estimate of the engineer; that the works are in active operation, and there is no reason to doubt will be satisfactorily completed within the period specified in the contract,—September, 1852,—and that the native labourers manifest considerable facility in adapting themselves to the new modes of labour. It has been resolved, upon the determination of the East-India Company, to construct the railway upon the gauge of 5 feet 6 inches, intermediate between the broad and narrow gauges; and that, for the present, the railway shall be limited to a single line of rails (making the masonry sufficient for a double line), until the development of traffic renders a double line necessary. The accounts to the 31st of December last show that 252,870*l.* had been received, and 47,834*l.* expended, leaving a balance in hand of 205,036*l.* The total receipts during the half-year amounted to 120,811*l.*, and the disbursements to 11,896*l.*

The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the report and accounts, stated that the East-India Company and the Board of Control had acted in the most friendly manner towards the Company; the Government of India had behaved with the utmost liberality; they had given the Company possession of almost the whole of the land required for the railway, and sanctioned the placing the terminus in a satisfactory position, near the harbour of Bombay, at a place most conveniently situated. The East-India Company had expressed an opinion in favour of the narrow, or 4 feet 8½ inch, gauge for the railways in India; but a wider gauge being deemed more advisable in India, they determined upon a gauge of 5½ feet. The line extended from Bombay to Callian,—thirty-five miles. It was at first intended that it should be double, but considering that it was an experimental one, they suggested that it should be a single line, with bridges, &c., for a double line, thus saving earthworks and rails, with a view to enable the Company by this means to extend the single line beyond Callian, so as to meet the points where they may obtain considerable traffic; and the East-India Company had consented to this arrangement. By executing the line under the estimates, and reducing the quantity of works, they would have a surplus which would enable them to extend the line to one of the three passes of the Ghauts,—namely, the Bhor, Malsej, and Thul Ghauts. They proposed to extend the line from Callian to the Thul, either as a branch line or as part of the main line. Through the Thul Ghaut there was a good road, and a large amount of traffic, which, if they could carry the line up to this point, they might obtain. As to the other two passes, they must leave the question to be decided by the engineers at present surveying the district. Col. Grant was in favour of the route by the Bhor Ghaut, and Mr. Chapman recommended that by the Malsej. The traffic by the Thul amounted to 70,000 tons per annum, and that, with other matters, formed a sufficient reason for carrying the line up to that point, which was about eight miles from Callian. On the whole, he considered their prospects to be very encouraging.

Col. Grant, in seconding the adoption of the report, said that, although the route mentioned by the chairman differed from that he had originally proposed, he would give his cordial support in carrying it out. It would be advisable to charge lower rates for the conveyance of cotton than they proposed, to make the lines as direct as they could, and at the least possible expense. By extending the line from near Callian, in the direction of the Bhor Ghaut, as well as that towards the Thul, they would secure both the south-east and the north-east traffic.

Mr. Tite believed that the narrow gauge was too narrow, and the broad gauge too wide; so that something between the two was what they ought to adopt. He hoped, however, that there would be no mixture of gauge allowed in India, as it was productive of considerable inconvenience in this country.

Resolutions were passed adopting the report, and re-electing the retiring directors, Lord Wharmcliffe, Mr. Ayrton, Mr. Frith, Mr. Malet, and Lieut. col. Melvill, and also the retiring auditor, Mr. Anderton.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE DIRECTION.—In the list of the Directors of the East India Company for the year 1851, published in our last issue (p. 241), the Committees to which Major General Caulfeild and William Dent, Esq., are appointed are transposed; the letters prefixed to the former name should have been FH, and to the latter PM.

THE HEDGE-PLANTS OF INDIA.—Dr. H. F. C. Cleghorn, in a paper on this subject, published in the Annals of Natural History for October, observes that they are obviously preferable to every other mode of protecting agricultural produce in a climate like that of India, so that the subject is truly important: "Large tracts, consisting of many acres together, wholly or partially uncultivated, and the frequent occurrence of seasons of scarcity, attest the still neglected state of Indian agriculture; while the remains of quickset hedges, decayed terraces, and ruined wells, in many parts convey the impression that irrigation and husbandry in remote ages had been practised more assiduously than by the present generation. One of the obstacles to improvement we believe to be, that, from the time the grain appears above ground till the harvest is gathered in, the ryot has to watch his field; but as many wild hogs and other animals infest the neighbouring jungle, this watching is difficult and often ineffectual, and hinders the farmer from extending his operations. We know, too, from the official return on cotton culture in India, and from the testimony of many collectors and other observers, that great devastation takes place annually from herds of antelopes and thousands of heads of cattle which migrate or are driven from place to place in particular seasons. The wild animals are being destroyed in large numbers, and as cultivation extends will find no shelter, while the damage occasioned by stray bullocks could be prevented by encouraging a more general system of field enclosures. A season of peace and tranquillity has, in providence, succeeded to times of anarchy and confusion; and it behoves us to use every effort for developing the resources of those vast countries, and securing the best interests of the many millions committed to our care for higher and nobler ends than our own aggrandizement."

ASSAM TEA COMPANY.—The annual meeting of this company took place on Friday last. In a highly favourable report, the directors recommended that the present surplus profits should not be applied to a dividend, but that all available funds be laid out in extending the existing cultivation. This recommendation was generally concurred in, as were also certain arrangements which had been made in connection with a reduction of the number of directors. With regard to the financial position of the Company it is remarked, that the whole of the debt to the bankers of 7,000*l.* has been paid off, and that the directors count upon being nearly 12,000*l.* better on September 30, 1851, than in May, 1850, they estimated as their position on September 30, 1850. The state of the cultivation was reported in the Bengal intelligence contained in this journal a few numbers back.

PROFESSOR H. H. WILSON.—At a special meeting of the subscribers to the Oriental Translation Fund, on the 26th ult., the gold medal adjudicated to Mr. H. H. Wilson, Boden Professor of Sanscrit at Oxford, was presented to that gentleman, on behalf of the Committee, by the Duke of Northumberland, who presided, and who stated that this award was a token of the Committee's high appreciation of Mr. Wilson's eminent services to Oriental literature, and especially of his translation of the Vishnu Purāna. Since the adjudication of this medal, the King of Hanover has presented Mr. Wilson with a gold medal, as a mark of his Majesty's approbation of his labours.

AMONGST THE OBJECTS to which the attention of visitors to the metropolis may be directed, we may include the National Institution of Fine Arts, at the Portland Gallery, Regent Street, which contains a fine collection of more than 400 pictures by modern artists, many of them of extraordinary merit; and the Gallery of Arts, Sloane Street, where Major Paribry delivers lectures upon astronomy, illustrated by pictorial representations, and upon the pendulum experiment supposed to prove the diurnal rotation of the earth.

THE SHIP Constantine has been engaged for the conveyance of stores to Calcutta, and the Barrackpore for the like purpose to Bombay.

No fewer than 2,000 marriages were solemnized in Surat, on the 20th February last, among one single class of the population, besides 1,500 more among the remainder. It appears that the Koolbees, who form a large proportion of the inhabitants of Surat, never perform a marriage until they have obtained an oracular response from one of the great shrines of Gooserat; and this response is sometimes delayed for twelve years. When it does come, therefore, all the marriageable portion of the community take advantage of the happy event.

BOOKS.

Sketch of Mairwara; giving a brief Account of the Origin and Habits of the Mairs, their Subjugation by a British Force, their Civilization, and Conversion into an industrious Peasantry; with Descriptions of various Works of Irrigation in Mairwara and Ajmeer, constructed to facilitate the Operations of Agriculture, and guard the Districts against Drought and Famine. Illustrated with maps, plans, and views. By LIEUTENANT-COLONEL C. G. DIXON, Bengal Artillery, Superintendent Ajmeer and Mairwara, &c. London, 1850. Smith, Elder, and Co.

Those who are interested in the progress of the human race, and desire to see such portions of it as have fallen into the rearward of civilization brought towards the rank they once occupied; those who find pleasure in following the steps by which wild and indolent men are led into habits of order and industry; and those who still believe that British rule has done little to improve the character and condition of the people of India, may derive gratification and instruction from this work, which is the most striking of its class since the appearance of Colonel Tod's Annals of Rajasthan, to which it bears some similitude.

Mairwara, or, as the natives term it, Mugra, is a tract of country which forms a portion of the Arabala (otherwise Aravalli) chain of hills running from Guzerat to near Delhi; it is bounded by Ajmeer to the north, and separates Meywar on the east from Marwar on the west, the hill possessions of Meywar lying to the south of it; the length of the tract, from north-east to south-west, being about 100 miles, its breadth never exceeding 25 or 30. The country is for the most part a mass of hills, intersected with small vales; there are no rivers; the rain descends from the hills in the form of mountain torrents. The soil, composed of the debris of the hills, is extremely fertile; but the portion of the country now most productive was, before the subjugation of the Mairs, a dense jungle, infested by wild beasts, and scarcely ever traversed by man.

The Mairs, few of whom can read or write, and who trust for their historical antecedents to their bhats, or bardic chroniclers, claim descent from Prithee Raj, of the Chohan tribe of Rajpoots, who reigned in Ajmeer in the 12th century. This prince was a systematic freebooter, who, in one of his marauding expeditions, carried off a girl from Boondie, in the Kotah country, whom he gave in marriage to his son, and from this union sprang these hill clans, those professing the Hindoo religion being denominated Mairs, and those who have lapsed into Mahomedanism Mehtrats. Their numbers have, however, been greatly recruited by refugees from the neighbouring states, who adopted the mongrel faith and wild usages of their new associates.

The Mairs seem to have inherited the predatory spirit of their ancestor, and soon became formidable to the Rajpoot principalities which adjoined the hilly strip of territory they inhabited, whence they could make rapid incursions, escaping with their plunder into their rugged fastnesses. On these occasions they never chose a leader; their arrangements were systematic, but in the execution all were equal, and shared alike in the booty. The villages in the plains of Marwar and Meywar, most exposed to their inroads, purchased an immunity therefrom by the payment of black-mail. The raids of the Mairs were not accompanied by unnecessary cruelty; their arms were matchlock, sword, and spear, which they never used, however, except in cases of absolute necessity. Their rules forbade them to rob a Brahman, a woman, or a fakir; and they never willingly attacked armed men or soldiers.

This systematic land-piracy interfered seriously with trade, which was compelled to perform wide circuits to avoid the hills; and the large states of Rajpootana made various attempts, singly and by combination, to subjugate the Mairs; but they not only failed, but in some cases exposed the assailants to severe reverses. Colonel Dixon enumerates several formidable expeditions against the tribes of Mairwara, which had no other effect upon them than to increase their confidence in their impregnable hills. The latest attempt was in 1816, when the forces of the Rana of Oudeypoor were defeated with great loss, and the chief of Bhugwanpoora was killed. "Thus, in the very heart of hostile states," observes Colonel Dixon, "without rulers or leaders, did these bold freebooters remain unsubdued, and not only did not pay a kowrie of revenue, but levied black-mail with no sparing hand."

A small force of British sepoy, conducted with European skill, accomplished with little loss what native princes, with undisciplined thousands, had vainly attempted. Early in 1818, Sir D. Ochterlony marched into Rajpootana to disperse Ameer Khan's forces, expel the Mahrattas, and settle the country. His attention being called to the plundering excursions of the Mairs, by a series of well-concerted operations, which Colonel Dixon has detailed, in the beginning of 1821, a comparatively small detachment brought the whole of Mairwara completely into subjection, and it has remained so ever since.

Colonel Dixon shows the extensive and lasting advantages which have accrued from the reduction of the Mairs, by a review of the means they commanded when in the zenith of their power, in the course of which he describes their religion,—a bastard Hindooism,—and their customs, including witchcraft, the sale of women, female infanticide, and slavery. These customs have been abolished. He next adverts to the arrangements consequent upon the subjugation of the country, ending in the establishment, for the first time, of a regular government throughout the tract. A Mair corps was formed, which became a useful agent in the putting down of disorder and the civilization of the people; a system of civil and criminal justice was substituted for the wild practices of these rude and warlike tribes, amongst whom the sword decided disputes and repaired wrongs, and every man stood upon his own strength or that of his kindred. He then enters upon the details of the agricultural improvements commenced by Colonel Hall, under whose political agency the ameliorations already alluded to were prosecuted during thirteen years of undivided attention to the affairs of the district, and which were admirably carried out by Colonel Dixon, as superintendent, who succeeded him in 1835.

The history of these changes, which converted the wild tribes of these hills from robbers into cultivators, inducing them to exchange an uncertain predatory life for settled habits of honest labour and thrift,—an arduous, as well as a tedious and trying undertaking,—is related with great minuteness by Colonel Dixon, and should be diligently studied by those who have similar objects in view. The measures taken to secure a proper supply of water in such a mountainous district; to bind the people to the soil, and attach them to regular government; to bring waste and jungle lands into cultivation; to locate occupants so as to prevent feuds between rival clans; and in particular for the building of a new town, called Nya Nuggur, of the foundation of which Colonel Dixon gives a very interesting account;—all these matters are detailed with minuteness and perspicuity. The new town, which has now a population of 1,955 families, is the seat of manufactures and a thriving trade, its cotton cloths supplying not only Rajpootana, but Sinde and Mooltan. It has ten schools, ten mundurs for the Hindoos, and two musjids for the Mahomedans.

The result of the British administration of this district is, that 290 tank embankments have been constructed, besides 23 weirs, submerging 26,549 beegahs (each equal to 1,764 square yards) with water, and affording the ability for maintaining 40,680 beegahs of cultivation; that between 1835-36 and 1846-47 there has been an increase of 3,915 wells, 6,979 ploughs, 2,065 narees, and of 60,634 souls in the population. A fact not less satisfactory is, that, during the last eleven years, the sums expended on works of irrigation amount to Rs. 2,41,112, whilst the excess of revenue beyond the jumma of the first year of the present incumbent's superintendence in 1835-36 is Rs. 6,41,234. "After reimbursing ourselves for the outlay on public works," Colonel Dixon observes, "there is a surplus gain of Rs. 4,00,121; this large amount is our gain in a pecuniary point of view; as far as affects the moral improvement of the people, the advantages are beyond calculation."

The rest of the work is occupied with highly interesting descriptions of the formation of the tank embankments, illustrated with plans and plates, financial details, &c.

Cape of Good Hope Government and Legislature considered. London. Ridgway.

THIS bulky pamphlet is a reprint of various articles,—leaders, letters of correspondents, memorials, addresses, documents, &c.,—which have appeared in the Cape Monitor, a newspaper which was commenced in October last, with a view of counterpoising the influence of the opposition or Anti-English papers (under which designation, we believe, may be comprised nearly all the other journals), and which is now considered the Government organ. The preface to this pamphlet,—which is dated "Cape Town, February 1st,"—describes a state of things which certainly called for an attempt of this kind, and should moderate our confidence in the South-African journals, as the real exponents of public opinion in the colony:—

"During the anti-convict agitation at the Cape, the local press was the most absolute tyranny which ever attempted to gag a fair expression of opinion. Printers were censors, and the power of a veto on any article seemed to lie with the compositor. The only editor in Cape Town, who at the time attempted to express an opinion contrary to the leaders of the agitation, received notice from his printer that he could not print such articles; and the editor in question was compelled, with much risk and inconvenience, to purchase type and press for his own use. Up to this period, contradictions to assertions, boldly and unblushingly made in the columns of the ultra papers, were refused insertion; although the most violent and unconstitutional articles, teeming with abuse of those in authority, were put forth as if they expressed the general opinion. It is notorious,—it has not been denied,—it has been openly admitted by some of the Cape Town newspapers, that they do, on principle, refuse to give a place in their columns to communications opposed to their own or to their party's views."

The chief subject of discussion in these articles is the scheme of government suitable for the colony,—the concession of representative institutions having thrown it into violent commotion,—the choice being betwixt the constitutions proposed by seven members of the Legislative Council, called the Government Commissioners, and by four popularly-elected members of the Council, who resigned their seats rather than concur with the others, formed themselves into a Board, and prepared an opposition constitution upon a more democratical basis.

Odes of Petrarch. Translated into English verse by CAPTAIN R. G. MACGREGOR, late of the Bengal Artillery. Smith, Elder, and Co.

CAPTAIN MACGREGOR has very closely rendered the "meta-physical" love strains of the Italian laureate, contained in his Canzoni, Ballate, Sestine and Madrigali, and the Trionfo della Morte, which, as he observes, illustrates better than any other of his pieces the footing upon which Petrarch stood with Laura, who could scarcely have been, as some pretend, a married woman with a large family!

This Society offers a lower and more economical scale of Premiums for Life Assurance than hitherto demanded by the established Offices in India.

Annual Premium for assuring 1,000 rupees:—

CIVIL.			MILITARY AND NAVAL.
Age.	With Profits.	Without Profits.	Age.	With Profits.	Without Profits.
20	Rs. 33	Rs. 31	20	Rs. 38	Rs. 35
30	38	35	30	44	41
40	49	45	40	53	49
50	63	59	50	66	61
60	82	77	60	84	79

All holders of Policies in India on the Profit scale, who may have paid five annual premiums, will be entitled, at the expiration of the fifth year, to a year's profit, calculated on the average of the preceding five years; such profit to be paid in cash, or to go in diminution of the future premiums payable, or to be added to the sum assured by the policy, at the option of the holder, after the calculation of the profits shall have been made in London.

After the expiration of 1851, the profits will be declared annually, and the payers of five complete annual premiums be regularly entitled to a participation therein, with a like option as to the mode of application.

Parties assured in India for Life shall, on their return to England for a permanency, and on the first half-yearly premium becoming due, be entitled to come upon the English rates of premium, and be placed under the rules and conditions of the Society there obtaining.

All parties assured for Life, or for terms other than for Life, whatever the number of payments, or the permanency or otherwise of their residence in Europe, shall, after completing a full year from the date of their quitting India, and on the first half-yearly premium thereafter becoming due, be entitled to a reduction of their premium to the English rates, such reduced rates being continued during their further residence in Europe.

Notices of Assignments of Policies will be duly registered at the Office of the Secretaries.

The Society also grants ENDOWMENTS and DEFERRED ANNUITIES for India, the Tables for which, with full information, may be had at the Office of the Family Endowment Society, No. 12, Chatham Place; or at the Office of the Secretaries in Calcutta, Messrs. GORDON, STUART, and Co.

HOWARD ON THE LOSS OF TEETH, and on a new method of FASTENING LOOSE TEETH.—A very curious invention connected with Dental Surgery has been introduced by Mr. Howard, consisting of an entirely new description of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, fixed by SELF-ADHESION, without springs, wires, or ligatures. They will never change colour or decay. This method does not require the extraction of any teeth or roots, or any painful operation. The invention is of importance to many persons, and those interested in it should read this Treatise.

HAILEYBURY COLLEGE.—A Married Clergyman.

M.A. of Oxford, who has long prepared for the preliminary examination with marked success, will have vacancies after Christmas for pupils above 13 and under 17 years of age. His system of instruction ensures the most rapid progress. The judicious course of study required by the H.E.L.C. of candidates for Haileybury is equally desirable for general students, but in case of such applicants, the recommendation of a Director or Member of Parliament is required.

Address Rev. H. M. A., Messrs. W. H. Allen & Co., 7, Leadenhall Street.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS are a

UNIVERSAL REMEDY for OLD WOUNDS and OBSTINATE SORES.—Mr. John Mackie, proprietor of the Northern Echo, Wick, informs Professor Holloway, by letter, dated 3rd April, 1851, that he is aware of numerous instances in which Holloway's Ointment and Pills have been of the greatest service to sufferers in that part of the country, more especially as regards wounds of long standing, and that he could, if permitted, give the names of many respectable parties who have been entirely cured by their use. No family should be without a supply of these excellent medicines, which are so justly celebrated throughout the civilized world.

Sold by all Druggists, and at Professor Holloway's establishment, 244, Strand, London; and by all European and Native vendors of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

VARICOSE VEINS, WEAKNESS, FRACTURES, SPRAINS, &c.

HUXLEY'S SURGICAL CAOUTCHOUC ELASTIC STOCKINGS, KNEE-CAPS, &c. are now daily patronized by all the leading members of the profession. Their superiority over every other fabric for artificial support is admitted by all who inspect them. They afford an equal, comforting, and permanent pressure on every portion of the limb, and are drawn on with the facility of an ordinary stocking. H. and Co. guarantee a comfort and support hitherto unknown in any other form of bandage. It is well known that all kinds of Surgical Stockings lately used have a tendency to impede the free and healthy action of the muscles, thereby producing relaxation and great diminution of the limb. Only to be obtained at HUXLEY'S Parian Shirt Warehouse, 5, Vere Street, Cavendish Square.

EAST-INDIA AGENCY.

C. R. THOMPSON & Co., WINCHESTER HOUSE,
OLD BROAD STREET, LONDON,
And 10, ORIENTAL PLACE, SOUTHAMPTON.

The following are the objects to which the Agency is more particularly devoted:—

TO COMMISSION and Agency Business generally, whether intrusted to them by Civil or Military Officers of the Queen's or East-India Company's Services, or by Regiments, they give prompt and careful personal attention.

THE SUPERINTENDENCE of Outfits of every kind, securing Passages, shipping and insuring Baggage and Goods of every description, for all persons proceeding to India, or other part of the East, either by the Overland Route, via Marseilles or Southampton, or by the Sea Voyage.

THE RECEIPT of Letters from or for India or elsewhere, and their transmission by the first opportunity.

THE DESPATCH, from our London Offices of Parcels, for all parts of India, China, Ceylon, &c., by the Overland Route, on the 17th of each month; as well as the clearing and forwarding from Southampton of Passengers, Baggage, and Parcels, arriving home by the Steamers.

THE EXECUTION, on the best terms, of Orders of every description from India, especially those for Wines and Spirits, of which they keep in their Cellars a choice collection of every variety, expressly for their Indian Customers.

THE RECEPTION of the Wives and Children of Civil and Military Officers arriving from India, the Clearance of their Baggage, and its despatch to their destinations, and the placing of Children at Schools, whereat, according to the instructions and wishes of their Parents, the best education and training will be secured to them. The Receipt of Remittances for them while at home, and payment of Bills on their account.

THE RECEIPT also of Civil and Military Pay, Pensions, Annuities, Dividends, &c., by Power of Attorney; with the Execution of any other Business at the India House, Bank of England, or elsewhere.

Drafts and Letters of Credit on Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay, granted for large or small sums.

Remittances, or reference for payment, will be necessary from those who have no open account with them.

FOR PASSAGES to INDIA, CHINA, AUSTRALIA, and the CAPE.—The experience of upwards of 20 years enables Messrs. Grindlay and Co. to afford the best information, advice, and assistance to parties about to proceed to the above places, either via the Cape, Southampton, or the Continent.

GRINDLAY AND CO.,

63, Cornhill; 14, Bishopsgate Street; and 8, St. Martin's Place, Charing Cross.

OVERLAND PARCELS and PACKAGES at very reduced rates to INDIA, Ceylon, and China, 17th of every month. Periodicals from 1s. and parcels from 1s. upwards; also goods and parcels by steam and sailing vessels to all parts of the globe with economy, punctuality, and despatch. Passages engaged, baggage shipped, insurances effected, and fullest information given. Circulars of the routes via Southampton, Marseilles, and Trieste, gratis.—GEO. W. WHEATLEY and Co. (late Waghorn and Co.), Oriental and General Agents, 156, Leadenhall Street, and Universal Office, Regent Circus.

EAST-INDIA UNITED SERVICE AGENCY,
53, CHARING CROSS, and 25, SPRING GARDENS.

MAJOR R. D. WHITE (twenty-nine years in the Bengal Army) will be happy to receive gentlemen connected with India and the Colonies, or attend to their written communications.

Passages secured by Sea or overland; Houses or Apartments engaged; Regimental Messes; Wines and Stores; Outfits, &c., supplied; and every description of Agency business transacted.

No charge for subscription to the Agency or Rooms, but every information furnished.

HOME FOR YOUNG CHILDREN.

TWO LADIES, residing with their widowed mother, who have lately relinquished the charge of a young family of Indian children, are desirous to undertake a similar responsibility, or that of two or three separate children, from one year old, to whom a most comfortable home, with every care, would be afforded.

The house is in a very healthy locality, in Devonshire, and has a good garden, with access to an extensive pleasure-ground.—Most respectable references and testimonials given.

Address, L. L., to the care of Mr. VISCOK, Chemist, High Street, Exeter.
A lady could be received as boarder.

TWO LADIES.—The high and universal celebrity which ROWLANDS' KALYDOR continues to maintain as an active, yet mild and soothing, extirpator of all impurities of the skin, is, during the period of Spring, most pleasingly evinced. This preparation, eminently balsamic, restorative, and invigorating, is equally distinguished for safety in application, as for unfailing efficacy in eradicating all redness, tan, pimples, spots, freckles, discolorations, and other cutaneous visitations. The radiant bloom it imparts to the cheek, and the softness and delicacy which it induces on the hands and arms, render it indispensable to every toilet. To ladies during the period of nursing, and as a wash for infants, it cannot be too strongly recommended. Gentlemen, after shaving, will find it allay all irritation and tenderness of the skin, and render it soft, smooth, and pleasant. Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle.

ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL, for the growth, and for preserving, improving, and beautifying the human hair. Price 3s. 6d. and 7s.; family bottles (equal to four small), 10s. 6d., and double that size, 21s. per bottle.

ROWLANDS' ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE, for preserving and beautifying the teeth, strengthening the gums, and for rendering the breath sweet and pure. Price 3s. 6d. per box.

Beware of SPURIOUS IMITATIONS.—The only genuine of each bears the name of "ROWLANDS," preceding that of the article, on the wrapper or label. Sold by them at 20, Hatton Garden, London; and by chemists and perfumers.

KIDSTON'S MECHANICAL LEECH.

WM. KIDSTON and Co., 18, Bishopsgate Street Without, London, in directing the attention of the medical profession to their newly-invented instrument, termed "Kidston's Mechanical Leech," think it would be superfluous and presumptuous to make any comment in its behalf, further than drawing their attention to the testimonials in its favour, published in the "Lancet" of September 28, and in the Pharmaceutical Journal for October.

Full instructions for use will accompany the instruments.
Price per set of instruments,—i.e. three "Leeches," or Vacuum Glasses, with Puncturing Instrument electro plated, in neat morocco case, complete,—£2. 5s.

EMIGRATION AND COLONIZATION.

IMMIGRATION being much required in AUSTRALIA, NEW ZEALAND, &c., and as the supposed expense of an OUTFIT often prevents individuals emigrating, S. W. SILVER and Co., CLOTHIERS, OUTFITTERS, and CONTRACTORS (having a large interest to maintain in those Colonies), have been advised to make known that they can supply a comfortable OUTFIT, including Bedding, for MALE or FEMALE Emigrants, from Four Pounds (net) upwards, or less (Two Pounds if needful, and for Children in proportion, at No. 4, BISHOPSGATE STREET WITHIN (opposite the London Tavern), where lists will be given on application.

S. W. S. & Co., being the makers of nearly every article in all the Outfits they supply, and as one of their objects is to promote EMIGRATION, they neither receive from Agents, or pay the too usual commission to any person introducing Passengers to be fitted out, so that the Passage and Outfit may be procured at the least possible expense; but they will, on application, advise Passengers how to obtain the most economic passage to the Colonies. They have a Representative in every Australian Colony, to whom they ship Clothing monthly; thus they would forward small parcels free of expense.

NAVAL and MILITARY OFFICERS, MIDSHIPMEN, CADETS, CIVILIANS, LADIES, &c., are outfitted as heretofore, at the CARIN-PASSENGER OUTFITTING Warehouse, Nos. 66 and 67, CORNHILL (the Emigration Outfitting being exclusively at No. 4, BISHOPSGATE STREET WITHIN), LONDON, and each branch at ST. GEORGE'S CRESCENT, LIVERPOOL.

DRAFTS and LETTERS of CREDIT on CALCUTTA, MADRAS, and BOMBAY, are granted by Messrs. GRINDLAY & Co., in sums to suit the convenience of applicants, without any charge for commission. Also, CIRCULAR LETTERS of CREDIT for Travellers on the Continent, available in every principal town in Europe.

WORKS BY DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D.

Professor of Oriental Languages at King's College, &c.

A DICTIONARY, HINDUSTANI AND ENGLISH, To which is added, a Reversed Part, ENGLISH AND HINDUSTANI.

"If condensation and definiteness, if due distinction between the provinces of a grammarian and lexicographer, if to avoid faults, to reject things of a doubtful utility, to supply deficiencies, and to do all this with a determination that typography, paper, and price shall be unexceptionable; if these in combination be a recommendation to an author and his work, then Dr. Forbes's Dictionary is fully worthy of the patronage of the patrons and students of Hindustani literature."—FRIEND OF INDIA, published at Serampore, Oct. 19, 1848.

whatever to the appointment, nor did he intend to offer any, and that his former message was designed to express Guneish Row's opinion of his own incompetency.

A report had been received from Major Lang, intimating the entire extinction of the practice of infanticide in Katiawar.

A Calcutta Government Gazette Extraordinary was published on the 7th April, announcing that the 5 per cent. loan was closed on that date at all three presidencies. The 4 per cent. loan would remain open.

"We beg our readers' attention," says the Englishman, "to the reports of two cases lately before the Supreme Court, which arose out of the affairs of the unfortunate Union Bank. The first of these shows clearly the manner in which the property of the shareholders was sacrificed to the necessities of the managers. The other lays open a little more of a transaction which has frequently been the subject of comment, namely, an enormous speculation in the shares of the Bank by some of the directors, and others, their dupes. The object of the directors was plain enough; it was only by keeping up the market price of shares that they could prevent persons who had lent them money on their stock from insisting on immediate repayment. But how they could persuade others to join them in paying a thousand rupees and upwards per share, at the time when the Bank was hopelessly involved, and its real position might have been known to any one who thought it worth while to inquire, is a mystery, which surpasses our skill to explain." We have inserted these reports under the proper head.

At Bombay, the cutting and embanking of the railway was rapidly advancing. A common sewer, 3 miles long, 11 feet deep, and 20 across, floored and built of stone, and vaulted over with brick, was in process of construction. A breakwater, 850 feet in length, 120 feet across at the foundation, and 30 betwixt the parapets, was advancing rapidly towards completion: it was begun in 1847. Other improvements were being made in the suburbs of the fort: three new wells are being sunk; water-pipes are in the course of laying down; tanks are deepened and cleansed. There are supposed to be no fewer than 5,000 work-people at present employed at the public charge, 3,000 by the Board of Conservancy alone.

CASUALTIES BY DEATH IN THE ARMIES OF INDIA REPORTED SINCE OUR LAST PUBLICATION.

H.M.'s FORCES.—Capt. Fenwick, Ceylon Rifles, on board the Statesman, on his passage home from China, aged 35, Dec. 30.

BENGAL.—Asst. surg. J. S. T. Symons, of the Ferozepore regt. at Meerut, April 4.

MADRAS.—Maj. gen. Sir Wm. Morison, K.C.B., M.P., of the art, in Saville-row, May 15.

Lieut. Forbes, in his Missions to Dahomey, states that the barbarous king of that African state maintains a large army of females, these fighting women, 5,000 in number, being the terror of the neighbouring tribes. They are dressed in the attire of male soldiers, are armed with muskets and swords, and in war their valour is distinguished above that of the male troops, whose honour, he says, they not unfrequently save by charging the enemy and bearing down all before them, "discovering themselves to the astonished prisoners to be women, exceeding their male coadjutors in cruelty and all the stronger passions." They are in charge of eunuchs officered by their own sex.

THE RESOURCES OF THE PUNJAB.

We have received a further communication from our indefatigable friend in the Punjab upon the subject of the mineral resources of that country. He complains that a conversation between Captain Hollings and Mr. Purdon has been much misrepresented in the Englishman of the 14th ultimo, the former being made to describe belemnites as coal, and the spine of a sea urchin as a Roman style. Some little blame might be attached to Mr. Purdon on the score of pedantry, for having sneered at amateur exertions, even if the statement in the Englishman were correct. But it is not so. What Mr. Purdon was really told, was, that the belemnites had been collected, owing to a mistake in reading an order in Persian. The natives call the (fingers) belemnites—sung ungoostee—the stone like a finger—whilst coal is called sung-ungisht. An order was sent to collect the latter; the moonshee in reading the order said that the former was required; in consequence of this mistake some thirty maunds of belemnites were collected; no one for a moment took them for coal.

With regard to the spine of the (echinus) sea urchin, Captain Hollings remarked that he did not know what the specimen was, but it appeared to him shaped like a Roman style. Mr. Purdon asked permission to take it to his tent to examine it, and subsequently declared it to be the spine of a sea urchin: others, who are probably as good judges as Mr. Purdon, say that no sea urchin ever had so large a spine. But as for the coal, we have the authority of Captain Hollings for saying, that the statements which have appeared in the Lahore Chronicle are very incorrect; so far from the greatest exertions having been made by the local authorities which resulted in the collection of only — hundred maunds of coal for the steamers sent to Maree for the accommodation of the Most Noble the Governor-General, it is known that no more than sixteen men have ever been employed at the same time, and that about three thousand maunds have already been expended. It is also well known that all the officers of the Indian navy and of the steamers that have been up the Indus, acknowledge that the article—be it coal, jet, or lignite—found near Kalabagh, answers very well for steam purposes, and that if it were found in quantity, no other fuel would be required.

At Kalabagh there have been small holes, large enough to admit of two persons working together, cut into the edge of the hill; no attempt has been made to ascertain the extent of the veins of coal; it may truly be said that the surface has only been scratched. The scientific committee, it is said, consider that it is not worth while attempting to carry on any regular mining operations at the localities from which coal has hitherto been obtained, and that there is little reason to expect to find any large seams of coal in the salt range. Other persons, amongst whom the enthusiastic Capt. Hollings may be numbered, imagine that a great quantity of most excellent fuel may be obtained from the localities, where as yet only the surface has been scratched, and that there are many other localities in the hills to the west and south of Kalabagh in which the same kind of fuel will be obtained in greater or less quantities; the correctness of this opinion is confirmed by the fact that coal, exactly similar to that found at Kalabagh, has been discovered in the hills, distant about thirty miles from Deyrah Ghazee Khan, by General Cortlandt, who gave several maunds of specimens of it to Capt. Ethersey as he passed down the Indus.

It will be gratifying to the learned in geology to hear, that a large section of the hill of sandstone, in which the coal is embedded, has been exposed by a large body of water cutting off the outer crust; and it is reported that a large thick seam, lying horizontally, can be clearly traced. Those who based their opinion regarding the short supply of coal, because the vein that has been worked was nearly vertical, will have an opportunity of ascertaining if there is better chance of obtaining a large supply from horizontal deposits. General Cortlandt's well-timed discovery will doubtless lead to directions for further search along the line of hills from Kalabagh to Deyrah Ghazee Khan. Dr. Fleming has also found a small deposit of coal, similar to that at Kalabagh, in the salt range in the district of Kuchee.

The whole question of the extent of the mineral resources of the Punjab will doubtless be now thoroughly examined, and inquiries made by many persons independent of the scientific committee: the result must be advantageous to the country, and will, we hope, more than realise the expectations of those who are accused of puffing up an imaginary "Eldorado."

When Capt. Hollings visited the copper locality, he obtained as fine specimens of copper glance as any that he had previously got, and in large quantities; but he did not find a mine. He directed the persons who had brought him specimens to point out the places where they were found to Dr. Fleming's committee, who will, we trust, be more fortunate. With such facts before us, we are inclined to think our Lahore cotemporary has been rather hasty in announcing his opinion that "there is no coal in the salt range, and that we have raised hopes that are not destined to be fulfilled." All doubts will soon be dissipated, when our readers will be able to judge whether the friends from whose letters we have been permitted to take extracts have been misled by too sanguine expectations, or if they have drawn correct conclusions, under the guidance of a sound judgment.—Delhi Gaz.

THE MILITARY FUND.

A rotten spot has been found in the Military Orphan Fund. It appears that the large outstandings and defalcations are chiefly attributed to the laxity of the system in the cash department, and the want of proper check and control over it. Works used to be printed and sent out without taking the precaution to obtain an order to print them from the authors or compilers, and without supporting the various bills with documents in the shape of vouchers or receipts. In consequence of this, several parties flatly refuse to pay, whilst others call for vouchers. In some instances people have gone the length of seeking protection under the Statute of Limitation. No less than Rs. 70,000 are said to be unrealized, and the recovery of much, owing to the parties in some cases having died, become insolvent, or left India, is hopeless. It may be asked why the press should suffer, when it is very generally known that all the debtors were or are in Government employ. We understand that a military officer, of some standing in the service, took the late secretary very severely to task for allowing so large an accumulation of outstandings. He strongly remarked on the culpable remissness which existed at the time, and reproved the secretary for having sent him a bill which ought to have been collected several years before from another officer of the same name. He was aware that the officer against whom the claim was had died many years before. He was on the Invalid establishment, and in charge of the Burkundaz Guard at Patna.

It is now stated that the deficiency is at least thirty-five thousand rupees. An attempt has been made to conceal some of these frauds by the substitution of duplicate bills. Another source of fraud is stated to us to consist in taking deposits for advertisements, the exact cost of which cannot be ascertained at the time they are ordered. The overcharge has rarely been returned to the owner; that, however, is a loss to the public, not to the press. The first assistant accountant is mentioned to us as the person to whom the discovery of these frauds is in a great measure due.—Englishman, April 7.

OUDE.

We have a letter from Lucknow, dated 24th instant, from which we make the following extract:—"It is now almost time that the British Government should take possession of this province. The king is a puppet in the hands of an all-powerful minister, whose foresight and cunning have enabled him to defeat all his enemies' designs, and who has had the tact to turn his temporary disgrace to his own advantage. He is now as firm in his post as ever, and even royalty honours him with visits. The mother of the heir-apparent is the minister's niece, and this relationship with the king seems to secure his power. The revenue is every year decreasing, or rather the nuzzeranas to the minister, the maharaja, the paymaster-general, and others, are so great, that the revenue itself must naturally be diminished. The practice of farming out districts to the highest bidders is still continued, and the patronage of the governorships of the chuklas is a considerable source of profit to the Vuzeer. Quarrels between the chuklidars and the zemindars are every-day occurrences. The king's troops were only a short time ago called upon to settle one in the Sundeela district with the sword, or rather with the long guns. As is usual in such cases, the zemindar escaped, and left the troops in possession of his fort. The king scarcely knows the state of his country. The report is, that he is somewhat deranged. He does not take the slightest concern in the management of the country. The minister is virtually master in the land, but the eunuchs also command great influence." Another letter from Lucknow of the same date says: "No fun going on here, the station is as dull as can be. They talk of getting up theatricals, but I don't know whether anything is to come of it. The king is mad, I think. Fancy his making his troops keep the holee near his palace, and not telling them to go to their lines for the whole day."—Calcutta Englishman, March 28.

THE UNPOSTED.

The Englishman called attention to the fact, that there were no fewer than thirty-seven ensigns at various stations waiting, with their mouths open, till the adjutant-general should terminate the uncertainty of their position by posting them to various regiments. Fortunately, the next General Order dispersed the young gentlemen over half the presidency, and the subject was allowed to drop. Before it dies out altogether, we wish to call attention for the tenth time to the evils which result from allowing these young men to hang loose upon society by delaying their being posted to regiments. A young man arrives in Bengal with a commission, and instead of being at once directed to join his regiment, is ordered to "do duty with — regiment at Barrackpore, or Dinapore, or Benares." This "doing duty," being interpreted, means nothing more or less than loitering about some particular regiment, learning the goose step, and playing at billiards. The officers with whom the cadets are appointed to do duty regard them as birds of passage, and give themselves little concern regarding their welfare or instruction. They are left to themselves, to do evil or to do good, and they generally, from sheer rawness, take to the former. We have lately had an instance at Bombay of an unposted ensign getting into debt to the tune of Rs. 13,000, and we believe, no small proportion of the embarrassment of the officers in the army is to be traced to the little care taken of the unposted. The remedy for all this is obvious, and would have been adopted years ago, but that the Court of Directors appear to be the last body in the world to appreciate the advantages they have obtained from the increased facilities of communication. It was all very well, when a letter was six months in reaching India, and a reference required twelve months for a reply, that the task of posting ensigns to different regiments, should rest exclusively with the Commander-in-Chief. At the present time, however, when the Court of Directors receive every fortnight, and in less than six weeks, exact intelligence of every vacancy in every regiment, there is no longer any reason for allowing the cadets to waste the precious months, between their arrival and proceeding to join their regiments, in indolence and indulgence. Let every cadet be posted at the India House to the regiment to which he is to be attached, and be directed to join it as soon as he arrives. He will thus be at once secured from the temptations of idleness, and avoid the dangers of a long journey at the worst season of the year. At the present moment, one of the young men about to join their regiments, has to proceed from Barrackpore to Peshawur, a journey of fifteen hundred miles, at the worst season of the year. This would have been prevented, had he received his appointment in England, and proceeded to join it in the beginning of January.—India Gazette, March 27.

PAUCITY OF OFFICERS IN THE NATIVE ARMY.

If anything could open the eyes of the powers that be to the necessity of either increasing the number of European officers throughout the native army, or of placing the system of staff absenteeism on a more satisfactory footing, it ought to be the present condition, as to European officers, of the five regiments now at Barrackpore, which, after deducting those now in command at Chittagong and Midnapore, is as follows:—

11th N.I.

- 1 Captain and Brevet-Major commanding.
 - 3 Lieutenants.
 - 2 Ensigns.
 - 1 Adjutant.
 - 1 Interpreter and Quarter-master.
- Or, inclusive of Commanding Officer and staff—81

* 1 Captain, 1 lieutenant, 1 ensign, on command for a year at Chittagong.

58th Light Infantry.

- 1 Captain commanding.
- 1 Captain (non effective, for all duties, having charge of bazar).
- 1 Captain under orders for Midnapore.
- 2 Lieutenants.
- 4 Ensigns.
- 1 Adjutant.
- 1 Quarter-master.

In all 11, of whom 3 are about to proceed for six months to Midnapore, leaving 8 with the corps.

42nd Light Infantry.

- 1 Lieutenant-colonel commanding.
- 1 Major.
- 1 Captain (at Fort William).
- 5 Lieutenants.
- 3 Ensigns.

1 Adjutant.
1 Quarter-master.
In all 13. But 3 officers will shortly join from Midnapore.
44th N.I.
1 Major commanding
No Captains.
3 Lieutenants.
4 Ensigns.
1 Adjutant.
1 Acting Quarter-master. In all 10.
54th N.I.

1 Captain commanding.
1 Captain.
1 Brevet-Major and Captain.
5 Lieutenants.
3 Ensigns.
1 Adjutant.
1 Acting Quarter-master. In all 13.

Now by this it will be seen that there are at present only two, and can never be more than three, captains available for general duty in the whole large brigade of five thousand men, and of these one must be constantly at Fort William, commanding the reserve guards; and that altogether, independent of commanding officers and staff, with five regiments of Native Infantry, stationed close to the largest city in the Indian empire, there are only forty officers, or exactly the number that is usually present at head-quarters of every European regiment in India! Surely, then, it cannot be denied that an increase to their number is loudly called for; as it is on the officers, and them alone, that the efficiency of an army depends.—Englishman, March 29.

CALCUTTA IN 1750 AND 1850.

We mentioned a week or two ago having received a copy of the Report on the Survey of Calcutta by Mr. Simms, the late consulting engineer of the Government of India. The report furnishes us with many interesting and important particulars relative to the city of palaces; but before we refer to them, it is desirable to state that the Survey of Calcutta, included in two volumes of imperial folio, on the scale of 1 inch to 100 feet, is, perhaps, the most magnificent work of the kind which has ever been executed under the auspices of any Government, and does no small credit to the ability and the zeal of Mr. Simms, under whose direction it was performed.

The first detailed statement of the area, houses, and inhabitants of Calcutta which exists is that which was drawn up by Mr. Holwell, in 1751, when he was appointed zemindar of the town. Calcutta was at that time a large factory, and the zemindar was a most important officer. He was superintendent and collector of all the revenues of the town, and he was "judge of cutcherry, in which all matters and things, civil and criminal, wherein the natives only, the subjects of the Great Mogul, were concerned, were adjudicated." On assuming charge of his office he found that the most glaring frauds had been committed by the "black deputy in the office, Govindaram Mitter," and he addressed himself most vigorously and most fearlessly to the reforms of these abuses, and with so much success that he was soon enabled to congratulate the Court of Directors on the enjoyment of a revenue of not less than Rs. 120,000 a-year. Within a century, the revenues of the Company have been raised to twenty-seven crores and a half. One of the first duties he undertook was to reform the collection of the land-rents; and we extract the following items from his report. The town of Calcutta was divided into four principal districts: Dee Calcutta, Govindpore, Sootanooty, and Bazar Calcutta. The four divisions comprised 5,472 begahs, on which the Company received ground-rent, at the rate of three lacs of rupees per annum. Exclusive of these lands, there were 733 begahs which paid no ground-rent, making in all, 6,205 begahs. But within the Company's boundary, that is, within the circle of the Mahratta ditch, there were also 3,050 begahs of ground—in the four districts of Simlah, Molunga, Mirzapore, and Hogulcooreah—possessed by proprietors independent of Government, which appear also to have paid no rent. Mr. Holwell explains this distinction, by stating, that when the imperial firman, which gave the English a right to purchase these towns, arrived, the zemindars of these four districts could not be prevailed on to alienate their lands, and had therefore remained distinct and independent. The 6,205 begahs of the Company's ground were computed to contain 9,451 houses, and the independent ground above mentioned was, at the same ratio, calculated to contain 5,267. Holwell, moreover, says: "The proprietors of the above 14,718 houses, for distinction sake, I will call principal tenants, or holders of pottahs, who have again their lodgers, or under-tenants, within the limits of their respective pottahs. He then proceeds to throw over his former calculation of 14,718, and supposes, that each begah of the Company's ground—excluding the rent free—and each begah of the independent zemindars, contains six houses, which would give the number of houses at 51,132; he then multiplies this sum by 8, "a very moderate estimate of the inhabitants contained in each house," and finds the number of souls in Calcutta 409,056, "constant inhabitants, without reckoning the multitude that daily come in and return." This is the first, and unquestionably the most inaccurate, census we have of Calcutta.

Mr. Simm's report gives us the following data, regarding the area, the houses, and the population of the city—for it is now a see—one century after the estimate drawn up by Mr. Holwell.

Land comprised within the jurisdiction of the Municipal Commissioners	10,953
The Maidan, or plain, on three sides of Fort William, including the Jail, the Cathedral, and Cooly Bazaar	3,564
Fort William	521
Tolly's Nullah, west of Allipore bridge	76

or seven square miles 516 acres.

The Residences in Calcutta, are thus described in 1850:—

One storied houses	5,950
Two storied ditto	6,438
Three storied ditto	721
Four storied ditto	10
Five storied ditto	1
Huts	49,445

Approximate population 361,369

It is evident that Mr. Holwell's calculation is very wide of the mark. It is certain that the native inhabitants were not so closely packed together a century ago as they are now, and he is, therefore, manifestly wrong in assuming that there were six houses in each begah, and eight inhabitants in each house. The number of houses, 9,451, which he has fixed for the 5,472 begahs of rent paying ground, appears to be the result of actual enumeration; and we think it may be fairly assumed that the total number of houses in the town did not exceed 14,718, which would give rather less than two to a begah; and if we allow, as at present, five inhabitants to each house, we shall have a population of 73,590 for the year 1750.

The difference between the area of Calcutta in that year and the year 1850 it is impossible to reconcile. Mr. Holwell makes the number of begahs included within the Mahratta ditch, 9,255; Mr. Simms, 15,115. The latter is, of course, the correct return.

The number of places of Christian worship at present in Calcutta stands thus:—

Church of England	8
Church of Scotland	1
Free Church of Scotland	1
Roman Catholic	5
Independents	2
Baptists	3
Greek	1
Armenian	1

There is one Chinese temple and one Jewish synagogue.

The number of Mahomedan mosques is 74, and of Hindoo temples 167. The number of begahs occupied by the former is 9½, whereas, in 1750, the "Moors' mosques" occupied about 15½ begahs. The ground attached to the Hindoo temples at present is about 10½ begahs; in 1750, the ground belonging to "Gentoo idols" was about 13½.

We have no record of the number of tanks a century ago, but there is a memorandum of "grounds bought by devout persons to make tanks, 63 begahs." At present, the number does not fall short of 1,043, and the area occupied by them is 648½ begahs, or about 216 acres, which is equal to one-thirteenth the area occupied by private property.

The municipal funds of this great city in 1849 amounted to the insignificant and contemptible sum of Rs. 339,055; about 34,000l. sterling! Of this sum, Rs. 268,429, were obtained from the house assessment, and Rs. 70,626 from the carriage and cattle tax. The wheel tax is about to be abolished; and as the native community is remonstrating against any increase in the house tax, the municipal revenues of the city of palaces will, in that case, be reduced to 26,842l. The number of vehicles and cattle which furnished the wheel tax will give a correct idea of the conveniences which exist for locomotion in Calcutta.

Four-wheeled carriages on springs, drawn by two horses ..	676
Four-wheeled ditto, on ditto, drawn by one horse	1,689
Two-wheeled ditto, drawn by one or two horses	864

Keranchies, hackeries, and carts	1,391
Riding horses or ponies	426
Draught horses	2,850
Draught ponies or tattoos	2,003

It will be interesting to ascertain what number of the four and two-wheeled carriages were owned by natives, as it will give us some correct idea of the state of penury and destitution to which the tyranny of Government has reduced the native population. We shall endeavour to make the necessary enquiries on the subject.

Such is Calcutta, the metropolis of the British Empire in the East, the centre of a political power which extends from Peshawar to Cape Comorin, in the year before the new era of Railways commences. What aspect will this city present in 1900, when the whole Presidency is covered with a complete network of railroads, and every mart and province in the interior is united to this common centre by this matchless instrument?—Friend of India.

LAW.

SUPREME COURT, April 2.

Jardine, Skinner, and Co. v. The Union Bank.—The Union Bank had given the plaintiffs post bills to the amount of Company's Rs. 2,15,000 and Company's Rs. 1,375 in cash, in payment for bills drawn by the plaintiffs on their correspondents, Magniac, Jardine, and Co. in England, for 20,000*l.* These bills were delivered by the plaintiffs to the bank on the 4th of October, 1847; and on the 6th, Mr. Abbott, the then secretary of the bank, returned 15,000*l.* of these bills to the plaintiffs, in a letter requesting them to send him bills of smaller amount, that is, six sets for 1,500*l.* each, and six sets for 1,000*l.* each, in lieu of the bills returned. The main question in the case arose at this point; as Mr. Bampton, the plaintiffs' bookkeeper, stated that twelve fresh sets of bills of the several amounts required were duly prepared and signed, and handed to Mr. Glass, an assistant in the plaintiffs' office. And Mr. Glass stated that he put them into an envelope, wafered, and directed to Mr. Abbott as secretary, and gave it himself into the hands of the bank peon who brought Mr. Abbott's letter enclosing the returned bills. Mr. Bampton had given his receipt for Mr. Abbott's letter in the bank peon book, which was produced; but Mr. Glass said that he thought he was safe in giving the envelope containing the substituted bills to the peon, and that he took no receipt from anybody. It was stated for the plaintiffs, that of the twelve substituted sets of bills, six had been paid by the acceptors in England, and could not therefore be produced. The other six sets were produced by the plaintiffs in Court, being four sets of 1,500*l.* each, and two sets of 1,000*l.* each, making a total of 8,000*l.* These bills appeared to have been drawn by the plaintiffs, payable to their own order, and blank indorsed by them, and in the blank was inserted the words "pay to Hickey, Bailey and Co.," in a different handwriting. They had been then indorsed by Hickey, Bailey to Thurburn and Co., and by them to Hugh Thurburn, and by him to two gentlemen out here as his trustees. The drawees, Magniac, Jardine, and Co., had accepted the bills conditionally, that is, subject to any claims of theirs against Hickey, Bailey, and Co. The bills were therefore protested for non-acceptance, and sent back to Calcutta, and paid by the drawers (the plaintiffs) to Mr. Hugh Thurburn's trustees in Calcutta. It was stated by the plaintiffs' counsel that the other six bills (which could not be produced) had passed through Mr. Larpent's hands.

It was on the other hand distinctly denied that the substituted bills ever reached the Union Bank; and Mr. Abbott, the secretary, who was the plaintiffs' witness, and Mr. Bonnaud, the then accountant of the bank, called as a witness for the defendants, both stated that no substituted bills had ever reached the bank, and that there was no trace of them in the bank books. Mr. Bonnaud also stated that the bills were purchased for remittance to Glyn's in the bank's exchange account, and that the bank never resold bills purchased by them; they were always remitted to Glyn's. That he had no idea why the smaller sets were required, but they were written for by the secretary at Mr. Abbott's desire. Mr. Abbott, on his examination on this point, stated that he had forgotten all about the matter, but he believed that he had followed Mr. Scott's (of Hickey, Bailey's) suggestion in the matter. The remaining bill for 5,000*l.* had been remitted to Glyn's by the bank. Mr. Abbott further stated that the affairs of the bank were in great confusion; that Mr. Scott had all the money and securities of the bank in his charge, and that he (Abbott) was dependent upon him for money for the daily necessities of the bank. The bank stopped payment on the 24th of December, and Hickey, Bailey, and Co. were then largely indebted to the bank,—upwards of twelve lakhs.

Mr. Bonnaud stated that he waited three weeks for the return of the bills from the plaintiffs, and as they did not arrive, he spoke several times to Mr. Abbott about it. That the bills had been delited to Glyn's account, but on the 29th of October, finding that the bills had not been returned to the bank, he retransferred the amount by direction of Mr. Abbott. He said that he did not inform the directors of the matter, because he had no access to them as accountant, but that, had he supposed there was any fraud practised, he should have informed them. Mr. Abbott, on his examination on these matters, stated that his memory failed him, and he remembered nothing about the matter.

It appeared on the evidence that on the 18th of December, being about six days before the bank stopped, Mr. Scott brought the 2,15,000 post bills, and three other post bills of which the plaintiffs were holders (two of them for Rs. 25,000 as agents for Hickey, Bailey, and Co. and one for Rs. 10,000 received from Cockrell and Co.) to the bank, and on giving them up to Abbott, obtained a promissory note for the amount Rs. 2,70,000, and the pledge of 2646 maunds of Hill's indigo. The bank post bills were not yet due. The promissory note was signed by Mr. Abbott, and by Mr. John Storm as president, and William Grant as vice-president; and it was admitted by the plaintiffs' counsel that it was not in form binding on the bank.

The following entry appeared in the directors' minute-book of the previous day, December 17th.

"Mr. Scott submits a bond for Co. Rs. 2,70,000 advanced by Messrs. Jardine, Skinner, and Co. on the security of Messrs. H. Hill and Co.'s indigo, which the secretary is authorised to sign."

Sir Thomas Turtton, examined as witness for the defendants, stated that he was a director from September to the suspension of the bank (four months), during six weeks of which time he was at Darjeeling. He was present at the meeting of December 17th, when the document was presented by Mr. Scott, as agent for the plaintiffs, for the approval of the directors; and that his recollection was, that both he, himself, and Mr. Shearwood (another director present) considered it as a loan transaction; and that the minute itself showed that they considered that the indigo was to be pledged for money advanced, and that he did not intend to sanction, and never would have sanctioned, the pledge of the indigo for post bills not due. He knew nothing of the after signature of the note; but if it was given for the amount of post bills not yet due, that certainly was not a transaction that he should have assented to. He also stated that Scott had at that time much more to do with the bank affairs than any broker should have done, and that during the remainder of the time he was director he was constantly asking for accounts, but could get none, and was told that Mr. Grant (then in Ceylon) and Mr. Scott were the only persons who could give him any information.

In January, 1848, the executive committee was appointed to wind up the affairs of the bank, under certain written resolutions which were passed, and it was admitted that Mr. Skinner was present when these were passed, as the representative of a creditor, and therefore had notice of the contents. The 2nd clause was "that from and after the 22nd day of January, 1848, no person or persons shall have power or authority to incur any fresh or new liability on the part of the bank or the shareholders thereof, except for the limited purpose of discharging existing liabilities to an equal or greater extent."

The 6th clause of these resolutions gave the committee power "to manage the affairs of the bank in liquidation, provided that they shall not have power to bind the bank or the shareholders thereof by any bill of exchange, promissory note, or other security whatsoever except as aforesaid."

Mr. Bonnaud stated that the executive committee was composed of persons wholly unacquainted with the previous affairs of the bank, and so was Mr. Russell, the new secretary.

On the 4th of February, 1848, an arrangement was entered into between the plaintiffs and the executive committee (appearing on the face of the several letters) under which the executive committee consented to the shipment of the indigo, to the plaintiffs' consignees in England, the plaintiffs advancing at the rate of Rs. 95 per maund upon it, such amount advanced to be considered in part discharge of the promissory note (above mentioned) falling due on the 21st instant, and an acknowledgment of such sum to be indorsed thereon, it being understood that the indigo is shipped on account of the bank, and that the sum advanced here is to be debited by the London consignees of the Indigo, on the principle of a bill of exchange at six months' sight at the exchange of 1*l.* 11½*d.* per rupee.

The indigo was consigned by the plaintiffs to England accordingly, and after giving credit for the sale proceeds, the plaintiffs now sued for the deficiency, being Co.'s Rs. 42,023 2-9.

The plaint in assumpsit originally contained counts only for bills sold and delivered, money lent, money paid to the plaintiffs' use, and on account stated. A new special count on the agreement of February 4, 1848, was afterwards added, stating that the promissory note had been delivered by the then secretary of the bank, which note the said secretary had delivered to the plaintiffs, for and on account of certain just claims of the plaintiffs upon the said bank, then stating the agreement of February 4, 1848, and that the net proceeds of the indigo were insufficient, and demanding the balance of Company's Rs. 43,023 2.

To this the defendants pleaded—1. Non-assumpsit ; 2. A traverse that the promissory note had been given for certain just claims upon the bank ; 3. That the agreement had been obtained by misrepresentation, the plaintiffs having alleged that Abbott had delivered the note on account of certain just claims on the bank, whereas they had not any just claim.

Mr. Dickens and Mr. Ritchie for the plaintiffs.

Mr. Morton and Mr. Skinner for the defendants.

The Union Bank deed was put in, and the signature of two of the plaintiffs, Mr. Jardine and M. Skinner, thereto as partners was proved.

Mr. Morton, for the defence, said he should raise two questions ; first, the more technical one, whether the correspondence between the executive committee and the plaintiffs' firm amounted to a contract in law at all, so as to be binding upon the bank independently of the merits ; secondly, whether the bank was not entitled to resist the claim on the merits, upon the ground that the substituted bills had never reached the bank at all, and that therefore, instead of being indebted to the plaintiffs in Rs. 42,000, or any other sum, the latter were indebted to the bank in more than a lakh of rupees upon this single transaction ! As to the first point,—it was clear the executive committee had taken for granted both the validity and the bona fides of the transaction. The correspondence showed that they acted upon the faith of the respectability of the parties, and assumed the claim to be a fair one, and moreover to be a "legal liability" of the bank. They had not even a copy of the security, and there was nothing in the bank books to throw suspicion upon the claim. The committee had had enough to do in inquiring into and adjusting doubtful and unsettled claims. They could not be blamed for declining to unravel matters apparently settled already, and on which no doubt had appeared to rest. But when the real facts turned out to be wholly different from what they were supposed to be, could any contract in law be said to arise ? The only minute in the bank books imported that Rs. 2,70,000 had been advanced by Jardine and Co. on the security of this indigo ; and the document called a promissory note or bond was supposed and assumed to be a legally valid one. It now turned out that nothing had been advanced in cash. Post bills not due had been given up. And the document turned out to be no liability of the bank at all ! On the mere technical objection, therefore, how could the plaintiffs get over the difficulty ? The resolutions of Jan. 1848, of which they had express notice, distinctly provided that no new liability should be created, except in extinction of existing liabilities to an equal or greater amount. Here it was contended for the plaintiffs that a new liability had been created. If so, what existing liability did it extinguish ? A moral claim, supposing that any existed, would not suffice. But, secondly, the substantial merits were with the defendants. The claim for Rs. 2,70,000 included the bills for 15,000*l.* alleged to have been sent in substitution. The onus of proof was upon plaintiffs, who admitted that the original 15,000*l.* bills had been received back by them. What proof was there that the substituted bills ever reached the bank, or any party for whose acts the bank was responsible ? That they never reached the bank was clear, unless nearly the whole establishment had been in league to misappropriate them. Not a trace of them in the books. No receipt or voucher producible by the plaintiffs. It was very unlikely that the plaintiffs' clerk should have handed blank indorsed bills to a mere peon, and without any receipt, and more unlikely that he should now remember such a fact. But if they got into the peon's hands, what had become of them ? It was not suggested even that he could have been waylaid and robbed, without the matter being instantaneously made known. That the bills had been paid to somebody, did not prove plaintiffs' case in the least. For that matter, they might have been sold by the plaintiffs themselves to third parties. He, indeed (the learned counsel), did not charge the plaintiffs with complicity in any fraud ; but it was idle to urge in proof of their case a fact which was consistent with a variety of other possible inferences. His (the learned counsel's) own belief was that the bills, blank indorsed, had got into Scott's possession before they ever quitted Jardine, Skinner and Co.'s office. Eight thousand pounds' bills had been this morning produced, said to form part of the 15,000*l.* These bore Scott's indorsement, in the name of his firm, next below Jardine, Skinner and Co.'s own indorsement ; and the bills had been ultimately paid to Thurburn and Co., the correspondents of Hickey, Bailey. If these were part of the bills, then Scott had committed a fraud. But why should the bank be responsible for his fraud ? He was no more the bank's agent than Jardine, Skinner's. His being the bank's broker, and intrusted with certain securities, did not make him the general agent of the bank.

Besides it would appear from Mr. Bonnaud's evidence that he never had anything to do with the bank's London bills, except as mere broker for their purchase. Indeed it would be shown that the bank never purchased bills except for transmission to their London agents, Glyn and Co. ; and it would be shown, as clearly as evidence could show it, that none of the 20,000*l.* bills had gone to Glyn's, except the 5,000*l.* which had always been admitted. It had been attempted, indeed, but quite unsuccessfully, to show that these 8,000*l.* now produced bore some mark of the bank. This had been negatived at once by Mr. Abbott. It was clear the bills had never been in the bank, or near the bank, and he submitted the bank could not, legally or morally, be held responsible for their amount.

Mr. Dickens, in reply, observed, that it appeared that the liability of the bank arose on the purchase of bills for exchange operations, the original liability was therefore binding and legal. The promissory note did not bind the bank in form, but it did in equity. The bank certainly could not have been sued at law on the note, but he submitted that it was sufficient for the executive committee under the 2nd and 6th resolutions. He also submitted that the plaintiffs were entitled on the merits. It was shown that Scott was trusted with the bank's securities, and the bank could not have gone on without him. The plaintiffs were not bound to carry the case further than to show that the substituted bills reached the hands of the usual and accredited agents of the bank. And the evidence of Mr. Glass was quite sufficient as to the delivery to the bank peon. The learned counsel also commented on the fact of no further demand having been made for the return of and of the bank having gone on admitting their liability, as the secretary, Abbott, must have been fully aware of all the circumstances of the cases, and he submitted that a public body are as much bound by the acts of those they employ as a private partnership.

Peel, C.J.—The only count on which the plaintiffs can recover in any view, is the special count. As to the count for London bills of exchange sold and delivered, the contract proved was that the plaintiffs should give their London bills for Union Bank post-bills, which in fact were given. There is no evidence of money lent ; and no evidence applicable to any of the common counts. With regard to the special count,—the agreement is in writing, and must speak for itself. The evidence is that 20,000*l.* were sent by plaintiffs to the bank on the 4th of October, and 15,000*l.* sent back on the 6th, to be changed for smaller bills. Plaintiffs were under no legal liability to exchange them. They had performed their contract, and could only be asked, as matter of courtesy, to substitute other bills. It is proved the bills were drawn out, and there is some evidence they were handed to the bank's own messenger. There seems nothing improbable in this. Then the subsequent conduct of the parties affords a presumption that the bills reached the hands of some party who was in communication with one or other of the bank authorities. Otherwise, it is impossible to account for the circumstance that no question was raised about the bills being missing. The late secretary, Mr. Abbott, is wrapped up in an extraordinary state of forgetfulness. But Mr. Bonnaud (who is evidently an intelligent and quite unimpeached witness) says he spoke on the subject to Abbott. He further says, that if he had had any suspicion of fraud at the time, he would at once have mentioned it, which of course would have been only proper. Then there is general evidence that Scott had an extraordinary influence and power in regard to the bank's affairs, and, as Sir Thomas Turton has remarked, much more than any mere broker ought to have had. He appears to have been more generally entrusted than any one—in fact, with the possession and control—of the bank's securities. It is stated that the bank depended on him for its daily supplies. It is quite consistent with the facts proved that he may have got hold of these securities without fraud. Even if he afterwards misappropriated the moneys, that would not be a fraud which would in any way affect the question of the bank's liability for the amount of the bills. Then the next question is as to the document given by Abbott on the 18th Dec. It is not a bank liability. It is not alleged as such in the pleadings. But there was good consideration for it, and for the pledge of the indigo. Even assuming that the post bills in the hands of plaintiffs would be of doubtful validity, as being contrary to the deed of partnership to which they are parties, they might have transferred them for value to third parties, to whom the bank would have been liable. Besides it has been held that the giving up of merely doubtful claims is a good consideration for a new promise. Then as to the agreement with the committee, the question is, does the limitation of their authority operate to prevent the contract binding the shareholders at large. It is true there was no existing legal liability. But the words of the resolution must have a reasonable construction. We do not understand them as absolutely and in all cases negativing the power to create a fresh liability. But we do not consider that this was creating a fresh liability. It was rather a dealing with assets, within the scope of the general power conferred on them. The question, however, is one of much importance and difficulty, and the defendants will have leave to move.

Verdict accordingly.

J. W. Fulton, Radamadub Bonnerjee, and Others.—This was an action brought to recover about Rs. 47,000 with interest, alleged to have been lent by plaintiff to the defendants in August 1847.

Mr. Prinsep and Mr. Cowie, were counsel for the plaintiff. Mr. Dickens, Mr. Morton, and Mr. Ritchie, for Radamadub. Mr. Clarke, for another defendant, Henry Holroyd. Mr. Bell, for another defendant, Storm, who however had let judgment go by default.

The defendants, Radamadub and Mr. Holroyd, pleaded non assumpsit, or a denial of the loan to them.

Mr. Cowie (in the absence of his leader) opened the case. He said that the plaintiff was formerly a barrister of the Supreme Court, and had quitted India in August 1847. Some time previously eight parties (of whom Mr. W. P. Grant, the late Master in Equity, and the three defendants were four) formed themselves into an Association for the purpose of buying up Union Bank shares. This association or limited copartnership had no distinctive name; but it appears that in September 1846 they opened an account with the Union Bank, entitled "Account of W. P. Grant and others," upon which account cheques were drawn by Grant to a large amount, and the proceeds applied in the purchase of shares on the joint account. This was opened under the terms of a letter signed by Grant and five others of the partners. The signature of Radamadub, apparently through inadvertence, had never been obtained to this letter. There would be abundant evidence, however, of his having been one of the association, and cognisant of its transactions generally. In August 1847, just before Mr. Grant left Calcutta for Ceylon, there was a meeting of the partners held; and at that meeting Radamadub was present. Certain resolutions were then passed, the tenor of which was that the operations should be extended. Mr. Grant left Calcutta in the August steamer for Ceylon; and the plaintiff, Mr. Fulton, was his fellow-passenger—proceeding himself to England. The plaintiff being possessed of certain Company's paper which he was anxious to sell out and invest at a higher rate of interest, employed Mr. Grant as his agent for the purpose. It would be proved that paper, to the amount of Rs. 47,000, now sued for, was handed by Mr. Fulton to Mr. Grant, with special directions to lend the amount to the firm of "W. P. Grant and others." The paper was inclosed by Mr. Grant in a letter to the secretary of the Union Bank, and the proceeds, when realised by the bank, were credited to the share account. At the time of handing the paper to Grant, the plaintiff took a letter from him stating who the parties were composing the firm of "W. P. Grant and others." This list included the names of Radamadub Bonnerjee and the other defendants. It would be further proved that, after Mr. Grant's return from Ceylon, there were further meetings held by the members of the association, at one or more of which Radamadub was present. And in November 1847, Radamadub paid a large sum and took from his co-partners a sort of release in respect of his share of the loss. This would be put in evidence, and would show that he admitted himself liable for all operations on the joint account up to that date.

The evidence of W. P. Grant, taken under a commission to London last year, was put in and read. The evidence was in substance as opened. Annexed to it was the correspondence between him and plaintiff, relative to the alleged loan in question.

The present and former secretaries of the Union Bank were called to prove the opening of the account with the bank, and that the Rs. 47,000 were paid into the account on the 13th August. The account, when closed, was at debit to the amount of Rs. 4,20,000; and during the last six months it was at an average debit of nearly four lakhs.

The letter opening the account was put in, dated September, 1846. The signature of Radamadub was not to this; and he appeared never to have been an assenting party thereto. Mr. Grant, in his evidence, stated, that about four lakhs was the understood limit of the credit. The letter itself, indeed, did not purport to be the opening of a credit, but merely the opening of an account.

The Chief Justice remarked that, in the case of any other bank in the world, the term "opening an account" would refer to an account which monies were to be paid into; but in the case of the Union Bank such a letter seemed to import taking money out!

Rustomjee Cowasjee was called as a witness. He stated that he was one of the members of the Share Association of Mr. W. P. Grant and others, the others being Messrs. Holroyd, Storm, Lyall, Lackersteen, and himself; and W. P. Grant also used his brother's name. Mr. Grant told him that Dwarkanath being dead, his shares would soon be in the market, and prices would fall, greatly to the injury of the bank; and that if they bought jointly to the extent of 275 shares, they would make a profit and save the bank too. A meeting was held at his house on the 5th of August, the occasion being that Mr. Grant had made up a rough statement of the purchases of shares. Radamadub did not pass the resolutions; he was very angry, and threw aside the paper, and would not sign. The funds required for the purchases were to be provided for by the credit at the Union Bank for four lakhs of rupees. About 800 or 900 had then been purchased. The shares bought were pledged with different parties, and the money so raised was paid into the Union Bank.

The resolutions above mentioned were as follows:—

Determine to increase our purchases at discount to such extent as may be necessary to bring down average prices, now taken at Rs. 1,025 to Rs. 1,000, and then to stop.

This arrangement must be subject to the means at our disposal for raising money on the shares.

Leave this in Manickjee Rustomjee's hand, who will ascertain the exact price at which our shares stand, and act accordingly.

It is of the greatest possible importance that we should all pull together cordially in raising money for the joint concern.

Each shareholder should look on himself as bound to raise one-eighth of the whole money required, and if all the eight act together, we can get the whole money easier than any one of us could get his shares by himself. This was signed by Mr. Grant for himself and his brother, John Storm, C. R. Lackersteen, and R. Cowasjee.

On the 27th of November, 1847, Radamadub obtained the following release from the other six.

"Dear Sir,—As you have taken over and paid for the 139, being your portion of the Union Bank shares purchased on joint account, we hereby release you from all liability in respect of the other shares, or of any loans raised by us or by any of us on the security of them.—Signed by W. P. Grant, H. Holroyd, J. Storm, W. Lackersteen, R. Cowasjee, and J. Lyall."

The witness Rustomjee stated that the 139 shares had been pledged to the Oriental Bank, and Radamadub and others had signed a guarantee for the loan on these shares, and the bank pressing Mr. Grant, he got Radamadub to take up the guarantee. The 139 shares were on one-seventh or one-eighth of the shares purchased. He also stated on cross examination that he had not, and that he was not aware of any other member having Mr. Grant's authority to borrow money on the joint account. And that Radamadub was first made aware of the account with the Union Bank at the August meeting, when he declined having any thing more to do with the affair.

Mr. Dickens addressed the Court for the defendant, Radamadub. He submitted that his client was entitled to a verdict on the plaintiff's own evidence. In the first place, where was the original authority to borrow? This was not a general trading partnership: it was a mere special venture or speculation. The purpose and objects of the association, and the nature of its constitution, were not very clearly defined by anything in evidence; but it was for the plaintiff to clear this up, if he wished the Court to draw the inference that an authority to borrow was implied from its very constitution. Express authority there was none, at least so far as Radamadub was concerned. He was no party to the account or credit opened with the Union Bank. That he was party to a particular loan, taken from the Oriental Bank, negatived rather than affirmed any general authority. But in the next place, assuming that there was authority originally, how could Radamadub be made responsible for any thing done after the August meeting? That was an express repudiation of all authority for the future, at all events. If it was not a retirement from the so-called partnership, it was at least a revocation of any pre-existing authority, express or implied, to raise another rupee on the credit of Radamadub's name. His subsequently taking what was called a "release" from his associates, could not alter the question. That related to matters anterior to the meeting of August, though actually given long subsequently. Besides, it related, and could only relate, to questions of liability of the partners inter se, and could in no way affect any question connected with the supposed claims of third parties.

The Chief Justice.—It appears to us that an action cannot be maintained as against Radamadub Bonnerjee; and the same observation indeed applies to Mr. Holroyd on the present evidence. There is no doubt that Mr. Fulton intended to lend, not to Grant alone, but to the association. Grant, however, was his agent, and he is therefore affected with notice of all the matters in Grant's knowledge. The terms of resolutions of the 6th of August do not at all import, even as regards those who signed them, that any member was to have a power of borrowing money in the name of all. This also was not an ordinary trading partnership, but a partnership in a special limited venture,—and then it appears further on the evidence that Radamadub refused to sign the resolutions, and repudiated all connection with all future transactions. It may be a hard case on the plaintiff; but it would be quite as hard on the defendant, and I am unable to see at present any principle, either of law or justice, on which a verdict could be given against him.

Verdict for the defendants, with liberty for the plaintiffs to move.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE LONDON MAIL of Feb. the 24th, arrived at Calcutta on the 3rd April, per Hindustan.

CHOLERA.—The Hurkaru states that cholera had made its appearance in the native town of Calcutta. Corpses are taken "by hundreds daily," to the ghauts, and there is every prospect of a still greater increase in the bills of mortality. The cholera had likewise broken out, though not severely, in the small towns on the banks of the Ganges, and as this is the usual season for inoculation, the small-pox in its most virulent form had also made its appearance.

VESSEL BURNT.—As we write we have intelligence of another ship being destroyed by fire here, in the Hooghly! The Kurramany, bound to Mauritius with coolie emigrants, has been burnt to the water's edge. The Semaphore reports, that the captain, mate, pilot, and twenty-eight others are on board a steamer, but says nothing of the 348 emigrants who were on board. It is to be feared that many of them have perished.—Hurkaru, April 7.

TEA PLANTS FROM CHINA.—The Englishman of the 29th March says:—"Mr. Fortune, the naturalist, has just arrived from China, in the Tenasserim steamer, bringing with him 20,000 tea plants, a quantity of the necessary implements, and 18 or 20 live Chinamen, for the Government experimental tea plantation at Kumaon."

THE TRIAL OF JOTEPEPERSHAUD, the great bullock and commissariat contractor, had commenced at Agra, before a mixed jury of five, but it was not concluded at the date of the last advices from that city: expectations were entertained and avowed by the journals in the interest of Government, that the proofs against this wealthy native would fail, and that a conviction would not be obtained. A native who had turned approver was put into the witness box. The counsel for the defendant objected to his testimony being taken, but the judge overruled in favour of the prosecution, and the examination was proceeded with. At the close of his deposition, it was said, erroneously, that Muheysh Doss, who had first sworn in favour of Jotepepershaud, and afterwards gave direct testimony against him, was in reality no traitor to friendship. On the present occasion, he stood by the old rule, that one good turn deserves another, and as he had veered round once in favour of the prosecution, he now boxed the compass again on behalf of Jotepepershaud. The judge pronounced his evidence worthless, and it is presumed that a large mass of testimony will be included in the same predicament.

MAULMAIN, the capital of our Tenasserim provinces, has been thrown into a state of intense alarm and excitement by the occurrence of a singularly audacious dacoity, committed in the heart of the place by a gang of men supposed to be from the Burmese district of Martaban across the river. They surrounded the house, that of a wealthy Mahomedan, with a line of sentries, who fired upon all who approached, constructed a ladder of rattans, scaled the windows, beat the man of the house and his son till they compelled them to disclose their valuables, and having made up their booty, coolly and deliberately retired when the military were coming upon them, took to their boats, and disappeared on the river.—Hurkaru, April 7.

MAJOR MAYNE.—We have heard on good authority that Brevet Major Mayne, of the 37th N.I., at present in command of the Governor-General's body guard, will succeed to the cavalry brigade of the nizam's army just vacated by Major Beatson of the 54th N.I., and that Lieutenant Thomson, of the 9th light cavalry, at present second in command, will be appointed commandant of the B. G. vice Major Mayne. Major Mayne, commonly called the "lucky Major Mayne," will indeed almost merit the title. We fancy that a brigade of cavalry in less than fourteen years is unprecedented in almost any service, and yet Major Mayne will not have completed that period until next June, having arrived in India on the 12th of that month, 1837. Lieutenant Thomson may also consider himself fortunate, as it is not usual to bestow the command of the body guard on an officer of subaltern rank. However, both officers have done good service, the former on many occasions in Afghanistan, and the latter in Scinde, where he was on the staff of Sir Charles Napier, who especially praised him.—Englishman, April 3.

NARAYAN SINGH and his Sikh comrades, who broke from their confinement on board the Kalesunga, and murdered several of the Burkundazes, were brought up for trial in the beginning of last month, before the judge of Patna. The judge has declared them guilty of murder, and the "Muftes," or law officer, of being "concerned in an affray attended with homicide." The case has been referred to the Sadler Court.—Englishman.

STATISTICS OF BENGAL.—The Bengal Government has lately condescended to follow the excellent example of that of Agra, and commenced the publication of selections from its statistical and other records. A pamphlet descriptive of the opium cultivation has lately appeared as the first of, it is to be hoped, a long and useful series. It is believed that there must be a vast mass of important information embodied in official reports now perishing on the shelves of the Government offices.—Hurkaru.

DACCA, March 24.—The weather has of late been oppressively hot, and the want of rain is causing great damage to the indigo crop, at least a quarter of the intended cultivation in this district is still unsown, and nearly the whole of the spring sowings will require to be resown; even if we were now to have rain, the impossibility of procuring seed, and the knowledge that the river never permits any indigo sown after the 15th instant to come to maturity, makes our prospects very gloomy. Jessore, Kishnagore, &c., are from the same causes even greater sufferers, and from present appearances, therefore, it is evident that we are again to have a short crop. The remunerating prices paid them last year have induced the ryots to extend the cultivation of safflower so much, that it is expected the coming crop will average from 20 to 25,000 maunds; this, together with the heavy stock in England, will cause prices to rule very low, and 15 is as yet the highest offer made for good quality.

BURNING OF THE ST. CLARE.—We have news, vid Madras, of the burning of the ship St. Clare, 955 tons, bound from Liverpool to Bombay. The catastrophe occurred off the Maldives, and was owing to the spontaneous combustion of the coals which formed the cargo. The commander, Tierney, and his crew reached the Maldives in the boats, and subsequently landed at Cochin, reduced in number by a fever which had carried off several of them. The survivors have arrived at Bombay.—Hurkaru.

MUSSOORIE AND THE DRYAH DHOON LETTERS mention the occurrence of a violent storm. A flash of lightning struck the Invalid Barracks at Landour, where it killed one of the European soldiers, and knocked down and injured five others and one woman. The hailstones are said to have been as large as bagatelle balls; and wherever they fell, the flowers in the gardens, and what is a more serious matter, the crops, have been totally destroyed.

MALDA, March 28.—"George Cheap, of Baule, and Colonel Warren, have just entered the station, bringing in with them five splendid tigers, their forenoon sport, on five elephants. They were carried in procession through Malda; nearly the whole population turned out to see a sight so unusual. The Colonel leaves for Calcutta this evening." Grand sport indeed. Tigers seem to have been on the increase lately, even in the neighbourhood of Calcutta, but we have heard that at Malda they were getting scarce for the last two or three years.

UMBALLAH, APRIL 1.—"The Commander-in-Chief and his camp arrived here yesterday morning. At noon he held a levee, at which the officers of the station were presented to him. This morning he reviewed the troops, consisting of a troop of horse artillery and horse light field battery, H.M.'s 9th lancers, the 2nd light cavalry, H.M.'s 57th regiment, the 56th N.I. and 70th N.I. To-day, at noon, Lady Gomm held a drawing-room. Tomorrow they start for Kalka, and after visiting the stations of Dugshaie, Kussowlee, and Subathoo, expect to reach Simla about the 8th instant. Colonel Stewart, military secretary to Government, who has stayed here during the cold season, left for Simla on the 30th ultimo. In your last paper you have a report that Major Christie will succeed Major Mayne as Commandant of the G. G. Body Guard. It is understood here that Lieutenant Thompson, the second in command, is to be Major Mayne's successor. I ought to have noticed above, that Sir W. Gomm would not accept of any ball at this station, on account of the recent death of Sir D. Hill, commanding this division. The weather is hotter within the last fortnight, but still pleasant. We have cool mornings and evenings. Col. Buckley, our new brigadier, arrived at the station about a fortnight ago. The Seik guns taken in the late campaign have all been broken up. The old metal, I fancy, is to be sold."—Agra Messenger, April 5.

THE OFFICE OF CONTROLLER OF GOVERNMENT STEAMERS, long held so worthily by Capt. Johnson, is now abolished, and the whole duty thrown upon the superintendent of marine and the secretary.

PESHAWUR, 30th MARCH.—Things have been going on tolerably quiet here since the Governor-General's departure, and we are all looking forward with great disgust to the coming hot weather. The 61st and 98th remain, notwithstanding the Delhi Gazette's superior information when it differed with you. These regiments gave their ball on Friday night. The artillery gave their mess-room. The ball was not so brilliant as the last one, and the music was by no means as good as it should have been. Owing to the large quantity of plate at supper, no native servants were admitted, and the guests were waited upon by soldiers, dressed in white and looking very well, but they were not quite up in their attendance. However, taking it altogether, it was not a bad ball. The native infantry regiments gave another, somewhere about the middle of April. On the night of the ball, some Khaiberees made a most daring attack on the stables of an officer of the 98th, whose bungalow is surrounded by others; the chowkedar resisted, and has received several dangerous wounds in the head and back, one of which reached the lung. The fellows carried away one horse. This is certainly the most determined robbery committed for a long time.

JULLUNDHUR, April 2, 1851.—"Brigadier Sir Hugh M. Wheeler, K.C.B., returned to-day from his tour of inspection, having visited Kurtarpore, Hooshearpore, Boodee Pint, Hajee-pore, Noorpore, and Dhurmsala. The reviews of the corps here commence on the 4th, and when they are finished, the brigadier proposes to go to Nacoda and Philoor, for the same purpose. There are many good pukka roads in and about the station, and their number is daily increasing. At Lahore, pukka road-making is a very slow business, the Mooltan road, for example. The kunkur is laid down on the side of the road, whence it has to be again lifted, and placed where it is to make the road. Here the road is prepared for it, and the kunkur is at once put on the road, where it is to remain; this effects a great saving of time and labour. I do not remember to have noticed in the Chronicle, that a wing of irregular cavalry, the 13th, I believe, has gone to Goordaspore, the new cantonment. The 25th N.I., from Hajee-pore will, in all probability, follow next cold weather, and the station will be complete with a bullock battery, perhaps from Boodee-Pind. The weather looks, and feels, very hot-windish, but to-day it is cloudy, and the air still and heavy, so that I think we may say it promises, not threatens, rain."

KOOMAR HARENDRA KRISHNA, eldest son of Rajah Kalikrishna Bahadur, and a distinguished student of the Hindu College, has been appointed deputy magistrate of Rajshai. It is gratifying to find young native gentlemen, of good family, thus seeking and obtaining active and useful employment in the service of Government.

JUNG BAHADOOR has, it is said, determined not to execute any of the Nepalese sirdars who so lately endeavoured to assassinate him, and has peremptorily refused to have them blinded,—a punishment for which both the army and the maharajah were clamorous.

SURFURAZ KHAN, who was Nawab of Mooltan at the storming of that place by Maharajah Runjeet Sing, in 1818, died at Lahore, on the 13th March, aged 67. He received from the conqueror an allowance of Rs. 40,000, which was continued to him and his family by the British Government. By an arrangement sanctioned some two years since, he secured pensions for life to almost all his relatives and attendants, reserving to himself about Rs. 14,000, part of which will be saved to the State by his death.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

RUM AND SPIRITS

Camp, Peshawur, March 15, 1851.—The strength of the rum and spirits supplied from canteens varying at the several presidencies, and that issued in Bengal, which is only 10 per cent. under London proof being found to be injurious to the health of the soldier, the Most Noble the Governor-General of India, in order to insure uniformity, and in continuation of G.O.G.G. of the 25th of June last, is pleased to direct, that all rum or spirits issued from canteens at the three presidencies shall hereafter, in conformity with the practice in Bombay, be 24 per cent. under London proof.

The spirits will be kept in the commissariat stores at its present strength. When required by canteens, a responsible person is to be deputed, in whose presence its strength is to be tested, with both the commissariat and regimental hydrometers, and a sufficient quantity of water is to be added, to reduce it to 24 per cent. under London proof.

It is not intended that the retail price shall be altered, or that the soldier shall have less pure spirit for that price than at present. Enlarged measures adapted to contain the same quantity of pure spirit as at present, with the necessary proportion of water to dilute it to the extent mentioned, have been prepared at the Calcutta mint, and will be issued, through the military board, to corps and detachments.

FRED. D. ATKINSON, Capt. Asst. Sec. to Govt. of Indi. Mil. Dept. &c.

SAPPERS AND PIONEERS.

Camp, Akora, March 20th, 1851.—The present organization of the Corps of Sappers and Pioneers having been under the consideration of Government, the Most Noble the Governor-General, with the sanction of the Hon. the Court of Directors, is pleased to direct that the corps shall hereafter be designated the "Corps of Bengal Sappers and Miners."

The distinction between the Sapper and Pioneer Companies is to be abolished, and the corps is to be increased from ten to twelve companies of the present strength.

It is to be explained to the men, that the former designation of the corps is restored expressly on the condition of their performing all the duties usually required of sappers, miners, and pioneers.

As soon as arrangements can be made for posting engineer officers, the corps will be exclusively officered from the Corps of Engineers. In the meantime, the infantry officers, with the present pioneer companies, will continue attached to the corps.

For the purposes of annual training, and with a view to insure proper instruction to both officers and men, three companies are always to be retained at head-quarters, and all young officers of engineers will be directed to join the head-quarters of the corps, with which they are to do duty for twelve months.

The uniform of the corps will, as formerly, be red, with blue facings.

The commandant, instead of the present command allowance, will hereafter be allowed a staff salary equal to that of a first-class division in the department of Public Works, viz., Rs. 500 per mensem.

The adjutant, in addition to the present established allowance of Rs. 212 7 as. per mensem, will be allowed, for the first year, the Book Instrument, and Palkee allowance, as drawn by subaltern officers of engineers attached to the corps, and afterwards the staff salary of an assistant field engineer, Rs. 112 per mensem.

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief is requested to issue the necessary subsidiary orders for carrying into effect the re-organization of the corps.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Camp, Akora, March 20, 1851.—The Most Noble the Governor-General is pleased to extend the provisions of G. G. O.* No. 150 of the 9th May, 1845, to staff officers generally at the three Presidencies, who may hereafter be allowed, without suffering any pecuniary loss, temporary leave of absence for thirty days, irrespective of muster, twice in the course of the year, viz. once between Jan. 1 and June 30, and once between July 1 and Dec. 31; provided that all staff officers applying for leave shall make approved arrangements for the performance of their duty during their absence, and that no extra expense or inconvenience shall be occasioned to the state by the grant of such leave.

All regimental and other officers, who by existing regulations are permitted to be temporarily absent from their duty between musters, may hereafter be allowed leave of absence for thirty days irrespective of muster.

All officers on temporary leave of absence are permitted to proceed whenever they may wish without restriction, provided they can rejoin within the thirty days allowed.

Commanding officers and heads of departments will be held strictly responsible for the due insertion in the muster returns, both of the dates of actual departure as well as of return to their duties, of officers who have been absent on temporary leave.

Head Quarters, Camp, Deobund, March 22, 1851.—Notwithstanding all the general orders that have been issued by successive commanders-in-chief since the days of the Marquis of Hastings, it frequently occurs that officers leave Calcutta without reporting their departure to the brigade major Queen's troops, and pass through stations without reporting their arrival or departure to the brigadiers commanding, so that sometimes an officer disappears for months, and it is impossible, under any exigency of the service, to convey to him any order.

The Commander-in-Chief will hold commanding officers of corps responsible that the officers under their command are better instructed in their duty; and further, that officers who, either from ignorance or carelessness, thus transgress the regulations of the service, be not recommended for the indulgence of leave of absence until they can be trusted to be more observant in future.

An officer, who is travelling dāk, and does not halt at a station, may be excused from reporting himself personally to the brigadier, but he can always report in writing his arrival and intended departure.

It will be the duty of the brigade major, Calcutta, to make every officer, on his arrival from Europe, acquainted with this general order.

COURTS-MARTIAL.

LIUT. AYLMER WILLIAM MILTOWN WYLLY, 5TH L.C.

Head Quarters, Camp, Deobund, March 22, 1851.—At a general court-martial assembled at Jullunder, on Tuesday, Mar. 4, 1851, Lieut. A. W. M. Wyly, 5th L.C., was arraigned on the following charges, viz. :—

1st. For unbecoming conduct, in having, at Wuzerabad, on or about July 13, 1849, and on or about Aug. 7, 1849, employed Golam Hussain, pay havildar, 1st Tr. 5th L.C., in obtaining for him loans of Rs. 600, and Rs. 100, respectively, from native shroffs, for which the pay havildar became security for him.

2d. For unbecoming conduct and disobedience of the G.O., dated Dec. 30, 1843, in having, at Wuzerabad, on or about Aug. 7, 1849, borrowed from Golam Hussain, pay havildar, 1st Tr. 5th L.C., the sum of Rs. 100, and in having, during the months of Nov. and Dec. 1849, become indebted to the said pay havildar, to the further amount of Rs. 228 4 10, or thereabouts, expended in defraying his, Lieut. Wyly's, household expenses.

3d. For having, on Dec. 14, 1850, when orderly officer of the day, quitted the station of Nakoda, and proceeded to Jullunder, without leave, taking with him, without authority, one of the horses of the regt., and not returning to Nakoda until the following day.

4th.—For highly unbecoming conduct, in having at Nakoda, in letters addressed to the adjutant of the regt., and dated respectively, Sept. 10, 1850, Sept. 11, 1850, Oct. 10, 1850, and Dec. 4, 1850, falsely represented that, about the month of March or April, 1845, he had transmitted to the firm of A. Pittar, Lattey, and Co., jewellers, of Calcutta, a draft, or bill of exchange, for Rs. 184, or thereabouts, to take up a promissory note for Rs. 172 8 0, due by Lieut. F. W. Drummond, 8th L.C., to the said firm; he, Lieut. Wyly, having about Dec. 25, 1844, and Jan. 4, 1845, received from Lieut. Drummond funds to discharge the said promissory note, and having appropriated the same to his own use.

Finding.—On the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd charges, guilty.

On the 4th charge, not guilty, and acquits him thereof.

Sentence.—To be severely reprimanded in such manner as his Excellency the C-in-C. may be pleased to direct.

Confirmed.

(Signed) W. M. GOMM, Gen. C-in-C.

Remarks by His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.—Conforming to the judgment of the Court, the C-in-C. signifies to Lieut. A. W. M. Wyly his extreme displeasure at the course of proceeding of which that officer is here found guilty, involving irregularities of a highly reprehensible nature, which have been repeatedly denounced from authority, and pointedly so in G. O., Dec. 30, 1823 (Appendix A).

2. It is gratifying to the C-in-C. to find that Lieut. Wyly has been relieved by the Court from the reproach so fatal to moral character conveyed in the 4th charge.

3. Still, in so serious a light does the C-in-C. regard the departure from discipline involved in the three remaining charges proved, that he cannot but think the Court have passed a very lenient sentence, and he has, therefore, been only able simply to confirm, with signifying his approval of that sentence.

4. The C-in-C. has only further to hope, that this manifest leniency exercised towards Lieut. Wyly will rouse the spirit of the gentleman, as well as of the officer, into a more wholesome activity with him; and the favourable testimonials which the C-in-C. finds attached to the proceedings, and which he has perused with great interest, encourage him in the expectation that Lieut. Wyly will not disappoint him.

5. The C-in-C. directs that these remarks may be communicated to Lieut. Wyly in presence of the assembled officers of his corps, and that he will then be released from arrest and return to his duty.

MADRAS. NIZAM'S DOMINIONS.

Our Hyderabad (Dekkan) correspondent writes to us as follows under date April 9:—"The relation of the disorders and anarchy in the capital and provinces of the Nizam, is the sole task of the present budget. No minister is yet appointed, nor is any one talked of as likely to be appointed. Occasionally, Shums-ool-Oomra is desired to examine and audit the Dufftardar's accounts, but is checked ere these are well commenced by the Nizam's insane bias towards his pets (the pests of the country), the Dufftardars. Next, when his fears are aroused, his Highness deputed Suraj-ool-Moolk to wait on the Resident, and endeavour by his influence with him and the English, to carry some point, or obviate some measures which for the moment excite his fears. And yet such is his inconsistency, and such his jealousy of Suraj-ool-Moolk's intimate and oft-recurring intercourse with the English, that on the very last occurrence of a dinner party given by the former to the latter, when it was said that the party was kept up to a late hour, his Highness ordered the city kotwal to retain the city gates' keys in his possession, and not to allow ingress or egress to any one, but by his special permission, between certain hours. This order is supposed to refer particularly to Suraj-ool-Moolk's parties. But this mode of exhibiting his jealousy and disapprobation is pusillanimous indeed. An order directed to Suraj-ool-Moolk to discontinue them would be more becoming to his position; but he fears to excite the displeasure of the Resident.

"The Nuwab of Ellichpore continues to hold his districts in Berar in spite of the Nizam and the army sent by him against the former. That army being, like the rest of the Nizam's establishment, very considerably in arrears, showed unequivocal symptoms of mutiny and intentions of extreme measures against their commander, who, flying from their wrath, sought refuge in Scindeah's country in Boorhanpore. The troops consisting principally of Rohillas and other mercenaries, followed him thither, and compelled him to put himself at their head and to return to the Nizam's country. He, regarding this as the best policy to save himself from personal violence, and them from unrestrained plunder and murder, has accordingly re-entered the Nizam's country, has attacked and taken the strong fort of Namulla, and they are ravaging the whole country, no doubt amply reimbursing themselves for the nonpayment of their arrears by the Nizam."—Bombay Telegraph, April 16.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A LECTURE ON ART was delivered by Dr. Hunter in the School of Arts, April 10. In the course of his address the Doctor observed, "We are now receiving large orders for those ornamental flower-pots, paving-tiles, goblets, milk-jugs, butter-pots, and busts, and I have no doubt that when parties in England find that we can make such articles at much cheaper rates than they can be manufactured at in other countries, we shall have more skilled workmen coming out to assist us. I am constantly applied to now for woodcuts to illustrate different publications; and if we can only get up an efficient agency to execute these, I feel confident that it will lead to important results. My only regret is, that we have so few artistic labourers in India who can assist us in the departments of wood-engraving, etching, and lithography, which are to us at least the most important departments of art, as they enable us to get at the public, and to show them how we are getting on. I come now to the most pleasing part of the lecture, viz., the awarding of the prizes for the best drawings done during the last month. First prize awarded to Mr. J. Binny, for diligence and proficiency in landscape and foliage. Second prize, to Mr. J. Bond, for proficiency in ornamental drawings and studies from plants and mathematical figures. Prize given to the best pupil out of 40 in the Vepery Grammar School awarded to Mr. G. Macfarlane."

OOTACAMUND, April.—The weather during the past month has been fair, with slight indications of the approaching monsoon. It is reported that at Coonoor and Kotagerry heavy rains have fallen, so that we may expect some very soon. The high winds during the past month have been somewhat disagreeable and scorching. Everywhere the cultivators are busy in preparing the seed for their crops. The burghers are all hard at work, and the gardeners about the station have large crops of potatoes and all other kinds of vegetables coming on rapidly. The frost this year was very severe, and continued much beyond the usual time; even at the beginning of last month it was frequent. The Right Reverend the Lord Bishop of Madras has arrived here from the southward, accompanied by his lady and an assistant-surgeon. His lordship preached on Sunday the 23rd of March, and again on Wednesday, the 26th.

DEATH OF MISS LOCHER OF MADRAS.—The death of a pious lady, who was attached to missionary enterprise—Miss E. Locher of Zurich, Switzerland, sister of Mrs. Anderson, wife of the Rev. Mr. Anderson, of the Free Church of Scotland, took place in April; and this lady's demise has elicited some respectful notices from the local press. Among the gentlemen who were pall-bearers at the funeral were the Rev. Mr. Braidwood, Rev. Mr. Anderson, A. F. Bruce, Esq., and the Rev. W. H. Drew.

TRAVANCORE, March.—Mrs. and the two Misses Cullen passed northward on their return from Trevandrum to Cochin after a month's visit at the former place. Capt. Gordon arrived at Quilon February 28th, and rejoined his regiment after a visit to Britain. Lieut. col. Watkins, deputy commissary-general, passed through from the north in continuation of his protracted peregrinations. Capt. Horsley, of the engineers, passed southward to Tinnevely, after a visit to examine some works on the borders of Cochin and Travancore, and a look in at the Resident. Major Grant went from Trevandrum about the middle of the month to await at Galle the arrival of Mrs. Grant by steamer from England. Mr. Kinlock, chaplain for Quillon, has arrived to enter on his duties: it appears that he is to leave for Cochin and Trevandrum. Mr. Roberts has returned to Trevandrum after a year's absence at Madras on leave. He has resumed his duties at his Highness's Free School, to which, during his absence, his son is said to have attended. Among these movements, I notice the absence from Trevandrum of Dr. Paterson. Several destructive fires have lately occurred in the fort at Trevandrum. By one on the 26th March, said to have been caused by the boiling over of the Bramin's fat, some forty of their houses were consumed. It is said that the sircar had given 2,000 fanams, or nearly Rs. 300, to help in repairing the damage, and that an order has been issued that in future none shall live inside the fort, but those who are in tiled dwellings; if so, this order will cause some stir and distress to those who have not influence enough to obtain protection in disregarding it, and will then be attended to as much as though it had been that they were to roof their houses with glass.—Athenæum Correspondent.

MERIAH SACRIFICES.—We learn that the four companies of the 18th N.I., which were out with Captains McVicar and Frye, for the suppression of the Meriah sacrifices in the Orissa Hills, have returned to Head Quarters at Belhampore, but only one European officer, Ensign Dashwood, has accompanied them. The other officers of the detachment, as also the two agents above mentioned, being all prostrated by fever. In return for this suffering on the part of the officers, they have the consolation, it is said, of knowing that 500 destined victims have been rescued, during the present season; a fact, by the way, which does not exactly bear out the past representations of the present agency, touching the great things that they have done toward suppressing the sacrifices, in contradistinction to the small results obtained by their displaced predecessors.—Spectator, April 7.

CONVERSION OF A BRAHMIN.—Some sensation has been created among the religious and native circles of the community by the conversion to the Christian faith of a Brahmin youth of the Iyengar, or highest caste. Sreenavassa Iyer, the name of the new convert, received his education at the Madras High School, where he continued four or five years, but left without completing the entire course of study prescribed at that institution. As the verata questions of theology are wisely excluded from the High School curriculum, and as Sreenavassa, since his scholastic career terminated, has not been under missionary instruction, his conversion to Christianity must be ascribed to the intellectual light received through the medium of the much abused secular education imparted at the Government seminary, which enabled him to discern the weak points of Hinduism, and to the course of religious reading, private conversation, and reflection, opportunity has since enabled him to make use of. The initiatory rite of the Christian church is to be performed to-morrow evening at the Protestant church of St. Thomé; let us trust that the subsequent life of the neophyte will afford unquestionable evidence of the genuineness of his convictions and the sincerity of his motives. His great desire is, we are told, to be ordained a missionary to his countrymen.—Athenæum, April 12.

NATIVE LANGUAGES.—The Court of Directors have granted to Lieut. Boddam, 15th N.I., a donation of Rs. 1,000, as a mark of their approbation of his having qualified as interpreter in Hindoostani, Tamil, and Telugoo.

CHURCH MUSIC.—The Bangalore Herald states that the Rev. Mr. Morant, the chaplain at Bellary, "has been successful in forming a complete orchestra of vocal and instrumental performers, who are now practising some of the most beautiful compositions of Handel and Sebastian Bach." This excellent example might be followed by all the chaplains in Madras.—The lady of Lieut. Taylor, of the Fusiliers, has undertaken the arduous task of instructing a class of the girls of the regiment in the "divine art."—There is some talk of the grand Oratorio, the "Messiah," being performed ere long by the Fusilier band, who are to be assisted by thirty voices.—Eastern Guardian, April 5.

HER MAJESTY'S SHIP "HASTINGS," bearing the flag of his Exc. Rear-Admiral C. J. Austen, C.B., left the Roads on Saturday evening. The Admiral embarked on the South Beach, opposite the Marine Villa, under a salute of 15 guns.—Athenæum, April 8.

H.M. 51st REGT. L.I. on the right, 43rd regt. centre, and 9th regt. N.I., have left Madras.—Ibid.

NEW PERIODICAL.—The first number of the Madras Miscellany gives a favourable impression of the work. The selections from English periodicals appear to be made with judgment and taste.—Athenæum.

SALUTES.—A salute of eleven guns was fired (April 8) on the occasion of Commodore Lambert's embarkation, and also on the For leaving the roads, a like salute.

THE NAUTCH OF THE NABOB OF THE CARNATIC.—A nautch was in April given by the Nabob of the Carnatic, at Chepauk Palace, to which a large company were invited to meet his Exc. Admiral Austen. Upwards of two hundred ladies and gentlemen were present. Amongst the number were the Commander-in-Chief Sir George Berkeley, Sir Henry Montgomery, and the Hon. Daniel Elliot. Besides the dancing, two pretty Malabar girls entertained the company with a series of singular feats in tumbling—turning themselves into a hoop form, by taking hold of their feet with their hands backwards and rolling themselves along the hall. The rooms used on this occasion were beautifully ornamented, under the direction of Mr. Deschamps—the artificial flowers being particularly admired. The principal refreshment-room was decorated in a style which combined the greatest brilliancy with the most correct taste. Everything that could be desired in the way of ices and champagne, soda-water, confections, &c. &c., was supplied to satisfaction by Mr. Laybourne. Between eleven and twelve the then remaining guests were dismissed with garlands of flowers, sprinklings of rose-water, &c. Every person appeared to be well pleased with the entertainments, which at a great deal of trouble and expense had been got up on this occasion.—Athenæum.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

CAPT. HENRY WAKEMAN, 42ND N.I.

Fort St. George, March 28, 1851.—The Right Honourable the Governor in Council directs the publication of the following despatch from the honourable the Court of Directors to the Most Noble the Governor-General of India, ordering the dismissal of Captain Henry Wakeman, of the 42d Regiment, N.I., from the service.

Military Department, No. 2 of 1851.

Our Governor-General of India in Council.

Reply to revenue letter from the Governor-General, dated July 14, 1850, No. 1.

Transmit papers relating to certain travelling allowances charged by Captain Henry Wakeman, 42d Regt. Madras N.I., deputy-commissioner in Saugor, for periods during which he was not actually on circuit. After due investigation into Captain Wakeman's conduct, he was permitted to resign his appointment on the understanding that he retires within twenty days after his resignation. Also revenue letter, dated October 1850, No. 2.

It has been reported to the Governor General that Captain Wakeman has, in violation of the condition above mentioned, surreptitiously obtained leave from the Military Department at Calcutta, and has repaired to England, retaining his position in the military service. The Governor General submits his opinion that his recent act has so much aggravated his original offence, that he ought to be dismissed from the service instead of being permitted to retire from it.

Para. 1. After full inquiry, it was ascertained that Captain Wakeman had preferred a charge for travelling tentage during a large number of days on which he was residing in his own house at his head quarter station, and that he supported his bill by a false and fictitious statement of the stages at which he had encamped upon those days respectively.

2. Captain Wakeman, in a letter (without date) forwarded to Government by the commissioner of the Saugor and Nerbudda territories, dated on the 30th May, 1850, stated that, in consequence of his shattered health, he was unable to meet the investigation of any charge against him, and requested to be allowed to resign his appointment "to be followed within twenty days by my retiring from the service altogether."

3. Your Government replied as follows, under date the 5th July, 1850.

"Under ordinary circumstances, the Governor General would not permit any officer, in the position in which Captain Wakeman has placed himself to resign his appointment. He would dismiss him, and gazette him as dismissed.

"Captain Wakeman appears, from previous correspondence, to have been, as he describes himself, shattered in body and mind. His lordship does not consider this as an excuse of the dishonest charge against the state, of which he has been convicted, but it is, perhaps, an extenuation of that or of any other culpable act which he might have committed.

"The Governor General therefore permits Captain Wakeman to resign his appointment, on the understanding that he is to retire twenty days after his resignation."

4. It now appears that Captain Wakeman, instead of retiring from the service, obtained surreptitiously, through the adjutant-general's department at the presidency, a sick furlough to England, as published in G. O. of the 2nd August, 1850, and that he sailed from Calcutta on the 8th of that month.

5. The Governor-General observes that "Captain Wakeman has, in many ways, been treated with leniency, which was continued to the last, and which now appears to have been undeserved and misplaced. He was convicted of grossly dishonest and dishonourable conduct. He was treated with indulgence, on condition of retiring from a service which he had disgraced. Captain Wakeman has accepted the indulgence, but has violated the condition."

6. Before proceeding to a decision on this case, we resolved to give Captain Wakeman (who had reported his arrival in this country) an opportunity of furnishing any explanation of his conduct which he might have in his power to lay before us.

7. We have now received his reply, from which it appears that he deliberately abstained from fulfilling the condition above specified, in order that he might "make arrangements" with his regiment.

8. On a full consideration of all these circumstances, we have resolved that Captain Wakeman be dismissed from our service, and that this dismissal take effect from the expiration of twenty days from the date when his resignation of his office as deputy commissioner in Saugur was accepted by your Government.

(Signed) JOHN SHEPHERD, and 12 other Directors.

London, Jan. 22, 1851.

The dismissal of Captain Wakeman is to take effect from the 31st July, 1850.

SURAT.

Surat, the marine capital of Gozerat, is supposed to be one of the oldest cities of Hindoostan. After the discovery of the passage by the Cape, it was much frequented by ships from Europe; diamonds, pearls, ambergris, civet musk, gold, silks, and, above all, cottons, being exported from it in abundance. Such was the number of Moslem pilgrims who went from it to Mecca annually, that it was looked on as one of the great gates of the Holy City. In front of the gate is an even smooth expanse, which, in the rich tenacious delta soil, even in March, retains some semblance of grass. Immediately at the base of the wall is a large open ditch,—the course not infrequently of a torrent. The walls are of stone; they surround the whole city for a circuit of some six miles, forming a sort of semicircle, of which the Taptee is the chord. The wall is about twenty feet high, defended by semi-circular towers, with lancet-shaped battlements, and very unserviceable-looking gates. The stranger is at once struck with a peculiarity in the walls to provide against a class of contingencies to which Surat is proverbially liable,—large sets of square holes or conduits, to permit the water to pass through in case of floods. The outer wall encloses a space called "the refuge of the world;" there is an inner wall, built nearly parallel to the first, or at an interval of some forty to a hundred yards from it, called "the refuge of the city," and which is now in a state of extreme dilapidation. There are no hotels, or places of public reception, in Surat; but when he arrives in front of a large range of handsome buildings, fronting and overlooking the river, with its spacious verandahs and ample glass windows, the traveller imagines he can have no great reason to regret the want of an inn; to his astonishment, he finds that, though the bungalow is an excellent one, it is neither provided with servants, fire, food, nor furniture: an old sepoy keeps the key, and everything is clean and neat within, but beds, chairs, cooking apparatus, fuel, servants, and food, have all to be provided. The Taptee flows past immediately in front of the traveller's resting-place; it here makes a sudden flexure towards the town, and is rapidly eating away the bank, from the Castle downwards. The houses are mainly built of brick, and the bricks are about the worst that can be imagined. They are about a foot in length, and half as much across; their thickness can only be guessed at, from the extreme irregularity of the lower surface. The clay is of first-rate quality for brick and tile making, were it somewhat less fusible, but no attempt is made at tempering or mixing it.

Surat is a singularly ugly town; the buildings are rude, mean, irregular, and ill-constructed; at no time could it ever have boasted of anything bearing the semblance of architecture, the Castle excepted. Structures, unsightly from the first, have been rendered doubly so by the appearance of squalor and decay attaching to nearly them all; the ravages of fire and flood are visible everywhere, and for scarcely a hundred yards on end are the walls of the houses perpendicular. The clay on which they have been built has given way, and the foundations stripped during the inundation, or the heat which ensued, and the walls cracked, twisted, and warped in every imaginable direction,—and nothing but the strong teak framing, binding them together, has saved them from destruction. Even the church looks slovenly and ill-conditioned, and the castle flagstaff leans a yard at least off the perpendicular. Every third or fourth house you meet with is uninhabited; the open spots, where the buildings have been destroyed by fire, are still rife with the relics of the conflagration. The bricks of the ruined walls, and the fragments of the beams, remain where they had fallen; in many cases, portions of the furniture are seen leaning against the walls. Where shops had been destroyed, the cinders of burnt sugar or sweetmeats, and rags of charred cloth, might be picked up. It looks as if the people had felt that their city was doomed, and, when portions of its destiny overtook it in succession, made no effort to resist or soften the disasters that visited them.—Bom. Times.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE LONDON MAIL of March the 7th, arrived at Bombay on the 4th ult., per Achar. The succeeding mail of March 24, left Aden on the 16th ult.

COTTON AND GINS IN DHARWAR.—Extract of a letter from Belgaum: "In this (the Dharwar) collectorate, you see the cotton growing in the utmost luxuriance, and there is a clever European machinist who has arranged a gin which, with two men, cleans sixty pounds of cotton an hour. The natives like them very much, and he cannot make them fast enough: they have seven saws, and cost Rs. 50 complete, with multiplying wheels. The ryots actually besiege his shop, and stand over his workmen, urging them to complete the gins quickly for them."

THE CLOSING OF THE FIVE PER CENT. LOAN was made public in Bombay on the evening of the 14th of April: on the following day, an improvement of 3 per cent. took place in the Company's paper.

ROMANISM IN INDIA.—The Achar steamer (I.N.), which brought the mails of March 7th from Suez, conveyed six Italian priests to Bombay: these Roman Catholic functionaries were the bearers of a mission from the Pope addressed to Bishop Hartmann, in charge of the Bombay vicariate. A very interesting allocation addressed by Pius IX. to the secret consistory at Rome, has since been published. His Holiness narrates the method which he adopted to induce the late schismatic Archbishop of Goa to resign his see, and accept the coadjutorship of the arch episcopacy of Braga in Portugal. The whole document is extremely interesting and instructive. The Portuguese element of discord in the Roman Catholic churches of Bombay will now probably be eliminated, as the Italians have got the long-sought-for mastery in the struggle.—Bombay Telegraph, April 17.

NATIVE SURGEONS.—The Bombay Telegraph records the bestowal of the first medical diplomas which have issued from the Grant Medical College, an institution corresponding with the Calcutta Medical College. The young men, chiefly Parsees and Hindoos, who have received these diplomas, will be the first regularly instructed native surgeons who have ever practised on the Bombay side. They are said to have passed most creditable examinations.

THE SOUTHERN MAHRATTA HORSE.—We are informed that the head-quarters of the Southern Mahratta Horse, Major Ramsay commanding, have been ordered to move from Sattara to Kullalighee. Some unpleasant rumours regarding a recent stretch of authority on the part of the commanding officer of this corps have, we hear, been in circulation, which is said to have led to the resignation of the adjutancy by Lieut. Loch. It is stated that a native officer of the regiment was publicly flogged by sentence of a punchayet, without the sanction of the commissioner at Sattara, under whose authority they are placed. Matters after this are believed not to have proceeded very smoothly betwixt the commanding officer and the commissioner, which has probably led to the transfer of the corps.—Bombay Times, April 16.

WHEEL TAX FRAUDS.—The commission of inquiry into the alleged wheel-tax frauds had been sitting for some days in open court. The superintendent of police, Captain Edward Baynes, and two magistrates, Mr. Danvers and Mr. L. C. C. Rivett, had been examined without, however, eliciting any important facts, or indeed any matters of interest. A notorious native, named the Bhow, whose connection with the police has occasioned much discussion, was examined amongst others; he stated that one of the Parsees in the Wheel-tax Office, recently dead, was so dexterous and accomplished a thief that he could take the antimony off a man's eyelids without being detected. The native practice of smearing this black mineral over their eyelids will explain this hyperbole, which, considering its source, is not bad. The commission was not likely to bring to light any circumstances of importance, judging from the evidence already published.—Bombay Telegraph, April 7.

OFFICIAL ARRANGEMENTS.—We believe the rumour that one of the judgeships of the Sudder Court is about to be abolished to be incorrect. The vacancy created by Mr. Bell's elevation to the Council Board, on the 28th, will be filled up on the return of the Governor to the presidency. We do not feel ourselves at liberty to mention the name of the party likely to be appointed. The Mofussil police is at present under the charge of the Sudder Adawlut—the arrangement is found to be an inconvenient one, and it is intended at some future period to appoint a police commission, on which this branch of duty will devolve. When this arrangement is carried into effect, it is probable that one of the judgeships will be abolished. No saving is expected to arise from this, though the public business will be more conveniently managed than as matters now stand. The whole matter, however, is contingent and remote, and nothing beyond what we have just stated has been arranged regarding it.—Ibid.

THE YOUNG HOLKAR, who is just about to come of age, and who has been under the tutelage successively of Sir Claude Wade and Mr. R. N. C. Hamilton, the former and present residents at Indore, has intimated his desire to go to Europe and to visit England, in which intention it is surmised this Hindoo prince will be encouraged by the Indian Government.—Bombay Telegraph, April 17.

LAUNCH OF THE "FALKLAND" STEAMER.—A number of ladies and gentlemen assembled in the building-yard on the forenoon of April 4, to witness the launch of the new iron steamer just finished. Amongst others there were Mesdames Davidson, Fuljames, and Kingcome; Miss Warden, Major Davidson, Captains Tremenheere and Fuljames, the dockyard authorities, C. Kingcome, Esq. &c. &c. An awning decorated with the flags of all nations was erected on the right of the slips for the accommodation of the party. At noon precisely it was announced that everything was ready; when the ceremony of breaking the bottle of champagne on the sternpost was performed by Mrs. Davidson, who named the vessel the Falkland. The wedges were then struck from under her bows, and she glided down rapidly into the water, the governor's band playing the appropriate air, "Rule Britannia," the battery greeting her on her reaching her future element with a salute of twenty-one guns. She is 230 feet from stem to stern, and 33 feet beam: she will, when laden, draw, it is expected from 18 to 24 inches water, and will, with baggage-boats in tow, be able to carry a regiment with all its traps. She was constructed by Mr. Laird, of Birkenhead—her engines are by Maudsley and Sons, of London,—and she is provided with a patent capstan invented by Lieutenant Fergusson, of the Indian Navy, which is worked by cog-wheels by the main shaft of the engine. The great use of this variety of capstan on the Indus is to pull the steamers off the sand-banks. A pair of engines of the joint power of 160 horses will be equal in efficiency to 800 men in working the capstan; and this on an anchor well out from the vessel, ought to pull her off or pull her over every sort of bank, where the most moderate supply of water is procurable, far more efficiently than the cumbrous wheels of Bourne. The dubious matter in steamers of the size of those now getting ready for us, on the Indus, is the difficulty their great length will present at the banks which elbow into the river, or the places where sudden turns occur. There can be no doubt of the enormous importance of Mr. Fergusson's contrivance for all haulage purposes, under whatever circumstances difficulties may present themselves.—The Falkland was taken round to the dockyard for the purpose of having her machinery put in, and will, it is expected, be ready to proceed to her destination in the course of a fortnight.

MALWA.—A letter from Malwa says: "The young Holkar of Indore seems improved in manners and knowledge by his late trip to Upper India. He is now earnestly engaged in improving his capital by widening the streets, removing the nuisances, and attending to its general cleanliness. The several departments of the state have also attracted his attention; and it is to be hoped that any reform which he may introduce may be for the better. The troops likewise are attended to, and practised almost every day, a thing perhaps never known here since the time of Jusuwent Rao. The cavalry was drawn out the other day, and reviewed personally by the chief. The men and horses appeared better dressed and drilled than they used to be. At the termination of the review, a short but appropriate speech was made by H. H. to the officers and men, in commendation of the day's work, and the General Officer, a young but an active and promising lad, was presented with a sword on the occasion.—In methodical arrangements and court fashion and system, the Holkar's court has been, comparatively speaking, a poor model in India, but now almost every thing is beginning to assume a better aspect. Such servants of the state as show activity, industry, and habits of business, do not fail generally from being marked and noticed; whilst those who are indolent and stupid lose ground in the estimation of the chief—a change very prophetic as to the future prosperity of the state. It is, indeed, the spontaneous result of the personal vigilance and energy shown by the chief in the management of his affairs. A reform in the scale of the custom duties—a most desirable thing—is also contemplated; and it is hoped its introduction may be attended with excellent results and benefits to the trade and the people. In short, H. H. is now full of public zeal, and desirous of improvements. The late visit of Lord Grosvenor, who was lately a guest in the Residency, and paid a visit to Holkar's court while here, has served as a great stimulus to the young chief, and we will not be surprised to hear of him roaming about one day in the streets of the European towns, as he has been just doing in those of Upper India. We are hopeful that his visit to Europe will not be without many sure advantages to his own country. He himself feels inspired with similar hopes, and appears, therefore, resolute in his design, though he fully knows that he will have to conflict with numerous prejudices of his caste and religion. The improvements in the Residency are as progressive as ever. We see now a traveller's bungalow in the course of construction. A 'Mosäfer Khanä,' for the accommodation of the native traveller, has just been finished. A new road to the town has been completed and metalled, and a new one for an evening drive has been recently marked out and cleared within the limits of the Residency."—Bombay Telegraph, April 5.

BELGAUM, March 29.—Cholera is raging at this station, and in the surrounding villages. The weather is dreadful, the heat scorching, and the dust flying about in clouds. Not the slightest sign of rain is visible.

CEYLON.

The event of the month is the assembling at Colombo of a court-martial for the trial of Capt. Albert Watson, of the Ceylon Rifles, on charges connected with celebrated proclamations. This will, probably, form the last act of the Ceylon tragedy of 1848.

The Governor is still residing at his Hill Palace in Kandy, where, we understand, he most industriously applies himself to public business. Mr. MacCarthy's health is restored, and he has resumed attendance at his office in Colombo. So that we may hope to see the Legislative Council speedily opened with many measures of economy and reform matured for their consideration. Amongst the rest we hope the Governor will intimate some prospect of an enlargement and change in the constitution of the body itself, before it is vested, as is proposed, with full control over the whole island expenditure. To vest a number of civil servants and a few Government nominees, with the power of fixing the salaries to be paid to public servants would be simply absurd. Besides the report of the finance committee sent home two years ago, the estimates, including the civil establishments, &c., &c., it is understood that Mr. MacCarthy has prepared a full and detailed report on the government and finance of the colony. All that we have hitherto seen from the pen of the secretary leads us to expect a document characterised by much ability. Government are receiving suggestions from various quarters. They have been addressed on things in general by the Chamber of Commerce; and on roads and taverns in particular by a public meeting that assembled under the presidency of Sir Anthony Oliphant at Kandy. From all that we have seen, and all that we have heard, it seems pretty evident that the Governor has a will of his own, and that he is determined to exercise it.—Colombo Observer, April 15.

CHINA.

THE LONDON MAIL of Jan. 24, arrived at Hong Kong on March the 18th, per Achilles.

TRANSPORT OF COOLIES FROM CHINA.—The cause of humanity demands some attention to the circumstances attendant on the transport of Coolies from China to the west coast of South America. The emigrants who, in most cases, are men possessing a knowledge of some kind of handicraft, and who engage for a period of five years to work in tilling the soil—manufacturing sugar—clearing ground—herding cattle—driving carts or ploughs—doing garden work—making and repairing roads—erecting buildings—or in doing such other work as may be required, and in exercise of their knowledge and ability as mechanics or tradesmen, for the small stipend of four dollars per month each, are, instead of being treated as they might expect to be, directly on their arrival at Lima, transhipped into other vessels, in which they are taken to the islands of Chinche, near Pisco, and there employed in collecting and shipping off guano. It appears that these islands have recently been farmed out by the Peruvian government to a company of Spanish adventurers, for whom the Coolies we speak of are in reality engaged. There they are likely to remain, from year's end to year's end, uncheered by aught that serves to render existence bearable. Well guarded by bayonnetted marines from a man-of-war anchored off the islands, their hard fate appears to be on a par with that of the convicts on Norfolk Island.—Friend of China, March 29.

SHANGHAI.—THE RIDING COURSE.—Some difficulty had arisen respecting the line of road marked out for the completion of the riding course. Since then a body of Chinchew men, paid no doubt for the purpose by some parties objecting to the completion of the road from private motives, assembled and drove off the workmen from a piece of land where some of the committee were engaged with the proprietors in measuring it off, and the following day, although the work had stopped at the request of the authorities, until they could ascertain the reasons for such unprovoked aggression, they again assembled and broke down a bridge which was in progress of erection over a watercourse. This attempt to interfere between the proprietors and the merchants in the disposal of the land by parties who had no real or vested interest in the matter, and the manifest determination to stop the work by intimidating both proprietors and workmen, rendered it necessary for Her Majesty's Consul to take the matter up, and insist upon the local authorities putting a stop to such lawless proceedings, and punishing the actors in them.—Friend of China, March 30.

HONG-KONG AND CANTON STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY.—For the first time since the formation of the Hong-Kong and Canton Steam Navigation Company, the master of one of their vessels the Canton, has been fined by the British consul for a breach of the regulations of the port. The infliction in the full penalty of 200 dollars for a first conviction, under circumstances of some extenuation, has given rise to an opinion that Dr. Bowring [has acted in the matter with undue harshness. This opinion, however, is an erroneous one; for the amount of the fine being payable to the Chinese government, it did not remain with the Consul to abate the penalty by a single cent. The case out of which infliction of the penalty arose was that nine cases of broken coral, the duty on which would be about Taels, thirty, were sent on board the Canton whilst lying in Hong Kong, during the absence of the chief mate, and a receipt was given for them by the master. Dr. Bowring was compelled by the 12th article of the Supplementary Treaty, to notify the Chinese authorities of the smuggling transaction that had come to his knowledge. In further pursuance of his duty he was also bound to prosecute and inflict full penalty for neglect to make due entry. The Hoppo, we hear, is desirous that the 200 dollars shall be returned; so that he may be saved the trouble of making an entry in his book, upon which on some future occasion an unpleasant question may be asked. But Dr. Bowring has refused so to receive the money back; such a course requiring first the sanction of the Superintendent of Trade, to whom the matter has been duly referred.—Friend of China, March 30.

NATIVE OUTRAGES ON AMERICAN GENTLEMEN.—The Friend of China, March 30, furnishes the particulars of another outrage on the person of the "barbarian;" fortunately, in this instance, without a tragic result. Two American gentlemen, Messrs. Cunningham and Manigault, on the morning of the 3rd March, with a Chinese guide, on an excursion to the white cloud mountain, distant some half a dozen miles from Canton. They were returning in their chairs, and when, about half way home, in a lonely place, were set upon by about a dozen miscreants, who after beating, and severely wounding, robbed them of their watches, valuables, and outer garments. Resistance was perfectly futile, nor had they anything, excepting umbrellas, with which to defend themselves.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

The latest advices from the Cape are to the 4th April, bringing the following additional intelligence from Caffraria, which leaves affairs in that quarter nearly in statu quo.

On the 25th of February, a strong patrol marched, under Colonels Mackinnon and Eyre, which, with the assistance of the Fingoes at Fort Peddie, captured 1,635 head of cattle, and devastated the country; the troops returned in two divisions—that under Col. Eyre by way of Fort White and King William's Town; the other, under Col. Mackinnon, first proceeded to Line Drift. On the 5th of March, Col. Mackinnon marched with 2,500 men and two guns to throw supplies into Forts White and Cox; on his return from the latter place, on the 6th, the Caffres made an attempt to cut off the mule waggons, which the colonel's arrangements frustrated, and enabled him to inflict a loss upon them of 100 killed and many wounded. On the 13th, another of those unexpected and mysterious occurrences happened in King William's Town, which demonstrate the extreme difficulty of dealing with the coloured population of the colony, and of their systematic and deplorable faithlessness: this was the desertion of 70 Hottentots, 46 belonging to the Cape Mounted Rifles, including three sergeants. This corps has hitherto been distinguished for its zeal and loyalty, and the necessity for disarming the remainder, which was done on the following day, besides the party at East London, is a misfortune not easily repaired; the horses and arms of 100 were transferred to a selected number of men belonging to the western levies. Some of them had been long in the force, and were considered decidedly steady, religious men. A portion of this force, stationed at Fort Hare, though nearer their Kat River confederates, professes continued and steadfast loyalty to the Government, and are confided in by Gen. Somerset, who mustered them on the 19th of March, and addressed them respecting the defection of their companions in arms at King William's Town, when they unanimously declared that they would fight till the last with their veteran leader.

On the 18th, Sir H. Smith, in consequence of information received by him of a contemplated attack on Fort Hare during the absence of Gen. Somerset, marched there from King William's Town; some skirmishing occurred with the Caffres on his route, which resulted in their loss of 40 or 50, among whom were three of the deserters from the Cape Mounted Rifles. Only one man was wounded on our side.

The defection of the Cape Mounted Riflemen greatly encouraged the Caffres, who assumed an insolent tone, and even attacked some men with a waggon within two miles of King William's Town; two of the Englishmen accompanying it were severely wounded, and the party had some difficulty in reaching that place.

It was confidently hoped that the capture and dispersion of the Fort Armstrong traitors would have had a most salutary effect upon the tribes in arms against the colonists; but the temporary re-occupation of the Kat River districts by rebel bands, in consequence of the numerous calls upon the services of troops, and other untoward events, speedily dispelled any such expectations.

Gen. Somerset had captured a quantity of booty and a number of waggons at Philipton, Eland's Post, and other places on the Kat River.

During the operations against Fort Armstrong, and upon other occasions, the eagerness of our Fingoe allies to capture cattle, whether belonging to friends or foes, has caused their commanders much trouble, while the chaotic confusion of races, and the diversity of interests among the frontier inhabitants, render the conducting of the war in a satisfactory manner one of the most arduous undertakings possible.

On the north-east, the Tambookies are kept in check by the burghers; but a small party, under Commissioner Cole, of about 140 men, composed of boers, English, Bastards, and Hottentots, who advanced from Sterksspruit against the chief Moroise, unsupported, met with a severe reverse, and the English lost nine of their number, who were killed. The troops under Major Warden happily came up and saved the remainder of the party.

Small parties of Caffres are in the colony doing much mischief, but the occupation of Caffraria by the troops under Sir H. G. Smith has, no doubt, prevented their swarming in the Adde Bush, and their other favourite lurking-places in the former wars.

A public meeting was held at Graham's Town on the 19th of March, and resolutions were passed to the effect that a memorial should be addressed to his Excellency, praying that he will appoint a judicial commission to inquire into the causes of the present rebellion among the Hottentots and coloured inhabitants of the colony. The proceedings chiefly referred to the Kat River affair, and the conduct of the missionaries.

A proclamation has been issued, calling upon the mounted burghers of the western districts, to the number of 300, to proceed to the front.

Upon disbanding a portion of the Cape Mounted Rifles, on the ground of disaffection, Sir H. Smith paid the following tribute to the officers in command, in a general order:—"It is with the deepest regret that the Commander-in-Chief has been compelled to deprive a considerable number of the detachment Cape Mounted Rifles, under Lieut. col. Napier, of their arms and horses; a corps with whom he has served so long,—a corps heretofore the admiration of every Commander-in-Chief, and of the officers and soldiers of the army. Whatever may be the infatuation which has led to this melancholy defection in a corps where once a truly military spirit alone existed, Lieut. col. Napier and the officers of the Cape Mounted Rifles have exerted themselves to the utmost to avert it; their conduct upon all occasions is of the highest order, whether in the field before an enemy, or in quarters; and truly does the Commander-in-Chief, as well as every British officer and soldier in this command, sympathize in their naturally wounded feelings. Lieut. col. Napier and the officers of this detachment may rest assured this expression of approbation of their services will be submitted to his Grace the Duke of Wellington, the Commander-in-Chief."

The men who deserted from the Cape Mounted Rifles have relapsed from Christianity in a body and returned to their original Paganism, the labours of the missionaries having been lost upon them, and the knowledge they have acquired of the use of arms have rendered them more dangerous enemies than they would have been.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

At a meeting of the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society, on the 20th March, amongst the original communications were the following:—Notices on certain Ancient Caves and Structural Buildings near Aurungabad, in addition to those mentioned in the Rev. Dr. Wilson's "Memoir;" by Colonel Tremlow. Further information on Kistvaens, Cromlechs, Cairns, &c., near Ferozabad, on the Bhima; also Sketches of the groups at Rajan Koor, Jewarji, and Yemee Gord; by Captain Meadows Taylor. Fac-simile, with interlinear Balbodh transcript and English translation, of three Copper-Plates, connected by a ring, and seal (Buddh); by Major Le Grand Jacob: the plates are ten and a-half inches long, six and a-half broad, and half an inch thick, and were obtained from a Jain in Kharepatam, a town on the river Viziadroog; the inscription is dated Shak, 910, equivalent to our A.D. 988. A Geographical description of certain parts of the South-East Coast of Arabia, to which is appended a short Essay on the comparative Geography of the whole of this Coast; by Mr. H. J. Carter, Bombay Medical Service.

Dr. Wilson directed the attention of the Society to a critical edition of the whole of the Zend writings, at present preparing by one of its honorary members, Professor N. L. Westergaard, of Copenhagen, who a few years ago had visited India and Persia for the express purpose of prosecuting Oriental research, and had gained the respect and affection of all who had an opportunity of making his acquaintance on that occasion. In forming his text, this learned gentleman, according to the Prospectus issued by him, had secured the use of the Zend Manuscripts in the libraries of Copenhagen, Paris, London, and Oxford; those belonging to MM. Burnouf and Wilson, and those acquired by himself in his journeys in the East. His first work is to appear in three volumes, of which the first is to contain the text of all the Zend writings; the second, a Comparative Grammar of the two dialects in which it has been ascertained they are composed, and a complete concordance of the Zendavesta; and the third, a new translation in English of the Zend text. Dr. Wilson added, that he considered Mr. Westergaard's researches in the Zend literature of the highest interest and importance. Mr. Westergaard, on returning his manuscripts to him, had said: "I hope that the shape of my types will meet with your approbation; they are cut according to the oldest existing manuscripts. I have promised, in the French announcement, to give a Grammar of the two dialects of the Zend language. It is not difficult to distinguish between them, especially aided by the oldest manuscripts, as the difference is very strong, and observed, not only in the use of different words, or different forms of the same word, but even in the grammatical structure. As the Zend language must be referred to the eastern parts of Iran, I hazard resting, among other facts, on the authority of Strabo, about the difference of the dialects of Bactriana and Sogdiana, to assign to our two dialects the names of Bactrian and Sogdian, in such a way, that I should call by the name of 'Sogdian' that dialect in which the greater part of the Yacshna is composed, as it is evidently more rude and unpolished than that of the other parts of the Zendavesta." Of the differences in the dialects here referred to, Mr. Westergaard, in his communication, had furnished many examples. He had also submitted to Dr. Wilson his scheme for re-adjusting the Zend alphabet, founded on a comparison of it with the Sanscrit and Greek alphabets; and had promised to notice, in other letters (the substance of which Dr. W. would be happy to communicate to the Society), the general results of his researches.

A fierce controversy is still going on amongst the Parsees of Bombay respecting the era of Zoroaster, Zardusht, or Zartosht, one party maintaining that his true epoch was B.C. 389, which has been adopted by Cowasjee Sorabjee, in his comparative chronology (now publishing under the patronage of the Bombay Government), who argues that a higher antiquity is irreconcilable with the fact, that Zoroaster was contemporary with Darius Hystaspes. On the other hand, the Editor of the Jam-i-Jamshed, and the learned Nowrojee Furdoonjee, contend for the earlier date of B.C. 637. The latter, in a treatise upon this question, entitled Tareekhi-Zartoshtee, has adduced much evidence in support of his theory. A third party, of Europeans, dispute the very existence of the Parsee prophet, whom they treat as an imaginary personage; one writer in the Bombay Times states that "the appellative seems to have belonged to a dynasty of fire-worshipping kings of Persia." Nowrojee Furdoonjee, in a letter published in the journal just named, defends the personality of the prophet, relying on the following facts:—

"Zoroaster, the founder of the Parsee religion, is spoken of by Greek, Roman, and other ancient writers, and the accounts given by them of the religious ceremonies, manners, and customs of the ancient Persians, correspond most remarkably with the Zendavesta of Zartosht, and the modern usages of the Parsees. This has been proved beyond doubt by Anquetil du Perron, in his translation of the Parsee Scriptures, by Klenker, the German translator of the Zendavesta, and by other equally celebrated continental scholars. There are others of a similar nature, particularly an excellent English translation of the Dabistan, with copious notes, by David Shea and Anthony Troyer; a Memoir on the Age of Zoroaster, by du Perron, published in the 37th volume of the Académie des Inscriptions; Heeren's Historical Researches, and Dr. Hyde's work on the Ancient Religion of Persia. The existence of Zartosht has been established by the best evidence which it is possible to expect, and which by itself is quite sufficient to place the matter beyond all controversy; I mean, the testimony of eye-witnesses and contemporaries, as well as writers who flourished shortly after the age in which Zoroaster appeared, and have left authentic accounts written in Pehlivi, the ancient vernacular language of Persia. These testimonies have already been laid before the Indian public, through the medium of the Goozeratee language, in works which have been published here during the last six or ten years, and also in my recent brochure on the Era of Zartosht. The Mahomedans,—the bitterest and most inveterate enemies of Zoroaster, and of the faith promulgated by him,—the most intolerant of men, who persecuted the Parsees on account of their religion, and eventually expelled them from Persia,—men who consign the Parsee prophet to the torments of hell, and the Zendavesta to the flames,—would, above all others, have denied the existence of Zoroaster, if they could have done so with any show of reason; but they found the testimony in favour of this historical fact so incontrovertible, that they could not help acknowledging his existence, and recording his name in all their histories. To all these testimonies, add the unanimous and deep-rooted belief of a whole nation or community who have for centuries acknowledged, and do still acknowledge, Zoroaster as their prophet, guide, and lawgiver. The ancient Persians were not, nor are their present descendants, mythologists, like the ancient Greeks and Romans, who believed in such mythical personages as Jupiter, Mars, Apollo, and Hercules,—mere creatures of a prolific imagination. The Parsees do not ascribe to Zoroaster any of the divine and supernatural attributes, nor any of the absurd actions and ridiculous freaks, which the ancient mythologists ascribed to their numerous heroes, gods and goddesses. They simply believe that Zoroaster performed several miracles for the purpose of convincing his followers of the truth of his precepts and revelations, and that he held intercourse with the Deity, from whom he derived his mission."

At the anniversary dinner of the Royal Academy of Arts, on the 3rd May, his Royal Highness Prince Albert, responding to a toast, in a warm and elegant eulogy upon the new President, Sir C. L. Eastlake, delivered the following sound and judicious remarks upon public criticism of works of genius:—"The production of all works in art or poetry requires, in their conception or execution, not only an exercise of the intellect, skill, and patience, but particularly a concurrent warmth of feeling, and a free flow of imagination. This renders them most tender plants, which will thrive only in an atmosphere calculated to maintain that warmth, and that atmosphere is one of kindness,—kindness towards the artist personally, as well as towards his production. An unkind word of criticism passes like a cold blast over their tender shoots, and shrinks them up, checking the flow of the sap which was rising to produce, perhaps, multitudes of flowers and fruit. But still criticism is absolutely necessary to the development of art, and the injudicious praise of an inferior work becomes an insult to superior genius. In this respect our times are peculiarly unfavourable when compared with those when Madonnas were painted in the seclusion of convents; for we have now, on the one hand, the eager competition of a vast array of artists of every degree of talent and skill, and, on the other, as judge, a great public, for the greater part wholly uneducated in art; and this led by professional writers, who often strive to impress the public with a great idea of their own artistic knowledge, by the merciless manner in which they treat works which cost those who produced them the highest efforts of mind and feeling. The works of art, by being publicly exhibited and offered for sale, are becoming articles of trade, following as such the unreasoning laws of markets and fashion; and public, and even private, patronage is swayed by their tyrannical influence."

The mischief caused by ignorant and partial criticism has been often exemplified and lamented. Southey, whose talents as a reviewer were pre-eminent, has in his private correspondence evinced a supreme contempt for the office and its functionaries. The sneers he casts upon the Edinburgh, the Critical, the Monthly, and other Reviews, might be attributed to particular disappointments; but what are we to say to the following? To Mr. Rickman he writes, in 1803, "I am manufacturing a piece of Paternoster Row goods, value three guineas, out of Captain Burney's book."

This vile reviewing birdlimes me; I do it slower than anything else, yawning over tiresome work." And again, in 1804: "I look upon the invention of reviews to be the worst injury which literature has received since its revival. People formerly took up a book to learn from it, and with a feeling of respectful thankfulness to the man who had spent years in acquiring that knowledge which he communicates to them in a few hours: now they only look for faults. Everybody is a critic,—that is, every reader imagines himself superior to the author, and reads his book that he may censure it, not that he may improve by it." In a letter to his intimate friend Bedford, dated in 1805, when he was thirty-two, he says, reviewing is a good exercise, "but it is to be hoped that the positive immorality of serving a literary apprenticeship, in censuring the works of others, will not be imputed wholly to me. In the winter of 1797, when I was only twenty-three and a-half, I was first applied to to undertake the office of a public critic! Precious criticism! And thus it is that these things are done. I have acquired some knowledge, and much practice in prose, at this work, which I can safely say I have executed with as much honesty as possible; but on the whole I do and must regard it as an immoral occupation, unless the reviewer has actually as much knowledge at least of the given subject as the author upon whom he undertakes to sit in judgment."

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

TUESDAY, May 20, 1851.

THE sprinkling of Asiatics already attracted to this country by the wonders, animate and inanimate, congregated in the Hyde-park Palace, must lead a native of Europe to consider the probable effect which the novelties surrounding them upon their visit to London would produce in their minds. Although it would be too much to expect that each, or indeed any, of them should be as well qualified for observation and for speculation as Goldsmith's Chinese philosopher, we may fairly assume that, of these natives of the East who are willing to incur the inconveniences as well as risk of so long a journey, a large proportion would be of the inquisitive and reflecting class. Heretofore, the sight of an Asiatic in Europe was so rare that he was almost regarded by the mob as a monster, and in his own country a desire to visit Frankistan, which Oriental superstition peopled with demons, would have been looked upon as a mental hallucination, if not positive madness. These days are fast departing; along with the belief in magic and witchcraft, the notions of inherent and original distinctions in the great human family are giving way all over the world to the cosmopolitan and more rational opinion that we are all men and brothers. Visitors from Europe to the East, and vice versa, are, therefore, less under the influence of those prolific sources of error and misapprehension, ignorance and prejudice.

As objects which strike the senses are the first to engage the minds of all strangers in a foreign country, an Asiatic who visits England for the first time will doubtless survey with astonishment the crowds that in one incessant current fill up our streets, and the appearance of anxiety written upon the features of each individual, so different from the calm serenity of an Oriental countenance. Many cities in the East are as much thronged as our own; but, excepting those of China, their inhabitants seldom present that aspect of intense eagerness, of restless activity, which characterizes the moving masses that throng the large cities of Europe.

The edifices of London would next engage his attention. He would probably be not so much impressed with the public buildings as with the streets and private dwellings. The severe style of Greek and Roman architecture, and even that of our ancient abbeys, coated as they are with soot or soiled by the weather, must, in his opinion, contrast unfavourably with the light and graceful specimens of the builder's art which an eastern sun sets off to so much advantage. But he will, at least in an equal ratio, be gratified by the regularity and beauty of many of our metropolitan streets and squares, and the noble proportions of the houses, because this is not a common sight in the East, where wretched huts often adjoin the public edifices, to which they act as a foil.

When satiated with these objects, his eye would become more nice and critical, descending from generals to particulars, and would settle upon the costume of the throng before him; and here no Asiatic can feel any other sentiment than pity and contempt. When he compares his own easy and graceful dress with the inconvenient and ill-contrived garb of Europeans—the flowing robe with the barbarous coat, the elegant turban with the detestable hat,—he must be disposed to thank his stars that he was not born in Europe.

It is surprising that, in all our schemes of reform, adopted and projected, no one has seriously been attempted in our male attire. It could not be a difficult undertaking to make an entire revolution here, and no revolution would be productive of more comfort to the community at large. Fashions, in the present particular mode of dress, which do not strike at the root of the evil, are easily changed, sometimes in an almost burlesque direction. If tradition speaks truly, the now obsolete spencer was introduced by a freak of a fashionable lord of that name, who gave the ton, and who, in order to discover how far his example would go, cut off the skirts of his coat.

If Asiatics should visit this country in sufficient numbers and of a suitable quality, at this juncture, to give a new direction to European taste in the matter of dress, it would be a happy event should we condescend to become their learners. Time would, perhaps, be required to make a total alteration in the costume which now disfigures the trunk, and probably many would stick to the "old style" until they became ridiculous, as many did to cocked hats and pig tails; but the head, the seat of intellect, the distinguishing feature of man, should no longer be disgraced by an integument shaped like a saucepan, and which, in some parts of the East, has entailed upon our countrymen the soubriquet of "father of the cooking-pot."

Runjeet Singh was one day looking over some coloured map of India, with the aid of one of the Europeans at his court, and asked what the different colours indicated. He was told that the green represented the independent states, and the yellow the tributary principalities. "But what," asked the old chief, "does this red colour, so predominant throughout the map, signify?" He was informed that it marked the boundaries of the British dominions. Tossing the map away, he said, "Sub lál ho jaga,—it will all become red." When this remarkable prophecy was uttered, Runjeet was in the zenith of his glory; before ten years have passed away, his dynasty has become a matter of history.

That we should have large masses of ignorance and indolence in our armies, is but natural, as little has been done to dispel or arouse them; and after all that could in this way be attempted, a large amount of inertness in such a body must remain behind. But the achievements in the fields of science of the members of the services in India, little as is the encouragement they have met with, are already glorious and renowned; and now that we are in the midst of peace and its pursuits, with a long prospect of tranquillity before us, how could we better improve the occasion than by alluring those who wear, but may not for many a day have occasion to use, the sword, into an acquaintance with those branches of knowledge which may be made so subservient to the welfare of the State? We do not believe that Government forms the most remote conception of the power it has in this way, — power which may be exercised without occasioning the outlay of a single penny beyond travelling charges to the State. Volunteers will, we feel assured, be found in hundreds willing to labour without requital, — though the labourer is at all times worthy of his hire. The public is never without occasion for the services of men of talent; and in few ways could the existence of talent and enterprize be better manifested. The rewards are in the hands of Government, in the shape of appointments to lucrative offices of those who had displayed zeal and ability in the service; instead of being, as now, too often conferred on men whose only claim were those of kindred or consanguinity to some men in authority. — Bombay Times.

MISCELLANEOUS.

COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF AT MADRAS.—On the 14th inst., a Court of Directors was held at the East-India House, when Lieutenant-General Sir Richard Armstrong, C.B., was appointed Commander-in-Chief of the Company's forces on the Fort St. George establishment.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL THOMAS GORE BROWNE, of the 21st regiment, is appointed Governor of St. Helena. Colonel Browne was greatly distinguished during the Afghan campaigns. — Observer.

INDIAN CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE EXHIBITION.—A large and valuable additional consignment to the Great Exhibition has just been received from India. Several of the most valuable articles have been placed in the stalls facing the nave, and so great is their value esteemed, that they have been surrounded with a railing. In addition to the Lahore jewels, the Indian department has now, in stalls facing the nave, the "Durri-i-Noor," or "Sea of Light,"—an immense diamond, set as an armet, with ten smaller stones around it; a necklace of 224 large pearls, and a shorter one of 104 smaller pearls; a necklace of four large rubies, a pair of emerald armlets, a carved emerald and diamond turban ornament, an emerald and diamond bridle and martingale, a gold-mounted saddle, set with diamonds, emeralds, and rubies; a magnificent brocaded robe, richly decorated with pearls; and an emerald girdle, the stones in which are of immense size, and most of them of very fine quality.

REINFORCEMENTS TO THE CAPE.—The Megara, 10, iron screw steam frigate, of 350-horse power, is to be commissioned immediately to convey troops to the Cape of Good Hope. The troops expected to proceed in her are the 2nd, or Queen's Royal Regiment of Foot, and Capt. Faddy's company, 6th battalion, of the Royal Artillery. Capt. Faddy, with a number of officers of the Royal Artillery, attended at the pond in the Repository-grounds, on the 14th, to test an India-rubber boat, made by Mr. Cording, to enable the officers or men to cross the rivers in South Africa. The boat weighed only 34 lbs., and was found not only capable of carrying persons, but, on weights being put on board, its buoyancy was sufficient to sustain 350 lbs., which will render it available for carrying dismounted howitzers across rivers,—an object of great importance in the Caffre country. It is the general impression in military circles that a light cavalry regiment will be sent out shortly to the Cape station.

THE SHIP Kent has been engaged for the conveyance of troops to Calcutta.

An analysis of the report of the Colaba Dispensary, published in a Bombay paper, furnishes a remarkable instance of the extraordinary mixture of races which compose the population of the great cities of India. The total number relieved during the year was 7,314; of whom 2,400 were Hindoos, 1,076 Mahomedans, 420 Portuguese, 153 Native Christians, 160 Jews, 22 Arabs, 51 Seedees, 6 Abyssinians, and 9 Chinese.

The whole population of Ceylon, with an area of 24,700 miles, is little more than 1,500,000, or about 62 inhabitants to the square mile: the area in acres is 15,808,000, of which not above 1-10th is cultivated or used as pasturage.

A silver palanquin, manufactured by Messrs. Lattey, Brothers, of Calcutta, for the Rajah of Burdwan, is described as follows:—The panels, on which are emblazoned his highness's arms, are very richly gilt, the whole being surmounted by a very handsome gilt horse's head, his highness's crest!

LIFE DEPARTMENT.—Under the provisions of an Act of Parliament, recently obtained, this Company now offers to future insurers a low rate of premium without participation in profits, or a moderate scale of premiums with four-fifths of the profit to be derived from all assurances hereafter effected.

The divisions of profits which heretofore have been made Septennially, will in future be made Quinquennially, the first of such divisions to be declared in June, 1855, when all participating policies which shall have subsisted at least one year at Christmas, 1854, will be allowed to share in the profits.

At the several past divisions of profits made by this Company, the reversionary bonuses added to the policies from one-half the profits, amounted, on an average of the different ages, to about one per cent. per annum on the sums insured, and the total bonuses added to the four septennial divisions exceeded 770,000l.

FOREIGN RISKS.—The extra premiums required for the East and West Indies, the British Colonies, and the northern parts of the United States of America, have been materially reduced.

LOANS granted on Life Policies to the extent of their values, provided such policies shall have been effected a sufficient time to have attained in each case a value not under 50l.

In the FIRE DEPARTMENT a return of profit was declared on the 5th of June upon the premiums received on all policies which had been in force seven years at Christmas, 1849; and the same is now in course of payment daily (Friday and Saturday excepted), between the hours of Ten and Three o'clock, at the Head Office, and also by the agents in the country districts.

UNIVERSAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, No. 1, King William Street, London.

Established in 1834.—Empowered by Special Act of Parliament.

The Annual General Court of Proprietors of this Society was held on the 14th inst., when a reduction of 45 per cent. on the current annual premiums on all policies entitled to participation in the profits was declared, being a greater amount of reduction than that declared for the last few years, arising from the steady increase in business, and general prosperity of the Society.

By order of the Board,

This Society offers a lower and more economical scale of Premiums for Life Assurance than hitherto demanded by the established Offices in India.

Annual Premium for assuring 1,000 rupees:—

CIVIL.			MILITARY AND NAVAL.
Age.	With Profits. Rs. 33	Without Profits. Rs. 31	Age.	With Profits. Rs. 38	Without Profits. Rs. 35
20	30	28	30	44	41
30	38	35	40	53	49
40	49	45	50	66	61
60	82	77

All holders of Policies in India on the Profit scale, who may have paid five annual premiums, will be entitled, at the expiration of the fifth year, to a year's profit, calculated on the average of the preceding five years; such profit to be paid in cash, or to go in diminution of the future premiums payable, or to be added to the sum assured by the policy, at the option of the holder, after the calculation of the profits shall have been made in London.

After the expiration of 1851, the profits will be declared annually, and the payers of five complete annual premiums be regularly entitled to a participation therein, with a like option as to the mode of application.

Parties assured in India for Life shall, on their return to England for a permanency, and on the first half-yearly premium becoming due, be entitled to come upon the English rates of premium, and be placed under the rules and conditions of the Society there obtaining.

All parties assured for Life, or for terms other than for Life, whatever the number of payments, or the permanency or otherwise of their residence in Europe, shall, after completing a full year from the date of their quitting India, and on the first half-yearly premium thereafter becoming due, be entitled to a reduction of their premium to the English rates, such reduced rates being continued during their further residence in Europe.

Notices of Assignments of Policies will be duly registered at the Office of the Secretaries.

The Society also grants ENDOWMENTS and DEFERRED ANNUITIES for India, the Tables for which, with full information, may be had at the Office of the Family Endowment Society, No. 12, Chatham Place; or at the Office of the Secretaries in Calcutta, Messrs. GORDON, STUART, and Co.

ORIENTAL LANGUAGES.

HINDUSTANI, PERSIAN, ARABIC, SANSKRIT, &c., Taught, on Moderate Terms, at No. 58, Burton Crescent, from 10 A.M. to 1 P.M., by DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D., Professor of Oriental Languages in the King's College, London; Member of the Royal Asiatic Society of Great Britain and Ireland; Member of the Asiatic Society of Paris, and Author of the following Works, just published, on the HINDUSTANI and PERSIAN LANGUAGES.

A DICTIONARY, HINDUSTANI-ENGLISH

AND ENGLISH-HINDUSTANI.

By DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D.

FROM THE "FRIEND OF INDIA," published at Serampore.

"The present volume, by Dr. Forbes, we regard as an inestimable contribution to our Oriental literature, and worthy of a more extended notice than we can give to such a work. To compose a lexicon of the Hindustani tongue, suited to the present advanced state of this and kindred studies, demands in its author an uncommon share of learning and critical sagacity,—that he be cautious, well practised in analysis and arrangement, with ability to assign to secondary and figurative meanings a due position, a philosophical classification under their proper themes. To this part of the task Dr. Forbes has brought rare qualifications, many years' experience, great aptness in teaching the Oriental tongues, much tact with respect to the kind and degree of help required to their thorough mastery. He has already done good service; his former works have stimulated many to acquire that knowledge which is essential to an efficient discharge of the various offices of trust and responsibility of every Indian resident. To say that it is an entirely new work would be to claim for it an equivocal character, but we do say it is a matchless production of its kind, every way calculated to sustain its author's well-earned reputation. The plan and principal authorities are fully detailed in the preface, to which we refer our readers; the classical works have been diligently explored; the more modern and valuable works of Thompson, Herklots, Cox, and H. M. Elliot, have been laid under contribution for particular terms and local usage; the aim has been to compile a thoroughly usable and economical book. The words are given in alphabetical order; the leading word, and the meaning of which it, its derivatives and compounds, are susceptible, are given with great care;—in a word, if condensation and definiteness, if due distinction between the provinces of a grammarian and lexicographer, if to avoid faults, to reject things of a doubtful utility, to supply deficiencies, and to do all this with a determination that typography, paper, and price shall be unexceptionable,—if these in combination be a recommendation to an author and his work, then Dr. Forbes's Dictionary is fully worthy of the patronage of the patrons and students of Hindustani literature. We have to add, for we must not omit to mention, that it contains a second part, or a reversed dictionary—a very valuable companion indeed."

HINDUSTANI WORKS BY JOHN SHAKESPEAR, Esq.

NEW EDITION, with GREAT ADDITIONS.

This Day is published, the 4th Edition, in 1 vol. 4to. price £5. 5s. in boards, SHAKESPEAR'S HINDUSTANI and ENGLISH DICTIONARY, GREATLY ENLARGED: to which is added, a DICTIONARY, ENGLISH and HINDUSTANI, ENTIRELY NEW.

••• To the First Part of this Dictionary, the author has, by laborious study of Hindustani works, both printed and manuscript, made the most extensive additions. In the Hindustani and English Part, the Hindustani words are printed in their proper characters, together with the pronunciation in Roman letters. The Derivatives, which are traced from the Sanskrit, Arabic, Hebrew, Persian, and Greek, are given respectively in the character peculiar to each of those languages.

The Second Part, English and Hindustani, is ENTIRELY NEW. It comprises the most common English words, and also numerous usual phrases, with the fittest corresponding translations into Hindustani.

REVIEW IN "TIMES," Jan. 3.—"Much attention has been paid to the collecting of scientific terms, especially botanical ones, as well as to the correct rendering them into the technology of Europe." ••• "The Hindustani and English Part of it now contains upwards of 53,000 words and phrases examined, being 7,000 more than in the last edition, and 11,000 more than in any other Dictionary of the like description now extant." ••• "In India, as well as in Europe, the character of this work has long been fully established, and the present edition will greatly enhance its reputation."

HOWARD ON THE LOSS OF TEETH, and on a new method of FASTENING LOOSE TEETH.—A very curious invention connected with Dental Surgery has been introduced by Mr. Howard, consisting of an entirely new description of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, fixed by SELF-ADHESION, without springs, wires, or ligatures. They will never change colour or decay. This method does not require the extraction of any teeth or roots, or any painful operation. The invention is of importance to many persons, and those interested in it should read this Treatise.

GREAT EALING SCHOOL, MIDDLESEX, for the SONS OF GENTLEMEN, in number Fifty, conducted by DR. FRANCIS NICHOLAS, of WADHAM COLLEGE, OXFORD, and established in the same family upwards of 130 years. The house is delightfully situated in the village of Ealing, and has been lately built by Dr. Nicholas, with baths, and every requisite to promote the health and comfort of his Pupils. The Schools and bed-rooms are particularly airy, and four acres of land are laid out for play, gymnastic, and cricket grounds. Ealing is the first station on the Great Western Railway.—Terms, for board, separate bed, laundry, church sitting, education in the English, French, Latin, and Greek languages, Writing, Arithmetic, Mathematics, Geography, with the use of the Globes, FIFTY GUINEAS PER ANNUM: for TWELVE Pupils under Twelve years old, in the junior department, which is conducted by Mrs. Nicholas, with the assistance of Ladies, FORTY-FIVE GUINEAS, and includes Dancing and Drilling. Extra charges for books only, and the personal wants of the Pupil. Residence during the VACATIONS six weeks at Midsummer, also at Christmas, One Guinea and a Half per week—no extras.

THE NEW TOOTH-PICK TOOTH-BRUSH, thoroughly cleansing between the teeth when used up and down, and polishing the surface when used crossways, the hair warranted never to come out; in four strengths—viz. No. 1, hard; No. 2, less hard; No. 3, medium; No. 4, soft. The double anti-pressure nail-brush, which does not divide the quick from the nails. The triple hair-brush, which thoroughly searches and cleanses the hair in one-fourth part of the time of any other method, and acts as both comb and brush combined. The medium shaving-brush, being a selection of the strongest badgers' hair, so well secured in the socket as never to come loose. And, though last not least, the newly-invented "Renovator" clothes-brush, which makes an old coat look like a new one, and a new coat to look new double the usual time. Invented and made only by ROSS AND SONS.

THE ATRAPILATORY, or LIQUID HAIR DYE.—The only dye that really answers for all colours, and does not require re-doing but as the hair grows, as it never fades or acquires that unnatural red or purple tint common to all other dyes. ROSS AND SONS can, with the greatest confidence, recommend the above DYE as infallible; and ladies and gentlemen requiring it are requested, if convenient, to have it done the first time at their establishment, which will enable them to use it afterwards themselves, without the chance of failure. They think it necessary to add, that, by attending strictly to the instructions given with the dye, numerous parties have succeeded equally well without coming to them.

BOTANIC WATER AND BEARS' GREASE.—When the hair is becoming thin, and falling off, the only effectual remedy, besides shaving the head, is the use of the two above-named articles, applied alternately—the botanic water to cleanse the roots from scurf, and as a stimulant, and the bears' grease as a nourisher. If any further evidence was required of the virtues of bears' grease for renovating and preserving the hair, Mr. Catlin's account of the quantity used, and the length of hair obtained, by some of the North-American Indians, would be a sufficient answer.—ROSS AND SONS, who first introduced the use of bears' grease in this country, and who fat and kill the animals, recommend the public to purchase none other but with their names and address printed on the pot, or the chances are, their obtaining a spurious article.

ROSS AND SONS, 119 and 120, Bishopsgate Street, London.

TO LADIES.—The high and universal celebrity which ROWLANDS' KALYDOIR continues to maintain as an active, yet mild and soothing, extirpator of all impurities of the skin, is, during the period of Spring, most pleasingly evinced. This preparation, eminently balsamic, restorative, and invigorating, is equally distinguished for safety in application, as for unfailing efficacy in eradicating all redness, tan, pimples, spots, freckles, discolorations, and other cutaneous visitations. The radiant bloom it imparts to the cheek, and the softness and delicacy which it induces on the hands and arms, render it indispensable to every toilet. To ladies during the period of nursing, and as a wash for infants, it cannot be too strongly recommended. Gentlemen, after shaving, will find it allay all irritation and tenderness of the skin, and render it soft, smooth, and pleasant. Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle.

ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL, for the growth, and for preserving, improving, and beautifying the human hair. Price 3s. 6d. and 7s.; family bottles equal to four small, 10s. 6d., and double that size, 21s. per bottle.

ROWLANDS' ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE, for preserving and beautifying the teeth, strengthening the gums, and for rendering the breath sweet and pure. Price 2s. 9d. per box.

BWARE OF SPURIOUS IMITATIONS.—The only genuine of each bears the name of "ROWLANDS," preceding that of the article, on the wrapper or label. Sold by them at 20, Hatton Garden, London; and by chemists and perfumers.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS are a UNIVERSAL REMEDY FOR OLD WOUNDS AND OBSTINATE SORES.—Mr. John Mackie, proprietor of the Northern Ensign, Wick, informs Professor Holloway, by letter, dated 3rd April, 1851, that he is aware of numerous instances in which Holloway's Ointment and Pills have been of the greatest service to sufferers in that part of the country, more especially as regards wounds of long standing, and that he could, if permitted, give the names of many respectable parties who have been entirely cured by their use. No family should be without a supply of these excellent medicines, which are so justly celebrated throughout the civilized world. Sold by all Druggists, and at Professor Holloway's establishment, 244, Strand, London; and by all European and Native vendors of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

EAST-INDIA ARMY AGENCY,
63, Cornhill, and 124, Bishopsgate Street.

EAST-INDIA UNITED SERVICE AGENCY,
53, CHARING CROSS, and 25, SPRING GARDENS.

MAJOR R. D. WHITE (twenty-nine years in the Bengal Army) will be happy to receive gentlemen connected with India and the Colonies, or attend to their written communications.

Passages secured by Sea or overland; Houses or Apartments engaged; Regimental Messes; Wines and Stores; Outfits, &c., supplied; and every description of Agency business transacted.

No charge for subscription to the Agency or ROBBS, but every information furnished.

INDIA.—Gentlemen expecting Appointments in the East-India Company's Cavalry, Artillery, Infantry, or Medical Service, are respectfully informed that, on application to Messrs. CHRISTIAN, they will be furnished with carefully prepared ESTIMATES, showing the whole cost of outfit and passage via the Cape or Egypt, without the necessity of employing an agent, which will be found desirable to those who study economy. 11, Wigmore Street, Cavendish Square.

EMIGRATION AND COLONIZATION.

IMMIGRATION being much required in AUSTRALIA, NEW ZEALAND, &c., and as the supposed expense of an OUTFIT often prevents individuals emigrating, S. W. SILVER and Co., CLOTHIERS, OUTFITTERS, and CONTRACTORS (having a large interest to maintain in those Colonies), have been advised to make known that they can supply a comfortable OUTFIT, including Bedding, for MALE or FEMALE Emigrants, from Four Pounds (net) upwards, or less (Two Pounds if needful), and for Children in proportion, at No. 4, BISHOPSGATE STREET WITHIN (opposite the London Tavern), where lists will be given on application. S. W. S. & Co., being the makers of nearly every article in all the Outfits they supply, and as one of their objects is to promote EMIGRATION, they neither receive from Agents, or pay the too usual commission to any person introducing Passengers to be fitted out, so that the Passage and Outfit may be procured at the least possible expense; but they will, on application, advise Passengers how to obtain the most economic passage to the Colonies. They have a representative in every Australian Colony, to whom they ship Clothing monthly; thus they would forward small parcels free of expense.

NAVAL and MILITARY OFFICERS, MIDSHIPMEN, CADETS, CIVILIANS, LADIES, &c., are outfitted as heretofore, at the CARIN-PASSENGER OUTFITTING Warehouse, Nos. 66 and 67, CORNHILL (the Emigration Outfitting being exclusively at No. 4, BISHOPSGATE STREET WITHIN), LONDON, and each branch at ST. GEORGE'S CRESCENT, LIVERPOOL.

APPOINTMENTS TO INDIA and the COLONIES.—Cadets, Assistant-Surgeons, and others appointed to India. Officers joining their Regiments, and all those who have or who are expecting Appointments to India, China, or to any other of the Colonies, may obtain Detailed Lists of the necessary Outfit for every appointment, full particulars of the Overland Route to India, Rates of Passage—Money, Allowance of Baggage, &c., on application to Messrs. THRESHER and GLENNY, East India and General Outfitters, 152, Strand, London. The only house in the kingdom where THRESHER'S INDIA GAUZE WAISTCOAT can be procured.

THE object of this Advertisement is to give publicity to the most valuable and efficient remedy that has yet been introduced in the practice of Medicine, for the purpose of removing every unsightly appearance from the Skin. Extensive experience and minute observation have convinced the Proprietor that, if applied as directed, it will remove any unsightly appearance, such as Tan, Sun-burns, Pimples, and Eruptions, which may disfigure the countenance; and will also impart to the Skin the most delightful softness and delicate clearness; in short, to preserve a pleasing complexion through life, nothing is required but the use of

GODFREY'S EXTRACT OF ELDER FLOWERS,

The sweetest and really the most perfect Beautifier in Nature.

This admirable preparation of Elder Flowers is very fragrant as a Perfume, and so efficacious, that the result of its application cannot fail to prove, in the highest degree, beneficial and satisfactory.

The Proprietor has, in private practice, very narrowly watched its effects upon all Diseases of the Skin, and, from proofs incontestable, is enabled to pronounce it most decidedly superior to any other preparation which has come under his observation,—and he has, by way of experiment, tried all the most popular ones,—but none will bear even a slight comparison with it, either for its sweetness or its surprising effect in clearing and softening the Skin, in rendering the complexion beautifully fair, and in producing a surface of the most perfect elegance. All this is accomplished by its power of speedily and completely removing, not only those lesser enemies of Beauty, as Redness, Tan, Sun-burns, &c., but also all its more decided foes, which generally peep out in the most conspicuous places; they need not be named, but those who are plagued and annoyed by them may be assured that the Extract of Elder Flowers possesses an influence over them which must be seen to be believed; for it will remove every unsightly appearance, and improve every complexion, and, by persevering in its use, the Skin will become and continue delicately soft, clear, and smooth.

Elder Flowers have from the earliest ages been esteemed as a mild and harmless, yet most perfect beautifier of the Skin; but the difficulty of properly preserving them, so as to retain their virtues when dry, has put it beyond the power of people in general, or of the profession, to avail themselves of their usefulness. Elder Flower Water has been adopted in their stead, and found to a certain extent to answer as a substitute; but being a weak and imperfect preparation of the Flowers, and very liable to decomposition, it cannot be depended upon. This elegant and (in comparison with the Flowers) powerful preparation was discovered, like many of our most valuable medicinal agents, by mere accident; and the Proprietor having, from personal experience, good reason to think highly of Elder Flowers, as a remedy for all diseases of the Skin, at once determined, as opportunities offered, to give it an ample trial. The very first trial he made speaks volumes, and will be sufficient to induce any unprejudiced person who may require to try its effects. It was upon an elderly lady, who from her youth had a most inveterate humour in her face and neck, which had so increased with her age, that it was in a constant state of heat and irritation. She had lost all hope of a cure, having sought for the first advice, and used every means to remove it, but to no purpose. When this article was named, she willingly consented to try it, and, incredible as it may appear, the very first application considerably reduced the irritation, and from that period she lived in comparative ease,—of course, continued its use,—and in the space of about eight months the Skin had become perfectly healthy, had lost all its foul appearance, and had become nearly as clear as an infant's. Though the Proprietor has some hundreds of proofs of its efficacy, equal and even more surprising, he will instance only this first one, because such evidence in favour of a Medicine may be overcoloured, or entirely fabricated; but those who may wish to have a confirmation of the high character he has given it, need only make one trial, to be thoroughly convinced of the correctness of his statement. Such a circumstance to begin with naturally convinced him that it was an article which had just claims to a high distinction, and of course he did not fail to seek after and apply it in those cases which had baffled the skill of other Medical Men; and in doing so, his success was uniform. For great as is the variety of Diseases confined to the Skin, different as their causes may appear, whether local or constitutional, he invariably found the Extract of Elder Flowers to be absolute master of them all; it immediately improved, and ultimately cured, not only the mildest, but even the most malignant. It would require a large space to describe all the cases in which it might be used with advantage, but that is no reason why none should be named; therefore we will begin, as we have all done before, with infancy; and it is pretty well known that, for the first few years of our existence, we are very liable to and much distressed by many inflammatory affections of the Skin, more particularly about the neck, mouth, and ears: to avoid which, and to preserve the sweet appearance peculiar to childhood, it is only necessary to use GODFREY'S EXTRACT OF ELDER FLOWERS about two or three times in a week; and the best way to lay a good foundation for and make certain of a luxuriant crop of Hair, is to preserve the Skin in health, and resist the accumulation of Scurf. For that purpose, let the head be moistened with the Extract of Elder Flowers every other day, and the result will afford the most ample satisfaction, and show distinctly that this preparation is as well the ne plus ultra of the Nursery as of the Toilet.

As we advance in years, other annoying and perplexing diseases are to be avoided. The worst, perhaps, is RINGWORM; and the Proprietor feels not a little proud in having been the means of conferring upon his species a remedy so mild and pleasant, and yet so uniformly certain of not only preventing but absolutely curing Ringworm, and that, too, in the short space of one month: the worst cases are subdued in six weeks, at longest. When it has been proved to possess such power over a disease which has set at defiance the ingenuity of the first Medical Practitioners of the day, few will (at least, it is hoped so) be inclined to doubt the salutary influence it exerts over all the less virulent complaints incident to the Skin.

As we increase in years, or at that period which may be termed the spring of life, the COMPLEXION is subject to many and serious changes, when, from various causes, the Skin is likely to become discoloured, Humours generate and become confirmed, Pimples of different hues and sizes peep out, and Eruptions disfigure the countenance. At this trying age, all parents, who really value the comfort and welfare of their children, ought to avail themselves of every means to prevent the secretion of animalcules, which is the cause of all these evils. The Extract of Elder Flowers offers a ready, safe, and sure means of preventing it. It will destroy in embryo whatever may be generating in the small orifices of the Skin, preserve it free from taint, confirm it in health, and impart a beautiful transparency, which will probably afford a proud satisfaction for the rest of their days.

In the middle stage of life, when we become subject to Indigestion, which, by deranging the secretions, is very likely to check the necessary exhalation from the Skin, and thereby induce a sallow and bloated Countenance, sore Lips and Nose, inflammatory Eruptions, Carbuncles, &c., this preparation will be found of the greatest service, for by frequently damping the troubled part it will immediately stop and soon repel them; and, by keeping the pores of the Skin unobstructed, will cause the most fascinating pliability and softness, together with the constant appearance of cleanliness and health.

In the process of SHAVING it is invaluable, annihilating every pimple and all roughness, rendering the Skin soft, and its surface even and smooth, and preparing it so completely for the application of the razor, that the Proprietor earnestly enjoins every Gentleman who has any regard for his own comfort to try one Bottle, which will so well recommend itself, that he will undoubtedly recommend it to others.

In the autumn of life, when the Skin begins to lose its firmness, and become uneven, wrinkled, and loose, its effects are most consoling. Cleansing and bracing its pores, it secures a healthy and proper evaporation. And if, at a very advanced period of life, it will not preserve all the firmness, transparency, and freshness of youth, it will approximate very near to it; so much so, that, rely upon it, all who try it will be fully satisfied with its conservative effects.

Finally, it ought to be observed that, with whatever indifference many may profess to regard appearances, all are in some degree influenced by them,—many much more so than they themselves suspect; but, be that as it may, it is certainly to the interest of most, and must be desirable to all, to carry an appearance as pleasing as the nature of things will allow; and of whatever form the features may be, a clear and wholesome Skin must be deemed infinitely preferable to one which is sallow or covered with numerous eruptive specks and blemishes; therefore it is candidly submitted whether it does not behove every one to make use of those means which chance or science may have brought to light, to reduce and obviate, as much as possible, the ills which flesh is heir to.

Sold in Bottles, at 2s. 9d. each, by all Perfumers and Patent Medicine Venders.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE most prominent feature of the intelligence brought by this mail is the result of the trial of Jotee Pershaud, the great commissariat contractor, who has been acquitted upon one of the charges brought against him, and it is said that the Government intend to abandon the other charges. The triumph of the accused is, indeed, a great one. He has foiled the Government, and by the verdict of a jury composed, we believe, exclusively of Government employés. This result, however, seems to have been owing principally to the gross misconduct of some of the native witnesses, who proved themselves utterly unworthy of credit, and partly to technical objections, to which the judge, much to his credit, gave due consideration. According to the Delhi Gazette, "the result decides no question of guilt or ignorance, but merely exposes the anomalous action of the Mofussil Courts; the judge decided that no weight could be attached to the evidence of some of the most important witnesses for the prosecution, because they had, as friends and dependants of Jotee Pershaud, originally given testimony in his favour." The event appears, however, to have occasioned a great sensation throughout India, every journal, excepting the one we have just named, being loud in its condemnation of the Government. Looking at the information laid before the Government (as reported in another column), and the careful scrutiny it underwent; considering that several magistrates, after diligent inquiries, were fully satisfied of the existence of most extensive frauds; that so late as November, 1850, overtures were made by Jotee Pershaud, having for their object a confession on his part, and the obtaining a pardon from the Government: looking at these facts, it appears to us impossible that the Indian authorities could have forborne the placing Jotee Pershaud upon his trial. That the case should have broken down through the treachery of the native witnesses is no extraordinary circumstance. In a country where perjury is not considered a crime, and where judicial oaths impose not the slightest obligation, a wealthy native like Jotee Pershaud, if he choose to purchase testimony, may defy conviction upon native evidence. The Hurkaru terms it a "shabby prosecution." The Bombay Telegraph thinks the trial will "inflict an injury upon our character which half a century of good government will scarcely repair, perfectly convinced, as the natives will be, that our intention was to perpetrate a stupendous fraud by form of law." The Bombay Times, which joins in the general condemnation of the Government, accusing it of "a stupendous blunder," expects, however, some advantages from the result of the trial :—

Heretofore the Company, or, what is the same thing, their officers, have had it all their own way in judicial processes out of the Queen's jurisdiction: the spell of invincibility in their own courts is now broken—the prestige is dissipated; straightforward, manly opposition to an arbitrary course has reared its honest front, and browbeating and self conceit can no longer outface it. Mr. Browne has done the community infinite good; whether he has done as much for the Company's code of legislation in judicial matters is "a horse of another colour." So accustomed were the natives to persuade themselves Government could not be struggled with where its wish was once understood—and in Jotee Pershaud's case it was understood—that they habitually shrank from competition; but Mr. Lang has pointed to a new leaf in the volume, where they may all read, as plain as language can make it, the memorable fact, that the state, with its officials to back it, is not invincible.

A fact stated by the last Delhi Gazette, that Jotee Pershaud had sent instructions to Calcutta to withdraw his suit against the Government, in the Supreme Court, for fifty lakhs of rupees, tells a little against the contractor's confidence in the truth and justice of his cause.

Rumours still prevailed of disturbances on our trans-Indus frontier. A letter from Peshawur, dated March 31st, states that there was a talk of another expedition to Kohat, its object being to burn villages and destroy crops. Depredations still continued to a great extent at Peshawur; every night some horse is stolen; and once twenty-eight sheep were carried off belonging to the 29th N.I., with valuable fowling-pieces taken from officers of the 61st and 98th Queen's. It was reported that Wahab Khan, with a number of his own tribe, attacked the troops who were detached to Mooltan and Shub-qudr to punish Futeh Khan. In the mélée which took place, three men of Lumsden's guides were killed, and one sowar wounded. Wahab Khan lost three men and a number wounded; he and his Affghans fled to the hills. Sadut Khan, son of Futeh Khan, was collecting a force to assist Wahab Khan.

Accounts from Cabul state that Mohammed Ukram Khan and Gholam Hyder Khan, sons of Dost Mohammed, who had obtained possession of Balkh, were obliged to fortify themselves there, as the people of the country around had not acknowledged their rule. They informed their father that the Ameer of Bokhara had sent an army against them; but that, in consequence of the want of boats, it had been detained on the banks of the river Amoo. The Meer Wulee, of Khoolum, had written to Dost Mohammed, begging his friendship and aid. The Dost desired his sons not to annoy the Meer Wulee until they had settled Balkh!

There seems to have been some skirmishing on the Assam frontiers, according to a letter of April 4th, of which the following is an extract :—

The fort of Kanomah was taken by our troops under Major Foquett, about the end of last year. The fortifications were exceedingly strong, and are upon a very difficult ridge of a very high mountain. Our troops were unable to get possession of the whole on the first day's attack, the small mountain guns made no impression on the stockades, but the Nagas fortunately decamped during the night. It is hard to say why they did so, for whilst they killed and wounded several of our men, it is not known that we did them any mischief. The taking of this fort was the great object of the expedition, and its capture made us masters of the Angami Naga country; but the Government has determined to resume the defensive, and to surrender all those advantages which were obtained with so much trouble and so little expense. The whole of the troops have been accordingly withdrawn from the Naga hills. This retrograde policy is probably dictated by economy; but the result is not so likely to be advantageous to us as to the Nagas.

Disorder still reigns in the Nizam's dominions. The Madras Spectator quotes a letter from the Nizam's capital, dated the 19th of April, which reports that "Mutiny has at length menaced the very palace of the Nizam, and the supersession of his highness is now popularly spoken of as a desirable measure."

The King of Oude was engaged in selecting another begum from the lowest class of Hindoos. "The eunuchs are in favour, as before," says a letter from Lucknow; "but the banished fiddlers have no chance of ever getting into favour again."

The camp of the Governor-General was at Zuferwal, about half way between Sealkote and Deenanugur, on the 15th of April, and would, it was expected, cross the Ravee on the 18th. Sir Henry Lawrence and Mr. Montgomery had left Lahore to join the vice-regal camp at Deenanugur. His lordship was expected to reach Buddea on the 28th of April.

Our Indian territories, including the Punjab, were perfectly tranquil.

The local intelligence from the presidencies calls for no remark.

Siam is reported to be on the eve of a civil war. The death of the reigning king is expected, and as he is illegitimate and a usurper, the descent of power to his issue will be disputed. His sons are, however, determined to assert their rights to the throne, which the dying king is said to have bequeathed to his two brothers,—who are legitimate, and whose title is preferable to his own,—to reign jointly, as first and second king. These two princes, who are popular, are distinguished by their intelligence and scientific attainments, especially in European science and English literature. The youngest is said to be more energetic and ambitious than his brother, and to have a party of his own. Here are elements enough for a long and sanguinary contest, from which a new and better order of things may arise. The Government of Siam has been lately pursuing a decidedly anti-commercial policy. The sons of the king are supposed to favour his views in respect to trade: of his brothers, the eldest is known to advocate commercial connexion with the English, towards whom the younger is much less friendly.

BENGAL.

TRIAL OF JOTEE PERSHAUD.

The trial of Jotee Pershaud and certain of his accomplices commenced at Agra on the 27th March, before Mr. S. S. Brown, Civil and Sessions Judge. The jury consisted of Messrs. J. P. Ledlie, W. Johnson, A. M. Wollaston, and J. L. Smith, East-Indians, and Baboo Sama Churn, Sudder Ameen of Muttra, native. For the prosecution, Mr. Wylie, C.S.; for the defence, Mr. J. Lang, barrister of the Supreme Court. The defendants having taken their place in the dock, the Court observed that, though the right to challenge any of the jury could not be admitted, yet if the counsel for the defence had any reasonable objection to offer to those who had been selected, it would be considered. Mr. Lang acknowledged that he had no right of challenge; but he had not the least objection to the panel. A mookhtiar being present for the defence, the Court intimated that he could not be allowed to act. Mr. Lang stated that he needed the services of a native in parts of the examination. The Court had no objection to that, but it was objectionable that any one should act, who had no standing in the Court. It was, however, quite open to the defence to appoint one of the ten or twelve vakeels attached to the Court. Mr. Lang then consulted his clients; and the mookhtiar subsequently took his place with them, apparently as private adviser. The learned gentleman next moved the Court to permit his clients to be seated during the proceedings. The Court stated that seats would be allowed as an indulgence to them, which they would be allowed to use after the proceedings had opened.

Mr. Wylie then opened the case by submission of a copy of the Calendar, and which the judge handed to the jury, desiring them to attend merely to the charges. The present was one of three cases, in which distinct acts of fraud were charged, and contained several counts which they should look over, without attending to the abstract of evidence appended to them. The prosecutor desired to be informed whether it was the English or the vernacular copy of the indictment that should be read? The judge decided that it should be the latter; otherwise the defendants would not know what was charged against them.

The Court intimated that the mode of procedure ought to be understood. There could be no departure from the ordinary usage of the Court. There could be no pleading except what must form matter of record. Oral pleading itself must be taken down.

Mr. Wylie, in laying open the large and intricate mass of evidence in the three cases before the Court, gave a pretty long account of the transactions which brought about the present inquiry and prosecution, and concluded his address thus: "The honest and disinterested endeavours of the Government officers in their researches into gross and notorious malversations have been met by opposition, such as is rarely found even in this country, where justice never strikes down the wealthy culprit until all the weapons of intrigue, perjury, intimidation, and corruption have been fairly worn out in his defence. The defendant, Jotee Pershaud, commands influence both as the head of wealthy firms established at Agra, Meerut, and other places, and as a powerful and confidential agent of the commissariat. The whole body of the natives of that department, who are, with few exceptions, dependants of his, were of course banded together to a man on the side of the accused, and their machinations have been of a peculiarly daring character; for they have not scrupled to use the names of English officers as the supporters and defenders of the man and the system. His friends and advisers have even presumed, perhaps unwisely, to threaten officers of the military and civil services who could not protect or who dared to attack him. A patient and fearless inquiry has, however, elicited convincing evidence against him and the other defendants, and that evidence has all been obtained from sources which, had the accused been honest or guiltless, would have been the most available means for their defence. For instance, in the depositions of friends to facts, which however reluctant they may have been to disclose, they could not withhold—as in the case of the banker Choonna Mull, a near relative of Jotee Pershaud, and in the evidence and confessions of their own agents and servants, supported in the most minute points by circumstantial proofs; in the statements of the clerks of the Commissariat Office, and of the thekaddars and bunjarrahs; and by a comparison of the private accounts, muster-rolls, and certificates of entertainment and discharge. On the side of the defence you will find the names of many British officers. The appearance of English gentlemen as witnesses in the Company's Courts of these provinces is of unfrequent occurrence, still more rare is it to see so many as are recorded among the defendant's evidence to character in the present case. The testimony on oath of such men carries weight, and claims your especial attention, and it will be my duty to test the value of their evidence by putting such questions to them as will show you whether any connection of private interest existed between the accused and these witnesses, such as to give him a claim for compelling their attendance on his behalf in this Court.

"I will now proceed to the matter of accusation. Jotee Pershaud, the first defendant, is first charged with fraud, in having caused to be written, in April or May, 1850, two false receipts or acquittances, in the Persian character, purporting to have been executed by Muheysh Doss, the one for Rs. 13,428-1-9, on account of 1,536 bullocks hired from the 26th October, 1848, to the 25th of January, 1849, bearing date of the 25th of January, 1849; and the other, dated the 30th January, 1849, for Rs. 27,302-6-11, for 2,957 bullocks hired from the 26th October, 1848, to the 26th January, 1849, knowing the same receipts to be false; and in having himself accompanied Muheysh Doss, in the said month of April or May, 1850, to the house of Capt. Davidson, and caused the said Muheysh Doss to acknowledge falsely to the receipt of the sums mentioned in the two acquittances, and having then requested and induced Capt. Davidson to sign these false receipts.

"2ndly. He is charged also with being privy to the frauds just detailed.

"3rdly. He is charged with fraud in rendering accounts to the Government commissariat officers of accounts for the hire of the bullocks aforesaid.

"4thly. He is also charged with completion of the aforesaid frauds by fraudulently obtaining payment from Government for the said accounts.

"5thly. He is charged with fraud, in rendering accounts and obtaining payments from Government of Rs. 1,478-13, or thereabouts, on account of the fraudulent batch of 259 bullocks in the name of Mohun.

"6thly. He is accused of subornation of perjury, in having induced Muheysh Doss to perjure himself regarding the item of 4,493 bullocks before the officiating joint magistrate and the officiating magistrate of Agra.

"7thly. He is accused of subornation of perjury, in having sent his servant Ghasseram, to Pillibheet, to suborn the evidence of Chungah Bunjarrah regarding receipt of payment for this fraudulent item of 4,493 bullocks; and

"8thly. He is accused of being privy to such subornation of perjury."

Mr. Wylie then addressed himself to the subject of the misrepresentations current with regard to the treatment of the defendant by the criminal authorities. He proved that every indulgence had been shown to him; that his person had never been subjected to restraint, and that the statement about the prosecution being instituted after the civil suit was entered against the Government, was wholly untrue. He had been permitted to go to Umballa, on the joint application of Major Ramsay, of the commissariat, and himself; asked for another month's leave, and obtained it; but instead of appearing at the end of the term, he fled to Calcutta; commenced an action for fifty-seven lacs of rupees, and fancied himself altogether out of the reach of justice. The natives thought so too; but the execution of the warrant in Calcutta undeceived them. He had forfeited his recognizances twice, but the amount had in neither case been recovered; and since his return he had remained in Agra, or travelled about the country unmolested.

The monster trial terminated on the 11th April, by the acquittal of Jotee Pershaud and the other two defendants,—a result which seemed to afford much satisfaction to a great crowd, chiefly natives, within and without the court. The whole proceedings occupied twelve days, four devoted to the opening of the case, hearing objections, and amending the charges. The actual trial began on the fifth day (1st April), when the defendants were called on to hear the charges, and pleaded severally not guilty. For the prosecution there were more than thirty witnesses on the calendar—of two classes, one consisting of officers and clerks of the commissariat, and the other of natives who were parties in some form or other to the transactions of the defendants. The commissariat officers called by the prosecutor were Captains Newbolt, Hobday, and Harris, and Col. Thomson, the latter of whom underwent a cross-examination of marked severity by Mr. Lang, counsel for the defendants. All of these gentlemen, however, gave very decided testimony to the extraordinary ability and services of Jotee Pershaud, as contractor for the commissariat supplies of the British army in different campaigns, and at periods of great emergency. A large number of the native witnesses were declared by the Court to be unworthy of credit, they having been parties to the perjury, subornation of which was charged in the calendar. The chief of these was Muheysh Doss, who, having sworn to certain facts before the magistrate, to establish claims against Government, afterwards confessed that he had sworn falsely, and being pardoned, gave a fresh deposition on oath, purporting to be a full disclosure of the truth, in contradiction of his original deposition. A protracted struggle took place between the advocates on the trial as to the admission of this man as a witness; the Court eventually overruling all objections, and directing that he be sworn. But no sooner was this done than the Court declared that while there was no power in the law to debar him from being presented, there was also no power in the law to give credibility to what he said. This produced another running fight, the prosecutor making energetic efforts to sustain the value of the testimony and filing an able and spirited protest; but every contest brought out more distinctly the views of the Court that the evidence of Muheysh Doss and those in the same predicament could not be believed. The prosecutor urged both the probabilities in their favour as interpreted by the circumstances, and the collateral support given to their testimony by unimpeachable witnesses. With respect to another witness, Bhowannee, an old man, who in his second deposition had, like the rest, contradicted the first he had given before the magistrate, there was a new feature presented in the case. He did not, as they did, contradict in Court his first deposition, but his second; that is, he swore that the first was true, and that he really had supplied the bullocks which he had "under fear," as he now said, denied all knowledge of on the second occasion. For this he was put into custody by the Court, and so remained till the close of the proceedings on the following day, when he was released, on the ground that there was no sufficient proof of legal perjury; no one could say, as respected all these witnesses, which was the true and which the false statement, and none of them ought to have been sworn on the second occasion. The same grounds for the denial of value to the testimony of Muheysh Doss, here operated, though in a different way, to bar the commitment of Bhowannee. He was therefore released. There was another hole made in the case for the prosecution by the rejection of Captain Davidson's deposition, which was taken at another station in the absence of the accused, and he had gone to England; so that the defendants had no opportunity of being confronted with him, and of cross-examining him. Mr. Lang pressed his objections on this point strongly, and the Court concurred the deposition could not be received. Mr. Lang also took a sweeping objection to the whole commitment,—the defendants had never been confronted by the magistrate with any one of the witnesses—and this Court could not be made a Court of first instance. The judge in addition brought out that not one of the witnesses for the defence had been examined at all. But these points were, in opposition to Mr. Lang's repeated call that the whole case should be quashed upon the irregularities, reserved by the Court for judgment after defence. One objection taken by Mr. Lang was met by direct contrary proof by the prosecutor. The counsel urged that the Governor-General had originated the proceedings, merely calling on the Government of these provinces for a report; whereas commitment had followed, and the Court had no authority to try upon. Mr. Wyllie produced a series of Government orders, including distinct authority from the Governor-General. This was settled on the first day of trial when Mr. Lang admitted that he must proceed. He also contended against the reception of nearly the whole record,—copies occupying the place of original documents, and the signatures in both copies and originals being generally unproved. The point was not disposed of further than by an incidental remark of the Court, towards the close, that attested copies on stamps were, by the practice of the Courts, regarded as legal exhibits. Indeed, most of the objections were made reserved questions, which, from the time that the evidence of the pardoned perjurers was rejected, it was evident would never, though the judge admitted their gravity, enter into the final judgment. "The guts of the case," as Mr. Lang expressed it, went out with those witnesses, and the prosecution through that ruling of the Court must break down from want of internal support. Yet the Court refrained from deciding that the remaining evidence had not sufficient substance for a verdict. The judge therefore left it to the jury to say whether the case should or should not go to defence. They retired for a quarter of an hour, and returned disagreed, and severally giving their reasons, Baboo Sama Churn stating his opinions in English with weight and clearness, there were points affecting Choteh Lal, in regard to two despatches of bullocks that required to be cleared up, he would not say that they criminated, but they still stood questionable. Three other jurors, Messrs. Johnston, Smith, and Wollaston, concurred. Mr. Ledlie would acquit instantly; he had put it to his colleagues, that if counsel then and there abandoned the case, could they convict? The Judge ruled, that for the majority, the defence must proceed next morning. Mr. Lang then with great warmth again called on the Court to quash the whole case on its irregularities. This the Court again refused. He then claimed time to prepare. This too was disallowed; the case had long been in progress, and the whole civil business of the Court was at a stand. When the Court opened on Wednesday it was densely thronged, and Mr. Lang moved, in the first place, for the admission of all the witnesses hitherto excluded; he would call only two, whom he desired to examine before he pleaded; and the rest were all there, at the service of the prosecution; he would call any others who should be named. The Court permitted the presence of the witnesses, but refused to hear any till after the defence. Mr. Lang commenced, by declaiming against the hardship of being forced to plead on a case with such voluminous evidence, absolutely without time even to read it once over; and as for reducing his defence to record, as required by the Court, all he could do was to note a few remarks on a bit of paper. All his previous technical objections stood good; not one had been answered. He laughed at the constitution of the jury;—he would not address them;—the machinery of the trial was remarkable,—a Company's court—a Company's judge,—a Company's prosecutor, and a Company's jury;—he felt placed in novel difficulties;—the evidence on record was worthless,—documents filed were unattested, and most of that given orally and noted by the judge was a mass of utter nonsense, made up of belief and supposition of witnesses, which for his own credit he must say he had not objected to, merely to save the time of the Court. Burke had asserted that the Company had not and could not delegate arbitrary power; but here, from the Governor-General down to the Nazir, all did in fact possess it. Next he met the assumption on a vital point, that Choteh Lal was a servant of Government, on which point the "fraud" depended. There were precedents which ruled that a man in his position (paid by Jotee Pershaud) was a private agent; there was no better authority than "Mr. Shakspeare" to make him out a public servant (quoting "Twelfth-Night"), where Viola claims to be Oliver's servant, because servant to Orsino, her servitor in love—good poetry, but bad law! Next adverting to the prosecutor's allusion to the wealth of the defendant, he observed that it was an old imputation against the Company that they, when it suited them, accused people of crime and convicted them of wealth:—here the charge was "fraud," the object "wealth." As to the case itself, he was like a clergyman called in to console a corpse,—its life was gone. He then analyzed the evidence, pointing out how much of it was gone; all the life was gone, and yet the case moved like a galvanized dead body; he inveighed bitterly and sarcastically at being forced to defend such a case. But to go on,—there was the point of "payment of charges when there were no supplies,"—he maintained that the proof was, that there was even now an open account subject to adjustment; that Jotee Pershaud was still for these very supplies a large creditor; that the immense operations for which he contracted did not make him responsible if his servants acted criminally; that he was a man above necessity, and had stood forward to aid the Government in their difficulties as a faithful friend, and in hope of a title. He then commented in a tone of ridicule on what he viewed as irregularities,—the reiteration, in papers, filed one after another by the prosecutor, of former and unsustained assertions, and blamed the committing officer for wrong management. Objections above noticed as separately urged in the previous proceedings formed further grounds of comment in the defence, and rebutting the statement in the opening address, that there had been any threat held out to Government; he then went over most of that address point by point.

The two witnesses called by Mr. Lang were Major Ramsey and Brigadier Parsons, C. B., who gave the very highest character for ability and energy to the chief defendant, and besides a handsome testimonial from Lord Gough. Counsel filed a warm-hearted letter from the late Sir Dudley Hill.

The prosecutor claimed the right of reply to the defence, but the Court would allow no weight to his pleas. He was overruled in this point, and the case then went to the jury. They repeatedly begged to hear the original Roobukaree, but the Court declined, and they retired without it. About half an hour after they returned with their verdict, for all the defendants, Not Guilty. The judge accepted the verdict, and pronounced his concurrence.—Delhi Gazette, April 12.

There remain two charges against Jotee Pershaud undisposed of. One, the Delhi affair, is quashed at once; the other may share the same fate; but it depends upon Government, to whom a reference has been made, to ascertain whether further proceedings shall be taken against Jotee Pershaud or not.—Ibid. April 19.

We have heard that the Government has sent down orders to stop all further proceedings against Jotee Pershaud, who, on his part, is only too willing to base his hopes of receiving a few more waggon-loads of rupees, on the report of Major Bygrave.—Delhi Gazette, April 24.

We hear that Lalla Jotee Pershaud has now sent instructions to Calcutta to withdraw his suit against Government in the Supreme Court, and that he will trust to the officers of Government for a settlement as usual.—Ibid., April 24.

The Delhi Gazette observes:—"As we have abetted what has been termed 'the sanguinary policy of the Government,' throughout the late proceedings, we make no comments upon the result, but the following narrative of the causes which led to the prosecution, and its progress through successive stages, will furnish the best vindication of the course which has been adopted:—

"Petitions from informers began in February, 1849. These were addressed to the local commissariat officer, and were soon extended to the higher commissariat authorities, viz.:—Major J. Ramsay, Capt. Nuthall, Col. W. F. Thompson, Dy. com. gen., and the Military Board. The members of the Military Board referred the last petition to Capt. Ramsay, joint deputy commissary general, for report with their letter dated 23rd May, 1849. Capt. Ramsay, in his letter dated the 14th September, 1849, in reply states, that 'the character and calling of the informer, as well as the evidence on the face of the petition, proves that the object of the informer is to extort money, and therefore is not only unworthy of credence, but deserving of condemnation; for however false may be the charges brought forward, the credit of the defendant generally suffers from the gratuitous allegations of worthless and profligate characters.' The Military Board was divided in opinion, Brigadier W. H. L. Frith and Lieut.-col. F. S. Hawkins holding that the petition was 'not worthy of consideration,' the writer's motive being in their opinion 'mercenary,' and his 'object to extort money from the party accused.' But Lieut.-col. Mactier remarked that Jotee Pershaud's account of the informer's character could not be relied on; and that the charges had not been withdrawn; and he was of opinion that the petition should be forwarded for the consideration of Government with his recommendation that 'an investigation should be instituted into the nature of the charges preferred.'

"This difference led the Board to address Sir John Littler, President of the Council of India in Council, their letter dated the 9th January, 1850, submitting this difference for his orders. Sir J. Littler, through Major R. Wyllie, officiating military secretary to the Government of India, in letter dated 25th January, 1850, desired that the original petitions should be sent to him, and then addressed the Government N. W. Provinces by Major R. Wyllie's letter, dated 15th February, an application 'to cause the necessary instructions to be given to the proper civil authority at Agra, with a view to a thorough and minute investigation taking place, the result being duly reported for the information of Government.' The Lieutenant-Governor, in Mr. Secretary Thornton's letter, dated 11th March, 1850, ordered the magistrate of Agra 'to institute the most searching inquiry into the case, and report the result.' Mr. C. B. Denison, first in his capacity of officiating magistrate, and afterwards as officiating joint magistrate, under Mr. M. R. Gubbins, the officiating magistrate, conducted the inquiry. On the 27th June, Mr. Gubbins submitted a report of the progress of the inquiry from Mr. C. B. Denison, in which, while the latter gentleman enters fully into details, the former (Mr. Gubbins) states, 'that he has examined the whole proceedings up to the present date, and one or two of the principal parties concerned in giving evidence, especially Muheysh Doss, of Delhi; and is fully satisfied that the existence of most extensive fraud has been established.' Meanwhile, upon Mr. Denison's requisition, Mr. R. K. Dick, magistrate of Bijapore, and Mr. Edward Wyllie, joint magistrate of Barilly, had investigated the frauds connected with the entertainment of Bunjara bullocks certified from those two zillahs. Both officers discovered proof of frauds to a great extent, as was certified by their several reports, viz.—Mr. Dick's report, dated the 19th July, 1850, and Mr. Wyllie's dated the 12th of the same month. Hereupon the Government N. W. Provinces addressed the magistrate of Agra their letter, dated 23rd July, 1850, containing the following order:—'You will examine into and expose the fraud which the contractor is supposed to have committed. If the fraud on the part of Jotee Pershaud or any of his agents is punishable by law, you will indict such punishment as the law requires.'

"These orders were reported to the Governor-General, and approved of. Subsequently Jotee Pershaud was instigated to commence a suit against Government with a view to compel the Government to give up the prosecution. He went down to Calcutta in September, 1850, in company with Mr. Lang, and there instituted the suit for fifty odd lacs of rupees. Subsequently, the magistrate reported fully in his letter, dated 7th November, 1850, to the Government N. W. Provinces, on the subject of the commissariat frauds connected with the Delhi commissariat office, which, having been submitted to the Governor-General by the Government N. W. Provinces, elicited the orders of Lord Dalhousie contained in Col. Stuart's letter, dated 20th November, 1850, to the effect 'that the Governor-General has read the report by Mr. Gubbins of the inquiry into the frauds alleged to have been committed by Jotee Pershaud, and that his lordship is of opinion that the criminal trial should be proceeded with.'

"In November, and subsequently, overtures were made by Jotee Pershaud, having for their object a confession on his part, and the obtaining of a pardon from the Government. No encouragement was, however, held out to him by the Governor-General. On the contrary, the magistrate had to inform him that, if even he confessed, and implicated others more guilty, no pardon could be guaranteed to him. Whether these overtures were prompted by truth or falsehood,—whether he did possess any genuine and authentic proofs, by which to shift upon higher shoulders the guilt charged upon himself, can never now be known, and so we may not believe he could. Any how, the course followed by the Government of India, cut off all inducement on his part to peach; and with the chances of the law before him, he could only act as he did, and hold his tongue."

SALT IN INDIA.

Salt is imported into Calcutta to the following extent from Great Britain:—

	Tons.
1847-48	26,170
1848-49	16,256
1849-50	25,778
1850-51, to end of January ..	29,022
1849-50—From Great Britain	25,778
" From Madras	9,414
" From other places, except Great Britain and Madras	51,855
Total tons ..	87,047
1850-51, to end of January.—From Great Britain ..	29,022
" " From Madras	3,709
" " From other places	36,524
Total tons ..	69,255

About 50 lacs of maunds was about the quantity made under the Company, when the population was said to be above 30,000,000 souls in Bengal, Behar, and Orissa, or about eighteen or twenty years ago. The above quantity is about 183,349 tons, or 410,000,000 lbs. The consumption is 12 lbs. a year for each person; this would give 34,166,666 people.

Salt is now sold in Calcutta, and at the Company's salt golahs, in quantities of 5 maunds (or 450 lbs.) the lowest quantity, and 100 maunds the highest, for the use of the adjacent villages near the golahs. It is sold every day, except holidays. The price is Rs. 4. 4as. to Rs. 4. 12as. per bazar maund (82 lbs.) within 20 miles of Calcutta, and beyond at Rs. 4. 12as. to Rs. 5. 4as. A pound a month is put down for each man, woman, boy, or girl. Salt imported from England is not liked by the natives for cooking; the Hindoo objects to eat almost everything that is imported by ships. Salt is used for cooking food; for medicine, dyeing, and bleaching; by goldsmiths, for cleaning metals. Salt is given to all the tame animals with their food, such as horses, elephants, bullocks, and dogs, &c.

The rock salt (from the Punjab), or salt from the Samber Lake, is not used below Benares.

The custom duty on salt is now Rs. 250 per 100 maunds. It was (1841 to 1843) Rs. 325. It will be seen that, in the year 1849-50, there were 87,047 tons imported into Calcutta, besides that made by the Company. In the nine months of the season 1850-51, there were 29,022 tons; and if the succeeding three months give an equal proportion, the quantity for the season 1850-51 will be 50 per cent. increase on any of the preceding years. English salt is used chiefly for curing provisions, for which purpose the Indian salt does not answer.

There is a proposition to arrange for more retail chokees between Calcutta and Benares, and at a distance from the golahs, &c. At the Madras presidency, they have a system by which salt is sold in retail. It should be under Government control, and a heavy penalty on convictions of mixing sand, &c., with the salt.—(From a Correspondent.)

DEBTS OF COMPANY'S OFFICERS.

In the Englishman of March 25th appears a letter, signed "Centurion," addressed to the Editor of the London Times, in which the writer complains bitterly of strictures upon the officers of the Company's army in an article in that journal eulogizing Sir C. Napier's Farewell Order, and offers a spirited vindication of his fellow-officers against their imputed "disregard of moral duties, luxury and vices." He dwells likewise upon "the apparent harshness of him, who, having ruled us for eighteen months with an iron rod; having visited our sins, sometimes our almost venial sins, with a punishment as extreme as the law permitted; having held up our system to reprobation, our commanders to scorn, leaves us at last not with a parent's blessing, but a step-father's curse; affixes a stigma on us years will not remove, and, under the shadow of a complimentary and an affectionate farewell, strikes a blow at our reputation, the effects of which time will not erase." On one point, and on one alone, he admits, "the army must plead guilty, namely, as regards that indebtedness which has become its normal state; and I shudder when, looking into the future, I observe nothing but the trammels of that net, now closing so heavily around us, depressing our spirits and exertions." "But," he adds, "even Sir Charles Napier alludes carefully and slightly to those institutions which have caused the debt he denounces,—the Mofussil banks. Let their defenders, and they are many and powerful,—having their interests bound up in the banks they uphold—argue as they will, they cannot refute these two great facts: first, that the army is similar in constitution, and is composed of the same class of men, it was fifteen years ago; secondly, that the debt, and the banks to which it is due, have both sprung up since that period. I affirm, and I proudly affirm, that in every other respect our morale is improved, that the tone of society is higher, the style of living more domestic, than it was formerly,—I think I may add than it has ever been; whilst gaming, that curse of curses, has become nearly extinct, or is confined to a few harpies who carry on their dark trade unseen and unknown by society, which would shrink from their pollution. But the debt remains, a stain equally upon those who have incurred it and upon those to whom it has been incurred; and these latter, as I said before, even Sir Charles Napier shrank from alluding to. With his adjutant-general, and his deputy adjutant-general, with nearly all the staff, engaged deeply in these speculations,—with general officers and brigadiers bound to support a system that enriches them, being the usury which has doubled their capital,—Sir Charles Napier, moving only amongst the creditors, heard only their side of the question, and, becoming biased to their views, looked through the bankers' eyes as he adjudged the case, and whilst visiting the debtor with a heavy hand, spared the creditor his official censure. The great mass of liability under which the army is now labouring was incurred between 1842 and 1848, in the earlier years of which period, money was almost forced on the thriftless, the unthinking, and the careless, when nearly any one could procure from 500*l.* to 1,500*l.*, and when rash speculation or mad extravagance met with funds to any amount; when the banks were approved of, and had the support of the Commander-in-Chief, whose son-in-law, whose nephews, whose personal staff, were nearly all individually interested in their success, and when those possessing means became creditors of those without, rivetting chains which years will scarcely loosen, and causing four-fifths of the army to fall into the anomalous and discreditable position of debtors to the remaining fraction; and the interest of the debt then incurred, having been gradually raised from eight to twelve per cent., will render its discharge a work of years, in some cases a work which death, by throwing the burden on the life insurances offices, alone can perform." He observes, however, that there are between twenty and thirty of Her Majesty's regiments in India, the officers of which generally labour under a like debt incurred in a similar manner, "though Sir Charles Napier, whilst censuring us, spared them, the sheep of his own flock."

MISCELLANEOUS.

NATIVE FEMALE SCHOOLS.—The Hon. Mr. Bethune's Girls' School is in much the same condition as in the beginning of 1850. About thirty students are registered, out of which about twenty girls seem to be present daily. None of the girls (students) are from a real Hindoo family, but they are all from common families, or descendants of those who do not associate with the principal Hindoos, but are fallen or degenerated from them. —(From a Correspondent.)

MAJOR GERARD, the officer in the commissariat department, against whom his subordinate Sergeant Collier preferred certain charges, has been most honourably acquitted by a Court of Inquiry assembled at Hissar.

MR. J. H. YOUNG, of the civil service, has been admitted to a furlough of the present season.

A MUNIPORE PRINCE is in custody, and is now being conveyed to Calcutta. He has been guilty of raising a rebellion against his brother the ruling prince, who appealed to the British Government for protection against his designs.—Hurkaru, April 19.

THE UNION BANK.—On the 11th April, the Supreme Court gave judgment in the important matter of Glyn and Co. and the Union Bank. The three judges concurred in maintaining the validity of the memorial of registration filed in 1847.

TROOPS FOR THE CAPE.—A rumour was current that either the Supreme Government had decided proprio motu on sending troops to the Cape, or that orders to do so had been received by the last mail. Two of our contemporaries mention that the 18th or Royal Irish regiment in the fort had received orders on Tuesday to be in readiness to embark for foreign service.—Englishman, April 18.

THE ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH under the direction of Dr. W. B. O'Shaughnessy has been at work at night during the late squalls; and it is found that less power is required to work the wires during such weather than when it is fine; although some disturbance is perceptible before the squall commences.—Hurkaru.

INCENDIARISM.—We briefly announced in our last the destruction by fire of the ship Kurramany. The Hurkaru, April 9th and 10th, gives full particulars of this terrible catastrophe, by which nearly 300 human lives were lost. There is scarcely room for the shadow of a doubt that the ship was set on fire by the lascars, who thus sought to evade the necessity of working out the advance of wages which they had received; but unfortunately there is little likelihood of the diabolical crime being brought home to the guilty parties.

CHURCH AT PESHAWUR.—Subscriptions for a church to be built at Peshawur have been made, and amount to Rs. 4,000. The estimate is Rs. 14,000.

ON DITS.—Capt. Watt, of the 6th Light Cavalry, retires from the service, receiving Rs. 25,000 for his step. The promotion falls to Lieut. Macmillen and Cornet Willock. Capt. Watt has already resigned his seat as a Director of the North-Western Bank.

THE GEOLOGICAL SURVEY in the Salt Range, under charge of Dr. Fleming and Mr. Purdon, was to be discontinued during the hot season. Lignite is tolerably abundant, and jet occasionally met with; no seams of coal worth working are now expected, the rocks not belonging to the carboniferous series at all.

THE N.W. BANK.—We have forborne, for some time, to set forth the facts of another case of banking "irregularity," though it is twice as bad as the affair of Capt. Blois, and more than half as iniquitous as the conduct of Major Angelo. Lieut.-Col. Ponsonby, long chairman of the direction, had taken a number of shares, and given no actual value in return, and what was more natural than his willingness to adopt a suggestion of Major Angelo's, that money should be raised upon them for the benefit of the latter? It was but parting with what had cost him nothing to get, and which he took care should afterwards cost him nothing to be finally rid of. Therefore it was arranged and carried out, that sixty-six shares, ostensibly belonging to Col. Ponsonby, should be pledged to the Delhi Bank for a loan of Rs. 33,000, to the major of invalids, not the secretary. Col. Ponsonby endorsed the shares in blank, and sent with them a letter, in his own hand-writing, to the managers of the Delhi Bank, repeating and confirming the terms of the mortgage. Having obtained the par value of his stock from the Delhi, Col. Ponsonby subsequently cancelled it in the books of his own bank, taking care, of course, not to inform the mortgagees of that very important fact. The latter only discovered it by accident a week or two since, as their dividends continued to be paid, notwithstanding the shares had disappeared from the register at Meerut. It is proper to state what opinions are expressed with regard to the above business, by the various persons directly concerned. The directors of the Delhi Bank say, their security is quite good, as the "hypothecation" was duly recorded at Meerut by Major Angelo, and hence the after cancellation was quite illegal. Col. Ponsonby says, that he never had the money borrowed, and is not able to pay it back. The surviving managers of the North Western say, they suppose that their brother shareholders must bear the loss, in addition to their previous burdens. There is no officer more popular than Col. Ponsonby; no man who has a greater host of attached friends. We believe that he trusted and has been deceived; but what shall we say of the system which destroys so many reputations? The world is bound, for its own sake, to judge of actions, and not of motives. We respect the colonel and the private gentleman, but dare not do otherwise than denounce the bank director.—Delhi Gaz. April 19.

OPIMUM-SMOKING.—About one in a hundred, who can afford it, smoke opium—about two chuttacks a month. This is about 3 lbs. a year. They mix it with some leaves, and smoke it with the hookah. In Bengal Proper, in a certain district, every man and every woman smoke opium.—(From a Correspondent.)

COL. SAGE.—The Englishman, April 5, says that the commission appointed to investigate the charges against Lieut. Col. Sage, is still dragging its slow length along. Several officers are likely to be called in for explanations.

BENGAL ARTILLERY AND ENGINEERS.—There is every reason to believe that the anticipations which have been recently indulged in, regarding an increase to the Bengal artillery, and of the corps of Bengal engineers, are likely to be speedily realized. One battalion to each is the addition that is confidently calculated upon; it will materially affect the relative promotion of the officers of these corps as compared with that of the cavalry and of the line, but no one can deny that it is absolutely required.—Lahore Chron., April 19.

INCORPORATION OF SIKHS WITH THE REGULAR ARMY.—This measure is in exact accordance with that wise policy which has ever characterized the conduct of the British Government, of converting the opponents into the defenders of its authority. Happily for us, there is no feeling of patriotism among the various tribes of India. Those who fight against us one day, are ready to fight under our own banners the next; and, generally speaking, they are faithful to their salt. Thus, before the Goorkah war was closed, we had regiments of Goorkahs organized and commanded by our own officers. The troops of each country which we have successively conquered, have always been ready to consider that their services belonged to the ruler de facto, and they have felt no hesitation in transferring their allegiance and their swords to their new masters. The determined hostility manifested towards us by the soldiers of Runjeet Sing seemed to suggest the propriety of postponing this incorporation of them to a more distant period than has been hitherto deemed necessary; but our conquest of that country appears to have been so complete, and the extinction of all hostile organization throughout the Punjab to have been so rapid and decisive, that it is no longer deemed hazardous to put arms into the hands of those whom we have found it the most difficult to conquer of all the tribes of India, and to enlist them under our own colours. By this measure we are happily enabled to afford employment for a large body of the valorous warriors of the Punjab, and prevent their plotting mischief. By incorporating them with our own regiments, we disperse them over India, in small bodies, and thus neutralize any feeling of opposition which they may cherish. At the same time, we introduce a new element of safety into our own army, which has hitherto been rather too exclusively composed of men of one class and region. We have now Hindoos and Mahomedans, Goorkahs and Sikhs, mingled in our army at this Presidency, and we are no longer at the mercy of a body of men who, from community of lineage, religion, habits, and feelings, might enter into formidable combinations.—Friend of India.

EMEUTE AT THE MADRUSSA.—The Citizen of the 8th April reports an émeute amongst the scholars of the Calcutta Madrussa. The principal, Dr. Sprenger, determined to introduce the study of natural philosophy and geography, and also some acquaintance with Oordoo and Persian; this the scholars resisted, and left the masters. The council of education supported the principal and expelled the refractory, whereupon they returned en masse and took forcible possession of their old quarters, from which they were only ejected by the aid of the police: a very respectable case of barring out, thinks the Citizen, and which Young Bengal did very well indeed. The Englishman states the émeute was caused by the following orders issued by Dr. Sprenger:—"1st. That during the time of study from six to ten a.m., the students will only be allowed to go out for ten minutes, and then altogether. 2nd. That the pupils must give up the study of Arabic and read in English, Oordoo, and Persian, and that if the pupils wish to read Arabic works they are to receive them in translations. 3rd. That the custom of taking the dead to the Madrussa for the purpose of having the funeral service read there, be abolished. 4th. That should the time for praying happen during the hours of study it must be deferred till after college is over. 5th. That the students visit the museum on Fridays, the Mahomedan Sabbath, instead of going to the mosques." Against these the students protested and presented a petition to the principal on the subject, who replied if his orders were not obeyed, they might leave the college. After the police forced the students out, they presented a petition to Captain Hayes, the secretary, who told them to stop in the college until orders came from the council of education.

THE ADVENTURES OF A HORSE.—On the breaking out of the late insurrection in the Punjab, and at the time Raja Shere Sing was encamped in the Jetch Doab, a party, under Huree Sing, dharwee (so named from his known vocation as a dacoit), was sent by the Raja, at the suggestion of Sirdar Kojun Sing, of Rungurnungul, to attempt to intercept and carry off Lieut. W. Hodson, then in political charge of the district of Deenanugur, and attached, pro tempore, to the force which had entered the Baree Doab from the Julundhur, under Brigadier Wheeler. They lay in wait, near Deenanugur, on the 1st of February, 1849. Mr. Hodson passed by unperceived, but they stopped a spare horse, an Arab, much prized by his owner, that was following, in charge of two sowars of the guide corps. They wounded one of these men severely, and carried off the horse. Lieut. Hodson, who had been joined by Lieut. Lumsden, the commandant of the guides, pursued the thieves for thirty miles, following up the khaj without interruption, with the assistance of a party of the guides. On the eighth day after, two of the men tracked out and seized the leader of the band, Huree Sing; but the horse had gone on, and was lost sight of. It has been ascertained that the animal was taken up to the camp of Shere Sing, and ridden by Hakeem Sing, one of the party who stole him. This Hakeem Sing tried to escape, after the battle of Goojrat, through the Jumoo territory, but was stopped, and the horse was taken from him by the officers of Maharaja Goolab Sing, who were then most ready to comply with all the requests of the resident at Lahore. The animal, instead of being returned, however, was given to a subordinate officer of Goolab Sing, and ridden by him in his troop. More than a year after, Major Lake, deputy commissioner of Deenanugur, seized Hakeem Sing, who volunteered, on the facts connected with the horse being traced, to go and point him out. He did so, and the Arab once more returned to the rightful owner on Christmas day, 1850, with a polite letter from Meean Runbeer Sing, very much out of condition, and none the better for his adventures in the Sikh camp and the stables of Maharaja Goolab Sing.—Lahore Chron.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

ADDITIONAL COMPANIES, SAPPERS AND MINERS.

Adjutant-General's Office, Simla, April 5, 1851.—With advertisement to the General Order by the most noble the Gov.-Gen., dated March 20, 1851, the officer commanding the Sappers and Miners will take immediate steps for the formation of the two additional companies therein ordered.

Ten men from each of the other companies of the regiment are to be transferred to, and equally divided between, the 11th and 12th companies, and Captain J. A. Weller will detach recruiting parties to the extent necessary, in view to completing the ranks of the corps under its new organization. The requisite measures are also to be adopted, without delay, for the appointment of the prescribed Native commissioned and non-commissioned officers to the above-mentioned additional companies.

His Exc. desires that the contents of the third paragraph of the above order shall be thoroughly explained, both to all those now serving and to the recruits who may be hereafter enlisted.

MADRAS.

MISCELLANEOUS.

LIEUT. PAKENHAM, of H.M. 15th or King's Hussars, is about to retire from the service by the sale of his commission.

MR. GREY, accountant to the Bengal Military Club, has been appointed Secretary to the Madras Club with a salary.

HYDERABAD.—The following is from an Ellichpoor correspondent of the Madras Spectator:—"It is reported that bands of Rohillas are almost daily to be seen proceeding towards Oomrawuttee and Balapoor, in the vicinity of which places it is said that no fewer than 5,000 of these fellows are collected: for what purpose no one can as yet conjecture. In the city of Ellichpoor, there are said to be about 1,500 Rohillas in the employ of the Nawab, and also a few hundred prisoners of the same tribe. If a sharp look-out be not kept up, I fancy that we shall soon hear of a second edition of Dharoor, as the forts in the Berar are numerous, and some of them are places of great strength, and many valuable lives may be lost if these desperadoes are to be put down. The Nizam's Government must certainly be getting very lax in everything connected with the Contingent, as, I am given to understand, there is only one surgeon to afford medical aid to the whole of the Ellichpoor Division (consisting of one cavalry, one company of artillery, and two regiments of infantry).

LIEUTENANT and ADJUTANT JOHNSTONE, of the 3rd Madras Light Cavalry has been murdered by one of his Ghorawallas, who rushed into the house whilst Lieut. Johnstone and his wife were at dinner, and shot him in the back; he lingered till the next day, when he expired at Jaulnah.

THE MADRAS CIVIL FUND is considered to have "signally failed to accomplish the ends for which it was founded." A correspondent of the Spectator demands its entire reconstruction, on the ground that it is inherently vicious in principle and calculation. The Rs. 50,000 which the members are called upon to subscribe towards their several annuities, would yield far more than 500l. per annum if invested in a life assurance office; and again, the rate of promotion is so slow, that men of eighteen, nineteen, and even twenty years' service, are holding subordinate appointments without any immediate prospect of an improved position, and many who have served their full time, and are willing to leave the country, are unable to obtain an annuity.

THE GOVERNOR'S VIEWS ON EDUCATION.—From the proceedings which took place at the anniversary of the Madras High School in the College Hall, it appears that the Governor made an explanation of his proposed views with regard to education in the school—stating that he alone was responsible for the scheme which he had sketched out, and that he had not yet had an opportunity of submitting it to his honourable colleagues. He proposed the appointment of a council of education, consisting of a president, five vice-presidents, and twenty members. Sir Henry read the names of the gentlemen whom he would nominate to these offices. The next part of his plan was the establishment of a normal school for the education of teachers at the presidency. Seven new schools he also proposed should be established throughout the presidency for the teaching of English and the vernacular languages.

GOVERNMENT REWARDS FOR TRANSLATIONS.—Some of our contemporaries, while commending the Madras Tract and School Book Society for issuing an advertisement of a reward for a translation of the popular religious treatise, "James' Anxious Enquirer," into Tamil, have expressed a just surprise at the smallness of the reward offered, which is only fifty rupees. We entirely agree with those who consider the premium to be wholly inadequate to excite any great emulation amongst competitors; but considering the numerous claims which must be constantly pressing on the funds of the Tract Society, we can readily believe that this small sum is no proof of illiberality on their part. Under the circumstances, we think here is a good opportunity for benevolent persons desirous of encouraging scholarship and of promoting the extension of religious knowledge, to contribute an addition of a hundred or a hundred and fifty rupees, so as to make the reward in all a hundred and fifty or two hundred rupees. We should certainly not consider even the larger of these sums as any very extravagant temptation held out to the Tamil scholars of Madras.—Athenaeum.

COTTON GINS.—Dr. Wight, of Coimbatore, in a letter to the Spectator, says: "The cottage gin promises to prove a most valuable machine to India, being both efficient and easily worked. A cotton dealer in Coimbatore recently received an order for ginned cotton, and applied to me to assist him in supplying it. I had ten unemployed cottage gins, which I offered to place at his disposal, provided he would work them in a shed fitted up for the purpose on the premises. The cost of the shed did not exceed Rs. 10, and was sufficient to accommodate thirty-two gins. Here the ten gins were set to work, each driven by two women, squatted on the ground, just as with the churka. Each gin cleaned 100 lbs. a day, greatly to the delight of the merchant, who assured me they did more work than eighty churkas would do in the same time, and added, that if the demand for ginned cotton were greater, and he could afford to make the purchase, he would have bought the whole of them! Ginned cotton is clearer than churkaed, there being a loss of fully three per cent. in the weight of the ginned article, the bulk of which appears in the shape of sand and refuse under the gin; but I expect the outturn from them will fetch, in Liverpool or Manchester, from ½d. to ¾d. per lb. more than another portion of the same batch of cotton, cleaned by the churka."

BOMBAY.

CONSTITUTION OF HINDU SOCIETY.

IN considering carefully the structure of Hindu society, a peculiar modification of the patriarchal principle seems to be one of its most important fundamental elements. The patriarchal element has prevailed more or less in all imperfectly civilized societies; and it is natural that it should do so. Who in general more proper to direct an infant society than the patriarch, full of experience and years, from whom all the members are lineally descended? In the history of the patriarchs mentioned in the Old Testament, we have an example of a patriarchal society in its purest and simplest form; and in the Arab sheikhs, and chiefs of the Highland clans, we have another example of a similar submission of societies of men to one, who though not strictly related to all, is yet in reality related to many, and nominally to all. The phratras among the Greeks, and the gentes among the Latins, were no doubt originally tribes in subordination to a chief, who was the eldest relative of some, and the lord of the rest. Among the Romans, till a very late period, not only was the property, but also the lives of the male descendants, in the power of the oldest progenitor. A grandfather could by law exercise a complete and despotic power over the lives and property, not only of all his sons, but of all his grandsons also. The Hindu legislation never went to the absurd length of the Roman law, in putting the lives of the descendants in the power of the progenitor; but as a general rule, the father has authority among the Hindus over all the children possess, until with his consent a legal deed of separation has been obtained. It often happens, especially when there is a little property in a family, that what we would call a dozen families live together, and are esteemed by the Hindus as one. We once knew a family of this kind which consisted of about sixty members. There was the old man the patriarch of the family, his four sons and their wives, and ever so many grand-children of both sexes. All these lived in one house, and had one purse and one table. One of the old man's sons was in Government employ, another was a Moonshiee, and taught English gentlemen the native languages; the eldest, as the father could not then attend to business, was steward of the family, made all the purchases and received the earnings of the other branches of the family; another son was a hanger-on without employment. The grandchildren of the male sex were either writing gratis as candidates in Government offices, or at school, or at home, according to their respective ages. Several of the eldest of these again were also married, and had their wives with them. Many such families as this are to be found still among the Hindus, where European intercourse has not disturbed the natural course of native society. The influence that any of the subordinate members of the family can exercise over the head, is merely of a moral kind. The power of the father, while he is able to act, is uncontrollable, as long, at least, as he does not violently transgress the rules of propriety; and even in bad cases of partiality or oppression, after a little war of words, all parties generally settle down into their former state. When the old man dies or becomes inefficient, his authority descends to the eldest son, to whom all parties submit as a matter of course.

If the father chooses, he can give any son that demands it his share of the property, or a sum of money equivalent to it; but the son cannot force him to do so. The son who has thus received his share is now considered, as respects the family property, entirely an alien; and though it should afterwards increase ever so much, he has no claim to receive any additional share. The attentive reader of the New Testament will no doubt recollect that this is in exact accordance with the customs of the Jews in the time of our Saviour, as implied in the affecting parable of the Prodigal Son. The youngest son receives, on his departure, at his own request, the portion of the goods that fell to him. On his return, though penitent and forgiven, received with all affection by the father, he receives no farther share in the inheritance. The father declares to the eldest son, notwithstanding the improper spirit he displayed, in terms full and explicit, "All I have is thine." And this represents the case exactly as it stands among the Hindus.—Guardian.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE LONDON MAIL of March 24 arrived at Bombay on April the 23rd, per Moozuffer.

MAJOR WALTER, of the 3rd light cavalry, has accepted a bonus of Rs. 47,000 from his brother officers, and purposes retiring immediately from the service. Captain G. G. Malet, Lieut. T. A. Mackenzie, and Cornet W. H. F. Sykes will obtain their promotion on the occasion.

COLONEL OUTRAM, the Resident at Baroda, arrived a few days since at Bombay. One of our local contemporaries hints that this officer's presence here is owing to the affair of Baba Nafday; and it is also asserted that some voluminous, as well as important papers, are to be submitted to the Home Government of India, amongst which are the examinations of all the parties connected with this case, as well as Mr. Gregor Grant's report to the Bombay Government upon it. Some months since the Bombay Times stated that large sums were alleged to have been given to certain parties whose names were found in a list drawn up at Baroda.—Bombay Telegraph, May 3.

NATIVE LANGUAGES.—The Court of Directors have authorized the grant of a donation of Rs. (1,000) one thousand each to Capt. G. Stack, 24th N.I., and Capt. H. J. Pelly, 8th N.I., as a mark of their approbation for their having passed,—Capt. Stack as an interpreter in Hindustani, Mahratta, and Guzerattee, and for his having attained a knowledge of Sindhe; and Capt. Pelly as having passed as interpreter in Hindustani, Mahratta, Persian, and Guzerattee.

MR. WILLOUGHBY.—Society at large, and several of the public bodies of this presidency, have passed resolutions complimentary to Mr. J. P. Willoughby, the retired member of the Council, who goes home by the steamer of this day. A meeting was held at the Town-hall, when it was resolved to subscribe some money for a testimonial, and about ten or twelve thousand rupees have been collected for this purpose. The praise accorded to Mr. Willoughby, though great, is not exaggerated, save in one respect, namely, the conferring on him the honour of having arrested the crime of infanticide in Guzerat, which the Bombay Guardian rightly attributes to others in the following sentence:—"The notice published by Mr. Willoughby's friends points to the suppression of infanticide in the Guzerat peninsula; but we have always heard the foundation of this measure attributed to Colonel Walker and Governor Duncan."—Bombay Telegraph, May 3.

—The Hon. Mr. Willoughby, late member of Council, bids a final adieu this afternoon to India; and we lose in him one of the ablest statesmen and most zealous promoters of native improvement which India for years could boast of. A man of his family and fortune, talents, and habits of business, is not likely to be long suffered to absent himself from the public service.—Bombay Times, May 3.

A BEAUTIFUL PHENOMENON was seen from Mazagon about 10 o'clock on the 19th March—when a display of meteors, following each other in succession, appeared from a point about 15 deg. above the north-eastern horizon, or nearly over Elephant. In the space of little more than half an hour about twenty were observed: they darted across the sky in all directions,—some of them shot upwards, but by much the greater part moved towards the south or south-east. The largest of them were about the size of the planet Venus at her brightest, and so down to mere specs of light. None of them were observed to explode, but the larger of them left long trains of light behind them.—Bombay Times.

ADEN, April 14.—Mr. Delisser, of the 78th Highlanders, was returning from the Point to the camp on a bazaar pony about 10 A.M. When about half-way, he observed an Arab beckoning to him to pull up: he did so; the Arab approached, and, in the most amicable manner, caressed the pony. In a moment, however, he stooped down, and drew a creese, with which he made two or three desperate lunges at Mr. Delisser's stomach. These he avoided by jumping back in his saddle. He then sprang to the ground, and was soon engaged in a deadly struggle with the assassin. After a short struggle, during which Mr. Delisser was frightfully wounded in the left arm, he managed to grip the fellow's creese-hand, and with one wrench possessed himself of the weapon. One back-hander, and the Arab was a corpse. An escort of the 78th Highlanders, just then returning, likewise from the Point, hove in sight. To them Mr. D. entrusted the body, and having mounted his pony again, galloped up to camp as hard as he could, and when he arrived at the 78th Hospital, he fainted from loss of blood. He is still confined to his bed. The Arab that evening was hung in chains at the outpost, as an example. On subsequent inquiry, it turns out that this man had formerly been an inhabitant of Lahedj, but was expelled from thence by the Sultan for stabbing and stealing. The Fouthelh tribe, however, took him under their protection, and there is no doubt that he was a paid man, sent in by them for the purpose of murdering either Capt. Haines or Mr. Cruttenden, or both. He had been seen lurking about Capt. Haines' house at the Point the preceding day, and such strong suspicions were entertained against the fellow, that Capt. H. was persuaded to take a sword in the carriage with him during his drive to camp in the evening. Capt. H. did so, and sure enough they passed an Arab on the road, evidently waiting for the arrival of somebody; the glimpse of the sword was supposed to have been sufficient to deter him from his purpose on that occasion.—Bombay Times, May 2.

LOSSES BY FIRE.

Bombay Castle, April 17, 1851.—With reference to G. G. O. Dec. 7, 1849 (Jameson's Code, page 929, Art. 51), the Right Hon. the Gov. in Council is pleased to direct that the following rule, embodied in the G. O. by the Hon. the Pres. of the Council of India in Council, dated the 3rd Dec. 1850, be made applicable under this presidency:—"On all occasions of loss sustained by 'fire,' entitling parties to claim indemnification, a station committee of commissioned officers shall be convened without delay to minutely investigate and report upon the origin and circumstances connected with the fire, as, should it have been caused by carelessness, or any deviation from the standing orders of the service, or instructions of the Commander-in-Chief, compensation by the state for losses will not be sanctioned: no compensation is admissible for the huts of soldiers destroyed by fire."

2. In conformity with the practice of the Bengal presidency, a supply of 100 water-pots per troop or company is authorized, for the purpose of extinguishing fires in the lines of regiments.

CEYLON.

REWARDS FOR APPREHENSION OF ESCAPED PRISONERS.—The Ceylon Government Gazette contains an intimation of rewards offered for the apprehension of escaped prisoners. There are about seventy of these escaped prisoners and convicts named and described. In a great many cases the offence for which the fugitive was committed for trial, or had been convicted, is not mentioned. In such cases we are willing to presume that the prisoner's crime was not a very serious one. What we have now to notice, however, is that the reward offered for the apprehension of the whole crew is the sum of two pounds a head. Amongst the prisoners for whose apprehension this large sum of money is offered by Government, are some who have been convicted or who have been accused of such offences as highway robbery—burglary and robbery—cattle stealing and other heavy crimes which at no remote period were judged worthy of being visited with capital punishment. But besides these we find in the list of runaways for whose apprehension the sum of two pounds is offered, Adrian, a native of Galle, under sentence of transportation for fourteen years; Samarapollige Allis Appo, committed for trial on a charge of murder; Cassim Pulle Mohanderam, committed for further examination on a charge of murder, and Ramalla, committed for trial on a charge of murder. The dates of the escapes of these prisoners are pretty ancient, and it is probable enough that they may have by this time patriotically "left their country for their country's good" and may be cutting throats elsewhere—but if they are still lurking in the less visited districts of Ceylon, the temptation of two pounds is not likely to stir up the valour of any daring "person or persons" to hunt them out, and to grapple with ruffians who most probably carry knives about them, and would not fail to defend their personal liberty by all the weapons that God and nature placed in their hands.—Athenæum.

EXECUTION.—Yesterday, Kayman's Gate presented the horrible spectacle of the execution of the five murderers of the three females at Grand Pass. On the morning of the execution, four of them were baptized by a Roman Catholic clergyman, the Rev. Mr. Caetano; but the fifth man, Thoma, although he had been receiving the instructions of the clergyman, resolutely refused the rite. On entering the circle surrounding the fatal erection, the culprit Thoma accepted the rite of Baptism, and, feeling exhausted, he partook of a little brandy. Shortly after religious exhortation, one by one the doomed ascended the scaffold. When Thoma appeared, he addressed the spectators with the most solemn asseverations of his innocence, appealing to heaven that he neither knew, saw, nor was acquainted with the murder, although it is said a confession of one of the men implicated him as the actual murderer of the daughter of the tobacco-woman. So loud were his vociferations, that the priest was compelled to order him to be silent.

Opium, we hear, was allowed these men, as they had been long accustomed to its use. We hope the law in this respect will be modified. We trust never again to have the painful duty of recording an execution in Colombo; and if the awful scene of yesterday had any impression on the thousands of spectators, both male and female, assembled, our aspirations may be verified. The utmost decorum was evinced by the crowd; not a sound was heard whilst the last preparations for the consummation of the murderers' fate were being made,—all was a dead silence.—Ceylon Times, March 7.

CHINA.

THE REBELLION.—The intelligence from the disturbed districts has been of a vague and conflicting nature. At one time we had report of distinguished success on the part of the imperialists; at another, that similar fortune remained with the insurgents. From the Chinese Repository we learn that, "The insurgents are believed to possess most of the southern departments in Kwangsi, making Sin-chau-fu their head-quarters; and have raised their chief to the imperial dignity, under the title of Tien-teh, or Heaven's Virtue. They levy a revenue from the general commerce on the Pearl river, from Wu-chau-fu westward, and have crippled the operations of the imperialists to a very serious degree."

We have since heard that Kwei-lin-fu, the capital of the province of Kwangsi, has been taken possession of by the rebels. This town is but a short distance from the province of Honan, bounding Kwangtung on the north. The whole tract of country reported to be in possession of the insurgents is about the size of England and Wales united, with a population of some four millions and upwards. Again, in opposition to the report regarding the taking of Kwei-lin, we are informed that the Imperial Commissioner Le has ordered Chang-yuen-yau, an undergraduate of Hiang-shan, to come to him at Kwei-lin, and assist in devising plans for putting down the rebellion.—Friend of China.

CHUI APOO.—This notorious pirate was tried at the Hong-Kong criminal sessions, on the 24th March, for the murder of Capt. Da Costa, at Wong-ma-kok, on the 25th February, 1849. The jury consisted of half Englishmen and half foreigners. Chui Apoo, on being asked what he had to say to the indictment, replied, pointing upwards and downwards, that "there was a God above and there was also one below;" but he did not enter into explanation of what he wished to be inferred by the action and the words. The jury returned a verdict of "manslaughter," and the prisoner was sentenced to transportation for life. The verdict caused much dissatisfaction in the colony, and apparently to the prisoner himself, who destroyed himself in the Victoria Gaol. The Friend of China promises to say something regarding the confession which Chui Apoo made prior to his decease, and to show "that the death of Capt. Da Costa was the result of a preconcerted plan for his capture, arranged, most probably, by some high officers of the Chinese government."

SPANISH INDIA.

From Singapore we learn that the Marquis de Solana, the governor-general of the Philippines, at the head of an expedition, had attacked, taken by assault, and completely destroyed the strongly fortified forts and defences of Sooloo, on the island of the same name in that archipelago, belonging to a powerful sultan, sovereign of a considerable portion of the coast of Borneo, whose piratical junks have been for centuries the terror of merchantmen. It appears that repeated acts of piracy committed on the inhabitants of the Philippines induced the governor-general, in December, to proceed to Sooloo with three war-steamer, a corvette, and a brig, to demand redress; but the forts opened fire on the Spanish vessels anchored in their roads with no hostile manifestation. The governor-general immediately despatched a steamer to Manila for troops, and directed the militia force of the islands and all the regular troops disposable to be embarked for Zambanga, on the south coast of Mindanao. This force united at that point, and sailed thence on the 19th of February. On the 28th, the force, consisting of 3,500 men, with twenty field-pieces, was disembarked in two columns of attack, to the right and left of Sooloo; and while the three steamers, a brig, and the corvette opened fire on the forts and batteries, this force moved on to the attack.

The fire of the vessels making little or no impression on the forts, formed of strong double stockades, filled up with coral reef, and the embrasures on a level with the water, the governor-general resolved to attack the fort of the Datu Daniel by escalade. Three times the troops were driven off with loss by the garrison, who fought most desperately, at close quarters, throwing down their firelocks, drawing their campalanes (a short, sharp, heavy, two-edged sword), and defending themselves from the bayonet with large shields of buffalo hide. A company of grenadiers at length established themselves on the walls and diverged to the gate, which was opened; a strong body rushed in, and occupied the place. The sultan's brother, Datu Uden, fell, and as he was their principal military chief, they abandoned the remaining forts, which were occupied by the victors. In the fort taken by assault there were nearly 300 dead, the remaining force escaping by the postern gates. One hundred and forty-three pieces of artillery—many of heavy calibre—were removed to the transports, and the forts burnt to the ground. The artillery is of English manufacture; it bears the mark of the East-India Company, and was taken by those piratical hordes from an English settlement established in the island of Balambangan in 1773, which was shortly after treacherously surprised, the garrison put to death, and treasure and stores belonging to the Company captured to the amount of 675,000*l*. The island was ceded to the English by the Sultan of Sooloo, who was found a captive of the Spaniards at Manila when the English forces occupied that fortress in 1763, and as a reward for the favour conferred of re-establishing him on his throne, offered to cede the island, but afterwards treacherously murdered the garrison.

The inhabitants of the principal islands of the Sooloo archipelago are Mahometans; but in that of Sooloo are yet to be found, in the mountain districts, numerous tribes of Dyaks, who still also exist in Borneo. The present inhabitants of the town of Sooloo are descended from the Arabs.

The loss sustained in this affair was—1 field-officer, 6 other officers, and 250 men, killed and wounded.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

A CHINESE COMEDY.

In a Notice of the dramatic literature of China under the Yuen dynasty (A.D. 1279-1367), published in the last Journal Asiatique of Paris, M. Baziin has given an analysis, accompanied by extracts, of a Chinese comedy of that era, entitled Kin-tshien-ke, or "The Pledge of Love," written by Keaou-mang-foo.

Like most of the Chinese dramas, its story is historical. The chief characters are three celebrated poets, who flourished in the dynasty of the Tangs (A.D. 619-907), named Han-fae-king, Ho-che-chang, and Le-tae-pe, and some of the verses which the dramatist puts into the mouth of Han-fae-king were written by that poet himself.

The first scene opens in one of the magnificent palaces of the capital (Chang-gan), occupied by the governor, Wang-foo, who has a son named Wang-ching, and a daughter Lew-mae. Wang-foo, who was exalted to the highest dignities by the favour of the emperor Heuen-tsong, of the Tang dynasty, is a severe, but just, magistrate, serving the state with zeal, and an enemy to flatterers. The emperor, who was a generous prince, and often bestowed upon his ministers slight presents as marks of his regard, had given to Wang-foo fifty gold coins, bearing the characters of the new money of the Tangs, which was of copper. The governor took the whim into his head of stringing these coins, and forming them into a necklace for his daughter, to be worn by her as a talisman or charm, and he assured her that, as long as she wore it, her virtue would never be exposed to temptation, nor would evil thoughts enter her imagination.

The emperor Heuen-tsong not only cultivated literature and the fine arts, especially music, but he was fond of gaiety, and gave brilliant fêtes. One day he invited all the inhabitants of the capital to a grand entertainment, with concerts and interludes, at the "Lake of the Nine Dragons." As governor of Chang-gan, Wang-foo was charged with the necessary preparations for this festival, and he called to his assistance his daughter, and a female servant,—one of those young stage personages who in China are termed "perfumes of the plum-tree." Lew-mae, at first, demurred to the proposal; she alleged her youth, her timidity, her bashfulness; she had never yet quitted the female apartments, how could she encounter the gaze of men? "Be composed, my daughter," replied the governor; "you shall be accompanied by two respectable male servants." Lew-mae submitted, and next day set off, with her female companion, for the Lake of the Nine Dragons.

The principal personage of the comedy, Han-fae-king, now appears upon the scene. He is an intimate friend of the academician Ho-che-chang, and of Le-tae-pe. His reputation as a poet was prodigious; his poems circulated throughout the empire; he was, however, indifferent to fame and ambition, but a little too fond of wine. The administration of the Tangs was not more pure than that of the reigning dynasty; to obtain a distinguished place in the public examinations, the judges must be mollified by presents. Fae-king, therefore, gave himself no concern on this head, and he secured the degree of bachelor whilst he indulged in the two luxuries of making verses and of drinking. Hearing of the grand fête at the Lake of the Nine Dragons, he hurried thither, as usual, half-tipsy, and mingling with the throng, pressed towards the red cord which marked the spot where sat the emperor, the imperial concubines, the ministers and great dignitaries. Quitting this spot, he was making a circuit of the island in the lake, when he beheld in a carriage a damsel of extraordinary beauty. This was Lew-mae. They came upon each other suddenly, and both were smitten with "love at first sight." The maiden, ignorant of the world and new to these emotions, gazed upon Fae-king without reserve or discretion; her languishing looks revealed her whole heart; she longed to declare what she felt, at least to leave with the person who had thus fascinated her some token, some pledge of tenderness. What could she do? The carriage was hastening her away; she had no time for deliberation. Suddenly—almost mechanically—she removes her charmed necklace, wraps it in her handkerchief, and drops it from the carriage in Fae-king's sight. He picks up the gage, perceives the coins, and astonished, runs after the carriage. Panting for breath, he encounters his friend the academician Ho-che-chang, and the following dialogue ensues:—

"Ho-che-chang (to his servant). Is not that man who is running Han-fae-king?"

"Servant. It is, indeed.

"Ho-che. Quick, stop him.

"Serv. Han! Bachelor Han! Somebody wants you!

"Han-fae-king. I cannot stop; I have not time.

"Ho-che. Fae-king, your conduct is inexplicable. You left me whilst we were drinking together to come to this lake. What business have you here? The ladies in this place are daughters of the great. In your present condition,—for your gaiety is vinous,—I fear you will get into some trouble. Fae-king, you must not compromise the character of a poet. Come along with me, and let us have a few cups together.

"Fae-king. Brother, brother, don't talk to me of wine; if you could offer me nectar, or that juice which bestows immortality, I would not taste it. I have business of the greatest importance. (Sets off running.)

"Ho-che (holding him by his dress). Where are you running? What is this most important affair?

"Fae-king. I have beheld in this spot the most beautiful creature mortal eye ever saw. She must be Chang-go, descended from the palace of the moon, or some young goddess who has deserted the heavenly mansions. Her charms have ravished me; I am deep in love with her, and that she loves me I am certain. I heard her murmur these verses:—

Whilst throbs my heart, my ravished gaze
To one dear object ever strays.

"Ho-che. Stuff! stuff! my dear friend, these are mere words of the mouth—mere breath—which trusts such nonsense?

"Fae-king. Nay, nay; I have a pledge—oh, let me follow her. (He endeavours to get away, Ho-che-chang preventing him.)

"Ho-che. A pledge! what is it? Fae-king, treat me as a friend.

"Fae-king (repeating):—

Richer than bounteous friendship offers;
Richer than wealth in regal coffers.
Yet it is worthless in my eye,
For what I seek it will not buy.

"Ho-che. Oh, I can guess.

"Fae-king. Guess, then.

"Ho-che. A trinket box.

"Fae-king. No.

"Ho-che. What is it, then?

"Fae-king. My dear friend, I will not deceive you. She gave me fifty pieces of gold bearing the marks on the new money.

"Ho-che. What! fifty! of gold! Mercy on us! she must be, at the very least, the daughter of a minister of state. And you want to get acquainted with her? Take care, Han-fae-king; it is dangerous to play tricks with grandessees' daughters.

"Fae-king (singing):—

Though born of a duke, or a prince, or a king,
I care not, I'll follow her all the world over;
No palace nor harem shall keep out Fae-king,
Or hide that fair form from the eyes of her lover.

"Ho-che. He's mad; love has certainly turned his brain."

In the second act Han-fae-king is wandering about in search of his mistress's retreat; chance leads him to the country-house of governor Wang at the moment when Lew-mae crosses one of the apartments. He recognizes the "lady of the lake," and without hesitation enters the garden. A servant takes him at first for a thief, and attempts to arrest him. Fae-king, still half-tipsy, inquires whose house it is, and whilst the fuddled poet and the bewildered valet are in the midst of an animated colloquy, the governor suddenly makes his appearance, and interrogates Fae-king, whose replies perplex him:

"Wang-foo (to the servant). This man is either a libertine or a thief.

"Fae-king. What a speech is this to fall from the lips of a governor! Recollect yourself, Sir: a bachelor is no thief.

"Wang-foo. Tell me then, what business have you in my garden?

"Fae-king. Listen, good Sir. History informs us that many great men,—aye, great men,—have been thieves."

Han-fae-king then pours forth a stream of citations from historiographers and poets. He tells the governor, that Han-shaou, of the Tsin dynasty, stole some perfumes, whilst he was secretary to Koo-chung, and that the famous captain Han-sin, when pressed by hunger, robbed an old woman of a melon and some millet.

"Wang-foo. This man is half-drunk. It is wasting time to listen to him.—(To the servant.) Here, tie him with a rope to the wall; when the fumes of the wine have evaporated, I will interrogate him. (Exit governor.)"

Meanwhile, the academician Ho-che-chang is making anxious search for his friend, inquiring after him in the streets, and even knocking at doors. At length he discovers his whereabouts, and making his way into the governor's garden, he beholds Fae-king fastened like a monkey by a string to the wall. Vexed and mortified, he seeks the governor, and after the tedious forms of Chinese compliments and salutations, learns from him the adventure in the garden :—

"Ho-che. Do you know this man ?

"Wang-foo. Not at all.

"Ho-che. Yet the emperor has often spoken to you about him. He is no less than Han-tae-king, the famous poet, the friend and companion of Le-tae-pe.

"Wang-foo (astonished). Han-fae-king !

"Ho-che. Yes.

"Wang-foo (to the attendant). Set him at liberty, and let him come hither."

A reconciliation ensues between the governor and Fae-king. The former, in some confusion, overwhelms the poet with excuses and civilities. Fae-king, on the other hand, confesses that he had imbibed too freely, and declares that he was totally ignorant of what had happened. A thought struck the governor; he would entertain the bachelor on his establishment; he would make him preceptor of his son, and they might themselves philosophize together. Fae-king embraces with delight an offer of which the governor did not foresee the risk; he retires, makes the requisite preparations, and is installed in the palace of the father of his mistress.

The third act opens with a conversation between Fae-king's two pupils, Wang-ching, the governor's son, and Ma-keao, the son of a mandarin. Both are dull scholars, who scarcely know the Pih-keo-sing, or "Table of Proper Names," and the Mung-keao, an elementary book. The dialogue of these youths, only fifteen years of age, furnishes a sad, but probably true, picture of Chinese manners; it abounds with the most indelicate and licentious expressions. They both complain of their master, who, by their account, teaches them nothing, but is constantly sighing "seow-tseay !" "Sweet girl! sweet girl!"

In short, Fae-king, debarred from the sight of his mistress, feels wretched in the palace. The most delicate attentions are lavished upon him in vain; he cannot eat, he cannot sleep. Sometimes his griefs break out in impassioned strains, expressed in the pedantic diction so much admired by Chinese critics in erotic poetry. In one of these fits of ecstasy, whilst he was obteasing heaven and earth and the spirits of both, a servant abruptly enters the library, announcing the governor. Fae-king, in his hurry, conceals the string of gold coins, the "gage of love," which he had been contemplating, in the cover of a book :—

"Wang-foo. Bachelor, I have been long intending you a visit, but business has prevented me. Do not now refuse me your company.

"Fae-king. Your excellency is too good.

"Wang-foo. You know how generous the emperor is. Only think, this morning, the Son of Heaven, pleased with the report I sent to him, has presented me with ten flaggons of wine. I do not love to drink alone: favour me with your company, bachelor. (To the servant.) Bring the wine.

"Fae-king. I am highly obliged.

"Wang-foo. Drink this cup, Fae-king.

"Fae-king. Your excellency is most kind. Has my small merit—

"Wang-foo. Drink, drink !

"Fae-king (drinking). This wine is delicious—it is from the Leang-chow grape.

"Wang-foo. Drink again; wine banishes sadness and sorrow.

"Fae-king. Who told you I was sad ?

"Wang-foo. Oh, I knew it well; you are thinking of your native land.

"Fae-king. Not exactly so.

"Wang-foo. What have you been doing these few days past ?

"Fae-king. I have been reading the E-King.

"Wang-foo. Very well; we'll read it together. (Opens the E-King, and finds the gold coin: Han-fae-king is petrified with dread.)"

All is now revealed. To the interrogations of the irritated governor, the amorous poet replies equivocally. The former, perceiving there was a mystery in the affair, follows up his inquiry, until the truth comes out. Exasperated at the discovery, Wang-foo sends for his daughter, loads her with reproaches, and, after venting his rage upon the poet, remands him to the wall.

It turns out, however,—a circumstance of which the governor was not aware,—that the position of Han-fan-king was changed. The elegance of his compositions had attracted the notice and favour of the emperor.

The last act commences with a monologue of Le-tae-pe, who having been privately informed of the misadventure of his friend, memorialized the emperor, and his majesty entered warmly into the cause of Fae-king. "It is my will," said he to Le-tae-pe, "that the union of the poet with the daughter of Wang-foo should take place, and that immediately, and I desire you personally to superintend the ceremony." Le-tae-pe arrives at the governor's palace; the stubborn Wang-foo at first refuses his consent, but the imperial will overrules a parent's, and the two lovers are, in the approved phraseology, made happy.

TO THE EDITOR.

Sir,—In your last number, under the head of "Literature and Science," I observe a notice that Professor N. L. Westergaard, of Copenhagen, is preparing for the press a work in three volumes, to exhibit the texts of the Zend writings of the Parsees, the third volume being dedicated to an English translation of these books.

I meddle not with the taste that would place before the public, in a popular language, the contents of one of them,—the Vendidad; it is enough for me that I have been able to examine an analysis of the twenty-two fargards of that book, as they appear in the sixth chapter of Dr. Wilson's Parsi Religion; and that examination has satisfied me that we can well spare a recital, in extenso, of such a mass of incredible absurdity, folly, and filth, as is there made to issue from the mouths of Hormuzd and Zoroaster. The doctor, in a note at p. 311, says, "The Parsis have got such a horrid idea from their books of the water of the firmament, that, after expressing it in Greek, I have felt compelled to withdraw what I had written from notice."

There are some who seem inclined to censure Sir William Jones for the severity displayed in his celebrated letter to Anquetil du Perron. Considering the provocation given, this cutting exposure of the ignorance, vanity, and malice of the boasting Frenchman appears scarcely unmerited. At pp. 325—329, Dr. Wilson has reproduced the description of the Dog, as given by Sir William Jones. I refer to it for the purpose of quoting, in the original French, the amusing apostrophe which, from prudery, a little over-strained, has somewhat suffered in the doctor's translation: "Ormuzd, grand Ormuzd, principe de tous biens parmi les Guebres, si tu as dicté cette chienne de description à Zoroaster, je ne te fais pas iescht; tu n'es qu'un sot génie!" This may remind us of the dedication, "A —, chienne de ma sœur," changed into "A —, ma chienne de sœur."

As to Zoroaster, his country, identity, and the epoch of his life, the Parsees at Bombay will, probably, continue to amuse themselves in disputations more or less energetic; but the fact is, as all history shows, the Greek authorities, who have professed to write the history of this personage, knew just as much about him as the Parsees or others of the present day do,—that is, absolutely nothing.

So much for the value of the book, taken as a declared revelation of Divine Intelligence. And with regard to the Zend having been spoken by any people, at any time, and deserving to be placed among the real distinctive languages of the world, I have found nothing in later writers to shake the opinions on this subject held by Sir William Jones, Richardson, and Vans Kennedy.

RASTI-PASAND.

The following instance of superstitious barbarity in Mewar is reported in a Bombay paper. A sepoy, of the Klierwarra Bheel Corps, being taken ill, was declared by a wise man in the village to have been bewitched by a reputed Dakun, a witch who is supposed to make a feast of her victim's liver. Upon this she was seized, and her eyes being rubbed and bandaged with chillies, she was tied up by her heels. In this horrible position she was swung from four in the morning till sunset, when she was released. The same treatment was continued on the succeeding day, varying her punishment by suspending her only from 8 A.M. till 4 in the afternoon, when she was once more let down for the night. The third day she was again led to the tree, and rescued by the medical officer belonging to the detachment.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

TUESDAY, June 3, 1851.

THE adventures of the "Mountain of Light" promise to rival in interest those of the "Glass Slipper" and other tales which form the library of the nursery. Transferred, through a long series of years, by prince to prince, from the semi-fabulous dynasty of the Pandus to the Mogul conquerors of India; added by Shah Jehan to the glittering wonders of the celebrated Peacock Throne; taken thence by Nadir Shah to Persia; carried to Afghanistan by Ahmed Shah; extorted from his successor, Shah Shooja, by Runjeet Sing; and surrendered by the last maharaja of the Sikhs to his British conquerors, it now forms one of the most conspicuous objects in an Exhibition which attracts the curiosity of the world. This is not all; it became, on Monday, the 26th May, part of the text of a homily delivered by a late Governor-General of India in the House of Lords.

The Earl of Ellenborough upon that occasion directly mooted the question, to whom the Lahore jewels, including the Koh-i-Noor,—valued at two millions sterling,—legally belonged? He contended that these jewels and other Sikh spoils were property, taken as prize from the enemy, which belonged to the Crown, and that the East-India Company, consequently the Governor-General of India, had no legal right to dispose of or deal with such property, they being precluded from granting booty captured from an enemy where royal troops co-operated in its capture. A portion of the property was, he said, seized at Lahore before the actual commencement of hostilities, though after the Sikh state had been considered by the Governor-General in Council as "directly at war with the British Government;" a great proportion, however, was captured during the progress of hostilities; whereas, by the treaty of March, 1849, all property of the state of Lahore, of whatever description and wherever found, was declared to be confiscated to the East-India Company. This disposal of the booty, Lord Ellenborough insisted, was repugnant to the law; and if this position were true, it followed as a corollary that the condition attached by the Company to the grant of six months' batta,—namely, that it should be deducted from the grantees' shares of prize-money,—became invalid and inoperative. Although his lordship argued the point in the interest of the Crown, he virtually advocated the interests of the army, which would, he said, have received a larger sum of money by a distribution of the booty by the Crown amongst the captors.

The counter-case maintained by Lord Broughton was this:—No injury, he said, had resulted to the army by the grant of batta, the amount of which was at least as great as that which it would have received supposing the booty of war had been granted to it. Since the year 1849, no complaint had reached the authorities in India, either at home or abroad, from soldier or from civilian; and the rights of the Crown could not have been considered to be invaded, or its advisers would not have been silent or inactive. He added that the question, "Whether the arrangement of the 29th of March, 1849, concluded by Lord Dalhousie with Maharaja Duleep Sing, and ratified by the home authorities, could be impugned on any legal ground?" had been formally put by the Government to the Queen's Advocate, the Attorney and Solicitor General, Sir F. Thesiger, Sir F. Kelly, and Mr. Wigram, and their unanimous answer was that "it cannot be impugned."

The Lord Chancellor laid it down, as the law of the case, that the jewels and other property in question, placed in the citadel, under the guard of a force of the Company's troops, for protection, not seized hostilely or in anticipation of hostilities, could not be affected by a subsequent declaration of war; that such property did not belong to the Crown, and consequently the army were not entitled to have it awarded as booty. "It seemed to him," he said, "that there was no ground whatever for supposing that injustice had been done to the army, for that property never belonged to the Crown, nor had the Crown any right which could give the army a claim to booty."

It appears to us that all this display of legal knowledge and ingenuity might have been spared, and that, as the real point at issue was whether the army had been fairly treated in the matter, the essential fact to be established was one only incidentally mentioned in the discussion, namely, whether the six months' batta equalled the amount which the army would have received by the distribution of the property as booty. If the batta be, as Lord Broughton alleged, "at least" as much as the booty, the question which of two almost co-ordinate authorities should be the medium of distribution was hardly worth mooted; if not, no mere distinction of law, as to whether the property came to the Crown directly, or indirectly through its trustees,—which is all the difference,—should be allowed to defeat the equitable claim of the army.

Another question arose incidentally out of this discussion, namely, what is the true character of the Governor-General of India,—whether he is purely a servant of the Company, or a servant of the Crown? The Duke of Wellington considered that that great officer, though appointed by the Court of Directors of the East-India Company, is the representative of all British authority in India, and that he exercises legally every British authority in India, including that of the Crown, which may subsequently annul or confirm that assumed authority. Lord Broughton said, the East-India Company were trustees for the Crown; the Governor-General was the servant of trustees of the Crown, and therefore was the servant of the Crown. This doctrine, which would have been a palatable one to Lord Ellenborough a few years since, was inimical to his present argument, and he deprecated its further discussion, as "touching upon dangerous ground."

In the absence of any Parliamentary inquiry into East-Indian affairs prior to the termination of the Act of 1833, casual investigations of isolated points like this are not without advantage: they direct attention to the difficult or ambiguous parts of the great question, indicate the information which is needed, and exercise the talents that will be called into action.

THE result of the debate in the House of Commons upon the Ceylon question has probably disappointed all parties. The rejection of a vote of censure upon Lord Torrington and the ministry by a majority of 80 out of 484 members affords them but an imperfect absolution, whilst it is a rather mortifying rebuff to the supporters of the motion, who, at one time, were suffered to hold the fate of the government suspended upon its issue. The debate itself, moreover, although the subject abounded with materials for a display of eloquence in all its phases, was, with few exceptions, remarkable for its penury of power and animation. If we except the really argumentative speech of Sir James Hogg, the pathetic appeal of Mr. Gladstone, and the clever, sparkling, and sarcastic rillery of Mr. Disraeli, the rest was flat and dull, made up of tedious details respecting the acts of subordinate agents, with which Lord Torrington had but little connection; general attacks upon the characters of witnesses examined before the committee, and not very seemly mutual animadversions by members of that committee, who appear to have resembled in some degree the members of the services in Ceylon, all at cross-purposes with each other.

As we have reviewed this subject, which is one, in many respects, of great importance, in a preceding Mail,* we shall not re-enter into its details. The chief point sought to be established by Mr. Baillie and the supporters of his resolutions, is that "the punishments inflicted during the disturbances in the island were excessive and uncalled for;" and if this allegation were made out, it would follow that the conduct of Lord Torrington, and still more that of Earl Grey, who has approved of his proceedings, are censurable.

As we before observed, we are now judging after the event. Lord Torrington had to deal with a rebellion,—for it is ridiculous to quibble about names, and insist pertinaciously upon the terms "outbreak," and "disturbance,"—of the extent of which he was ignorant, though he knew that the head-men and priests, the influential classes amongst the natives, were disaffected, and that the police of the country was in the hands of the head-men. Vigour and promptitude were the essential qualities in a governor of Ceylon at such a crisis; and Lord Torrington was prompt and vigorous in his measures, which were necessarily carried into effect by local agents, who may probably have exceeded his intentions. But the rebellion,—contrary to the example of all preceding rebellions, which in every other respect it resembled,—was crushed in a few days; its instantaneous extinction is perversely made the ground of an accusation against the late governor, as if, when an insurrection is suppressed, the latent causes of which may be still slumbering, nothing more is to be thought about it, just as when a mob is dispersed the police quietly put their truncheons in their pockets, and saunter about the streets as before. It was incumbent upon Lord Torrington, in order to inspire salutary terror, and by way of example, to make a display of force, and exact penalties from the guilty. The industry of his accusers, stimulated by extraordinary zeal, has discovered that the capital punishments did not exceed eighteen, and that the whole number of persons punished in any form was not 140, as Mr. Baillie alleged, but 64! We acknowledge that "to determine when the span of human existence shall close," is "a high and awful prerogative;" but we think Mr. Gladstone did not sufficiently bear in mind that men clothed with supreme authority have sometimes to determine another question,—whether the timely sacrifice of a few lives may not ultimately save many. The late ex-king of France is reproached for his excess of humanity, in forbidding a manifestation of military force, which, at the expense of a little bloodshed, would have spared Paris the horrors which accompanied the revolution of February, 1848. Colonel Forbes, formerly government agent at Matelle, who has written a pamphlet against the "Military Executions in Ceylon," in which he endeavours to show that the "so-called military law and military executions" are not justified by anything contained in the Blue Book of 1849, speaking of the rebellion of 1817, observes, "it is probable that greater severity at the commencement of this insurrection might have eventually proved more humane in the end;" guarding himself, it is true, "against being supposed to admit or believe that severity, if it were advisable in 1817, was defensible in 1848." The observation, however, is important, and if a comparison were made between the results of the two occurrences, the energy of Lord Torrington would not appear to disadvantage, in a humane point of view, beside the "amiable policy" of Sir Robert Brownrigg.

Much as we may lament the exposures to which this remarkable inquiry has given birth, there is still much in its incidents from whence good may result. It will operate beneficially upon colonial governments, which are too prone to make an injudicious use of their delegated power, and the strong concentrated light which it has cast upon the condition of Ceylon, upon the faults of its administration, and above all upon the government offices of the colony,—which Mr. Roebuck described as "a hotbed of insubordination, discontent, and intrigue,"—cannot but produce salutary effects.

Folks who claim credit for the possession of knowledge upon the subject, constantly assert that the results of Indian tillage are vastly inferior to those of the scientific culture of the soil at home. A member of the Sudder Board of Revenue at Agra, in the Meerut Magazine, has proved beyond all doubt, that the produce of an English and an Indian acre of wheat are nearly equal in weight, the balance being on the side of the latter.

The Rev. William Keane, M.A., head master of Bishop Corrie's grammar school and minister of Trinity Chapel, at Madras, has published a pamphlet on Romanism and Hindooism, in which he traces a strong affinity between the two forms of religion. Many Roman Catholics would be startled on reading Mr. Keane's pamphlet to find how many of these ceremonies are identical with those of the Hindoos.

The Overland Colombo Observer says:—"Our pigeon expresses continue perfectly successful, placing us in possession of a summary of the intelligence (by the mail from Europe) twelve hours at least in advance of the Government express."

There are in Ceylon two Roman Catholic bishops and a coadjutor bishop; sixteen priests, nearly all European, in the northern division of the island, and eighteen priests (three from Europe and the rest from Goa) in the south: total, three bishops and thirty-two priests. Their adherents they number at 150,000, or one-tenth of the population.

Many men of the cultivating classes in the Punjab are conversant with Persian, and even artizans, such as blacksmiths and carpenters, are known to be able to read it with tolerable fluency. This may be attributed, probably, to the number of Mohamedans among the population, and to the fact that they are generally more advanced than the Hindoos.

INDIA AT THE GREAT EXHIBITION.

The contributions of India to the Great Exhibition of the World's Industry are now complete, and by the time this paper is in the hands of our readers, every object will have found suitable deposit. The whole of the arrangements are under the superintendence of the learned and accomplished Dr. J. Forbes Royle, who has rendered a most interesting and acceptable service to the visitors of the collection by the skill and lucidity with which the vast and wonderful productions of India and the Indian Archipelago have been distributed.

With a commendable deference to her importance as the most magnificent territorial appendage of the British Crown, and the most liberal of contributors to the "World's Fair," the commissioners have assigned to India the most striking and prominent position in the whole of the Crystal Palace. It greets the multitude almost at the very threshold of their visit. As they enter at the grand southern portal, the first thing which arrests their wondering gaze is of course the glorious crystal fountain of the Messrs. Osler, gushing forth pellucid waters which cool the surrounding atmosphere, and imparting additional glitter and variety to the prisms of the graceful structure. The delicious contrast of the silvery jets with the green of the venerable elm and flourishing palms which form, as it were, the background to the fountain, next arrests attention; and turning from this to the crimson hangings upon the left, another and more powerful variety of colour is presented. Around and above him the stranger hears the hum of voices,—the exclamations of delight rising above the general murmur,—the music of powerful and finely-toned organs,—the tinkling of pianos, the distant clanking of machinery, and the gushing of waters; figures, gay and graceful, flit past him,—marvellous specimens of aristocratic beauty flash before his sight,—but he is insensible to all! he has come to see the "Exhibition," and to its leading features his view is alone directed. INDIA—in white letters upon a scarlet ground—at once invites him, and to her stores he accordingly hies; and if he happen to have passed any portion of his life in the East, a glow of honest pride suffuses his cheek, for he cannot help thinking that he has a claim to part of the merit of the collection: at all events, he feels that there is no reason to be ashamed of the country for which he is indebted for happy and useful years. Englishmen, when in India, exercise upon a grand scale the privilege of grumbling; they abuse India, protest against the climate, the habits of the people, the monotony of existence, and so on, sacking the rupees the while. The instant they return home, and have gone the round of London attractions, they begin to look back upon the country with regret, sighing for the occupation, the independence, and the ease they enjoyed, and greeting every old QUR HYE or Mull friend as a welcome companion in misery who can ungrudgingly both receive and yield sympathy. Hear them descant on the superiority of their curries—their pickles—the cordiality of society—the delights of palanquin travelling—the charms of tiger-hunting—the inestimable virtues of iced loll shraub!—you would fancy they were Swiss, mourning their absence from fader-land. The sight of a turbaned sweeper at the corner of a street brings the respectable vernacular to their lips in a moment; and tazu bu tazu, indifferently played at a paucorama, moves them as strongly as the Rans des vaches affects the expatriated Helvetian. But all this works well for the Great Exhibition. People so influenced rush immediately to the depository of the works of India, and in their excusable enthusiasm, not merely gaze upon the beautiful collection of old acquaintances, but devote their time and their tongues to a careful explanation of their purposes to the multitude of visitors who are "perplexed in the extreme" to discover the meaning and uses of nine-tenths of the commodities. And, sooth to say, the occasion for their oratory is ample—is magnificent; there is material before them for a thousand illustrated lectures—food for a year of conversation, and a life of philosophical reflection. Every item is suggestive; the offsprings of nature and the productions of art are equally pregnant with material for observation.

Foremost among the mineral treasures of the East—brightest among the bright—is the far-famed Koh-i-Noor, or "Mountain of Light," a gem which has, in its time, gluttled the avarice of Afghan monarchs, and excited the cupidity of the rare old Lion of the Punjab, Runjeet Sing. Twelve years ago, Runjeet Sing, then in the zenith of his fame, exhibited the priceless jewel to his guests, the Earl of Auckland, then Governor-General of India, and his sisters, upon their visit to Ferozepore. With what nervous anxiety the old Seikh chieftain rolled his solitary eye as Sir Claudius Wade, the hostage for the safety of the Koh-i-Noor, exhibited it to the principal members of the viceroy's suite! The darkness of the reception-tent was illuminated by the brilliant crystal, and as it passed from hand to hand, the story was repeated of the trickery, and the violence, and the falsehood employed by the Seikh to wrest it from Shah Soojah—the very monarch to whose restoration, under British auspices, Runjeet was then contributing. What mighty events have occurred since that moment! Did the Koh-i-Noor enclose within its impenetrable bosom the spirit of one of those princes of the Arabian Nights whose humanity was liable to metamorphosis, what stories might it not tell of all the scenes it has witnessed, from the loopholes of its retreat, from the hour when the mighty monocular deposited it with his treasures, to that which saw the Punjab transferred from the feeble hands of Dhuleep Sing to the custody of Lord Dalhousie! And now this dazzling bauble, so coveted of the Oriental princes, reposes in a brass cage, in a glass palace, in London, the cynosure of thousands of the curious of all nations—the admiration of the lapidary—the wonder of the artisan—the delight of the fair and the beautiful of England, and France, and Austria, of Spain, Portugal, and Italy. But if the truth must be told, the arrangements made for the exhibition of the Koh-i-Noor are not of the best. The cage, though large, is not sufficiently elevated to enable persons at a little distance to command a view of the gem. People crowd around it, and bending over their heads and shoulders, conceal the object from those who stand behind them. For the safe custody of the diamond, however, the depository is well contrived. The Builder thus describes it:—

"The safe for the Koh-i-Noor—the mountain of light—which has been contrived by Mr. Chubb, consists, first, of an octagon table 6 ft. 6 in. in diameter by 3 ft. 4 in. high, the top and sides being made of $\frac{3}{4}$ in. wrought-iron plates, all secured together by being rebated and with angle iron. In the interior is a fireproof safe 12 in. square, and 2 ft. 9 in. deep, the wrought plates being 1 in. thick. In the centre of the safe is a platform 9 in. square, on which the velvet cushion, jewels, and setting are fixed. A hole is cut out of the table to allow the platform to descend into the safe. In order to secure the diamonds at night, a small door, 3-in square, in one of the panels of the table, is unlocked, and by turning a winch the platform gradually sinks into the safe, and a sliding iron door is drawn over the opening at the top. The cage is secured to the table by J pieces at the bottom ring dropping into corresponding holes, and these are locked by two separate detective locks; the keys of these locks are held by the crown officers; and without them access to the jewels cannot be had. The key of the small door allows the platform to be raised or lowered only, but does not give access to the jewels. The weight of the whole is 36 cwt., and it is bolted to the floor. A consideration of this piece of charcoal-in-another-form, and its assumed value, induces reflections on what constitutes worth in the eyes of the world."

Turning from the "Mountain of Light," and glancing at a beautiful collection of arms, comprehending shields, tulwars of incredible temper, bows, arrows, lances, daggers, staves, curious matchlocks, and formidable zambours or camel-swivels, the attention is drawn to a tent, lined with rich shawl-cloth, and hung with embroidered velvets and massive brocades. To this the crowds repair. It is one of the lions of the place; for, rich as the collection is in the gross, and dazzling in the ensemble, there are still some objects which the acute multitude are quick to distinguish as peculiarly worthy of their inspection. The hangings and carpetings of the tent serve, by their splendour, to confirm the impressions of Oriental magnificence created by the Koh-i-Noor.

We are not now attempting a minute description of the Indian collection in the Great Exhibition. It is intended, in this article, simply to glance at the chief items of interest, reserving for a future number a more minute detail of the princely contributions, for which England is indebted to the East-India Company. We pass, therefore, without respect to order, to the charming collection of Dacca muslins, arranged in glass cases, in one of the inner compartments. So exquisitely soft and beautiful are these fabrics, that upon their first display on the 21st ultimo, they excited the special wonder and admiration of Her Majesty and Prince Albert. There is one plain gown-piece in the centre of the collection, ten yards in length and one yard and ten inches in breadth, of so delicate a texture that it may be passed through the smallest ring. The Queen, with her intuitive perception of the graceful, expressed her surprise that, with such opportunities of suitable personal decoration, English ladies should persevere in disfiguring themselves with the stiff material which now goes to the construction of dresses. Consorting with the plain, are specimens of figured and embroidered muslin, the embroidery consisting of gold thread and the beetle's emerald wing ingeniously and fancifully intertwined.

Re-crossing the western nave, and passing to the left of the tent aforesaid, we come upon innumerable models, in clay, and wood, and ivory, and marble, of every imaginable subject. The chief of these is a happy imitation of the Encampment of a Collector of revenue, out in the districts, receiving appeals against the assessment. It has been transmitted by Mr. Mansfield, of the Bombay civil service. The encampment is in a sort of grove of mango, tamarind, and peepul trees, bounded on one side by a pagoda and choultry, before which runs a stream of water; on the opposite side by a field of India corn; and on the third by a hedge of cacti. The collector's tent is surrounded by petitioners, whose importunity the brijobassies have some difficulty in restraining. Grouped about the grove are travellers, servants, guards of sepundies, peons, musicians, snake-charmers, dhobies, beggars, fakirs,—camels, elephants, horses, baggage-carts,—in short, every variety of a moving Indian scene. The figures are well executed, and placed in characteristic attitudes, and if a little more care had been taken in the packing, the animated scene would have been perfect. Near this exceedingly interesting model is one of a Cutcherry—the figures 9 inches in height. The huzoor is not very remarkable for the elegance of his black coat, nor the omlah for the purity of their white garments,—but the bench, the dock, the railings, the positions of the prisoner and the witnesses, with clasped hands, the former apparently exclaiming "Hum kya kurrega?" and the other as vehemently vociferating "Hum nay junta, khodavund,"—the court burkundazes and the other and superior officers are all capitally executed.

The Cutcherry is in the vicinity of a rude model of a Churruck Pooja, which affords the visitor a peculiarly fine opportunity of observing how the hooks are passed through the fleshy parts of the backs of the sunnyassees. Away from this, near the western entrance to the Indian department, is a model of a silk farm, the silk itself being the bona fide produce of the cocoons plucked in India. This piece of work is a melancholy illustration of the wretchedly careless packing of the natives. All the clay figures are delapidated, and lie about the compound of the factory in piteous attitudes, with amputated legs and arms; but the machinery is perfect, and sufficiently elucidatory of the system of silk spinning in the Mofussil.

After lingering for some time among minor models and such works of art as marble sofas (which, by the way, the Queen has accepted for the garden decorations of Osborne), ivory chairs, presented by the Rajah of Vizianagram, carved ebony book-cases, a royal bedstead, from Baboo Debnarain Sing, of Benares, punkalis, kuss kuss baskets and boxes, silks, brocades, toys, bangles and decorations of all sorts, we pass to the productions of the Indian Archipelago. Here are numerous vessels, of every form of hull, and every variety of mast and sail. The lateens of canvas and of matting peculiar to the prahus contrast with the square sails of the dhony, the buggalah, and the pansway; then there are junks and dhows, pattamars and feluccas,—in fact, a complete dry dock of Indian craft. The mineralogy of Borneo next invites attention,—but, oh, sacrilege!—the little box which did contain the gold dust of Sarawak, and which was to act as the stimulating sample to all enterprising Englishmen disposed to take a trip to the diggings, is empty! Great was the consternation of Dr. Royle and his assistants when, upon opening the collection, it was found that advantage had been taken by the packers of the information contained in the inventory, and the little box rifled of its contents. It is to be hoped that Rajah Brooke, whose arrival we lately noticed, will be enabled to supply the deficiency from his own private stores, and give us some idea of the value of the dust. Who knows but that there may be another California in the great island of the Eastern Archipelago?

Last, but not least, in importance and interest, are the products of the animal and vegetable world of India. Here we have most ample illustrations of the truth of Dr. Royle's remark, in his Report to Messrs. Cole and Fuller, that India is "capable of producing within its own limits almost all the useful products of every other quarter of the globe." On one side are chests of tea equalling in fragrance and flavour the popular produce of China: they contain the plant grown on the hills near Seharunpore—a plant which, with the proper application of European capital, may be cultivated to an almost unlimited extent. Mr. Fortune has, we observe, recently left China for Calcutta with so large a quantity and great a variety of plants selected in the green-tea districts for transportation to India, that "its cultivation in the north-western provinces will be a matter of mere manual labour," and tea become in a few years a regular article of export from India. Thus we may become independent of the Celestials, whose tyranny and caprice have of late years rendered trade with them precarious. In another compartment of the vegetable collection is a quantity of tallow, the produce of a tree in the forests of Canara, illimitable in its quantity and valuable in its quality. The Russian visitors to the Exhibition stared at this proof of the possibility of England's doing without them. Still more was their wonder raised and vexation stimulated when they beheld quantities of isinglass from the Polynemus plebens—a fish of the Ganges—purified by Dr. McClelland. In short, the collection, in every department of the animal, vegetable, and mineral world, is so rich and varied, that, to render it even a small measure of common justice, we must postpone, until our next, a more precise account of the principal objects particularly worthy of the attention of visitors, and exemplificatory of the immense value of our glorious Eastern empire.

Some curious relics of a former age—small copper images and coins—have been discovered in the cuttings of the Bombay railway, near Sion, where an old burying-place is traversed. They are intended to be presented to the Asiatic Society.

The travelling on the great roads in Van Diemen's Land is excellent; stage coaches, as good as those of England, go from Launceston to Hobart, 120 miles, both day and night, and the inns are remarkably good.

ROMANCE IN REAL LIFE.

A case decided by Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, on the 27th May, is, in its circumstances, stranger than fiction. A Mr. Charles Hutchins, son of a gentleman in Sussex, and educated at Oxford, enlisted in the service of the East-India Company, and went to India in 1818. He procured his discharge in about a year, became head-master of a grammar school in Calcutta, and in 1820 married Miss Ann White, daughter of Mr. John White, a shipbuilder at Chittagong. Of this marriage four children were the issue, the plaintiff, Mr. R. H. C. Hutchins, and two other sons and a daughter, the latter of whom died before the age of 21. In 1827, Mr. Charles Hutchins removed with his family from Calcutta to Chittagong, and resided with his father-in-law, Mr. White. From this place he went to Vizagapatam, and died of cholera about August, 1828, his wife having just previously died. The four children remained with their grandfather, Mr. White, and were taken by him, together with his own young children, the issue of a second marriage (two girls and one boy), to Calcutta, whither he removed. Under the will of a maternal great uncle, Mr. Charles Hutchins, if he survived his mother, would have been entitled to a sum of money, produced by the sale of landed property, and a share of personal estate; but he having died in her lifetime, such of his children who should attain 21 were, under the same will, entitled to the money in equal shares. The brothers of Mr. Charles Hutchins were, the Rev. J. Hutchins, the Rev. G. Hutchins, Mr. T. Hutchins, since deceased; and he had two sisters, Miss Sophia Hutchins, since deceased, and Miss Lucy Hutchins, all of whom survived their mother, and two other brothers who died in her lifetime. The estate was sold, and produced, with the personal estate of the testator, a sum, to one-sixth of which (2,184*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.*) Mr. Charles Hutchins's children who should live to attain the age of 21 became entitled on the death of their grandmother. To the fund which represented this money, the plaintiff, in June, 1844, on the death of the last of his brothers and sister under age, became absolutely entitled, and in this suit the same was transferred into court, having been handed over by the trustee of the will to the two uncles. After the death of Mr. Charles Hutchins, Mr. White, in December, 1831, at the desire of the Rev. J. Hutchins, sent the four children to England, who were received by their uncles and aunts. It appears that the eldest son, Charles, had been called "Johnny" while in India, in compliment to his grandfather, or from the word "Jan" being used by his native nurse as a term of endearment; and that the master of the school at Calcutta gave him a book before his embarkation to England with the name "John Hutchins" written in it; and that Mr. White's son by his second marriage was named John, but his death was proved. It also appears that the mother of Mrs. Charles Hutchins, the first wife of Mr. White, was a native of Chittagong, and of extremely dark complexion. Mr. Charles Hutchins had described his eldest child as of light complexion, and Mr. White had in his letters described the whole of the four children as of fair complexion and light hair. For a short time after the arrival of the family, the children were treated as the issue of Mr. Charles Hutchins; but from a statement made by the eldest boy, that "his sister was killed by a lion;" a statement by the girl, that her name was White, and that George and another of the boys were her brothers, and the colour of the children denoting "Chee-chee" extraction, the uncles and aunts came to the conclusion that the children sent to England were not their nephews and nieces, but were the children, or that all but the plaintiff were the children, of Mr. White. The three children, however, of Mr. White, were two girls and a boy, and not two boys and a girl; and the fact of Mrs. Charles Hutchins being the daughter of a native of Chittagong would account for the tinge of complexion in her children. Acting under the impression of a substitution of other children in the place of those of Charles Hutchins, the Rev. J. Hutchins addressed a letter to Mr. White, dated November, 1832, in which he said,—

"The ways of Providence are inscrutable, and in an extraordinary manner have confirmed the suspicions which, from the appearance of the children, we entertained, of the most iniquitous fraud which you have practised against our generosity and paternal affection. I advise you seriously and earnestly to apply to the throne of grace, that God will in his mercy be pleased to soften your heart, that you may feel how devoid of natural affection has been your conduct towards your deceased daughter, Mrs. Hutchins, and her children, and that he may give you such a penitent heart as the Father and special Guardian of orphans can accept for the heinousness of such an atrocious sin."

After this, two of the sons, who had resided with the Rev. G. Hutchins, at Compton, in Berkshire, and the daughter, who (with the plaintiff) lived with the Rev. J. Hutchins, at Rottingdean, were sent back to Calcutta, the plaintiff being kept in England, and for many years believed by his friends in India to be recognized by his uncles and aunts as the real son of their brother Charles. The plaintiff was placed at school under the fictitious name of Warner, and subsequently received from the two clergymen sums of 6*s.* a week and 8*s.* a week until the commencement of the litigation, when it totally ceased, and he became an inmate of the workhouse at Brighton, and is a cripple, from alleged neglect in childhood. In 1832 and 1833, a Mr. Canham, a cousin of Mr. Charles Hutchins, made endeavours to prove to the uncles the groundlessness of their suspicions. In 1842, the Rev. Mr. Morton, at their instigation, made inquiries at Calcutta, and in a letter, dated in December in that year, told them that no proof was wanting of the truth of their parentage, giving a full detail of all the evidence on which that opinion was grounded, and concluding, "I really and honestly think the matter is free from reasonable doubt." Every exertion was made before this to convince the uncles, and in 1832 a commission was appointed by the Governor-General of India and the Bishop of Calcutta to examine the matter and to report on the evidence; and the commissioners, in their report, stated that they were decidedly of opinion that no fraud had been practised, and that the children were the real children of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Hutchins. They stated that no reliance could be placed on the statements made by the children, and that the story about the lion arose from a foolish practice of Indian servants frightening children by threats about the carved lions placed at Mr. White's gates at Calcutta; and they stated their opinion, that as to the identity of the children, the uncles had been labouring under some unaccountable delusion. In this report, the three children of Mr. White were described as being very dark, with black hair and eyes, while the three children of Mr. Charles Hutchins, who were examined by the commissioners, were declared to be of fair complexion and light hair. All means having failed of convincing the uncles that the plaintiff was the true son of Charles Hutchins; and being in entire ignorance of the evidence given in favour of his birth both in 1833 and 1842, and being reduced to the state of a pauper chargeable to the parish of Brighton, the suit was instituted by him against the Rev. J. Hutchins and the Rev. G. Hutchins, the uncles, and who were, by a deed dated in 1830, the trustees of the fund before mentioned for the benefit of Charles Hutchins's children who should attain 21 (the plaintiff being the only child who did attain that age), and against two other persons, praying a decree for the full sum and for interest from 1830, and that the first-named two defendants might pay all the costs of the suit. The defence made by the Rev. J. and the Rev. G. Hutchins was, that soon after the arrival of the children, the family had suspicions; but in August, 1832, Miss Sophia Hutchins was told by the girl that "Martha Hutchins was killed by a wild beast in India;" and upon being asked how she could be Martha Hutchins if Martha Hutchins was killed, she threw her arms round Miss Sophia's neck, and said, "I am Ann White; the dark boy (Charles) is my brother, John White; the little boy is my brother, but the white boy (the plaintiff) is not my brother;" and added, "Pray, do not send me back." That on the plaintiff being asked questions, he said that Charles was John White, and the girl was Ann White. That on Charles being questioned, he said he was John White. That all the brothers and sisters of Charles Hutchins being satisfied that three of the children were supposititious, they determined on sending them back to India; but believing at that time that the plaintiff was a true child of their brother, they retained him. That Miss Sophia Hutchins, in December, 1832, examined the plaintiff in his catechism, and on being asked his name, for a time he refused to answer, but afterwards said the name he went by was not his real name, and refused to say more. That a few days after he admitted his name to be "Warner." That the plaintiff, until 1836, was called by that name, but in that year, being asked his name by one Mr. Homes, he said his name was Hutchins, and subsequently gave as a reason for so doing that, if he had not, he "was afraid he should be sent back to India." They denied that the weekly payments were made on account of any income due to the plaintiff, but as loans to him, and to save him from going to the parish; and they said that, ever since the end of 1832, they considered and treated him as a stranger in blood. The question was referred to the Master, whether the plaintiff and his brothers and sister were the children of Charles Hutchins deceased, and the Master found in the affirmative. The counsel for the two reverend gentlemen stated that they pursued the course they had in the firm persuasion and unhesitating belief that the children sent to England were not the children of their brother, and that such persuasion and belief had not been in any degree removed by the evidence that had been adduced. The Vice-Chancellor said: "I have seldom met with a case more deserving of deep disapprobation and reprehension on the part of the defendants; one of them by breaking his trust, and placing the fund with which he was intrusted in the hands of those whose interest it was to dispute the ownership of the person really entitled; the others, clergymen, who have been unsuccessful in suggesting, I think, without any ground which could for a single moment deserve to be represented as solid, that they were ignorant of the status and condition of their brother's family. The title of the plaintiff is now established by the Master's report, which report has not been disputed. The whole case is so painful, that I really do not like to trust myself with dilating upon it. It is sufficient to say that a breach of trust of the grossest description has been established against all the parties, and I must deal with it accordingly. With respect to the trustee of the will, who placed the fund in the hands of the other trustees, the Messrs. Hutchins, I think the Court will treat him with great indulgence in not ordering him to pay costs, and in simply refusing him costs of any kind. With regard to the other defendants, their conduct has been without any pretext that can be urged by a reasonable being. They must pay the whole costs of the suit, from the beginning of it to the present time. They will have allowance for all they have paid for maintenance of the plaintiff, his brothers, and his sister. The account will be taken with rests, and, as the plaintiff elects to take the fund as money, the interest will be—as is justified by many such cases already decided—5 per cent. The cash in Court will be immediately paid to the plaintiff, and all the stock, excepting, for the present, 1,500*l.* of the stock."

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS, MAY 26.

THE PUNJAB BOOTY.—Lord Ellenborough moved an address to the Crown for the production of papers relating to the disposal of the booty acquired in the Punjab, and explanatory of the right of the Crown to dispose of such booty. Though on a former occasion he had been met by a declaration that six months' batta would be granted to the troops engaged in lieu of the booty—a declaration at which he had too hastily expressed his satisfaction—he had thought it right to bring the subject before the House again, because he thought that justice had not been done to the troops.

Lord Broughton regretted that the noble lord should have brought forward this question again, especially as, having on a former occasion declared that the troops for whom he pleaded would have no cause to complain if they got six months' batta, he now seemed to think that full justice had not been done them though they had received that amount of extra pay. He read the opinions of the law officers of the Crown, which stated that the arrangement of which Lord Ellenborough complained could not be legally impugned.

After some observations from the Duke of Wellington, to the effect that any assumption of authority by the Governor-General in India must necessarily be confirmed by the Government at home,

The Lord Chancellor gave into some explanations as to the legality of the arrangement entered into between the Crown and the Maharajah of Lahore; and it was settled that a part of the motion should be agreed to, so far as the papers asked for could be given, and the rest of the motion be negatived.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, MAY 27 AND 29.

CEYLON.—Mr. H. Baillie moved the following resolutions:—
"That this House, having taken into its consideration the evidence adduced before the select committee appointed to inquire into the affairs of Ceylon, is of opinion that the punishments inflicted during the late disturbances in that island were excessive and uncalled for: that this House is of opinion that the execution of eighteen persons, and the imprisonment, transportation, and corporal punishment of 140 other persons on this occasion, are at variance with the merciful administration of the British penal laws, and not calculated to secure the future affection and fidelity of Her Majesty's colonial subjects: that this House is of opinion that these severities are the more sincerely to be deprecated as they were exercised after the suppression of the disturbances, during which none of Her Majesty's troops or public servants were killed, and only one soldier slightly wounded: that this House is of opinion that the conduct of the late Governor of Ceylon, in keeping in force martial law for two months after his chief legal adviser had recommended its discontinuance, and during which period the civil courts were sitting without danger or interruption, and also his refusal to allow a short delay in the execution of a priest, at the request of the Queen's Advocate, who wished further investigation into the case, was in the highest degree arbitrary and oppressive: that this House is therefore of opinion that the conduct of Earl Grey, in signifying Her Majesty's approbation of the conduct of Lord Torrington during and subsequent to the disturbances, was precipitate and injudicious, tending to establish precedents of rigour and severity in the government of Her Majesty's foreign possessions, and injurious to the character of this country for justice and humanity." He observed that this was no longer a question in which the interests of the colony were alone concerned; it involved the interests of all our colonies, the honour and character of the country, and the conduct of a committee of that House; and these were the grounds upon which he had felt it to be his duty, as chairman of the Ceylon Committee, to bring the question before the House. He should avoid, he said, matters of opinion, including the origin of the outbreak, and the expediency of declaring martial law; but he should call upon the House to decide whether the manner in which martial law had been carried into effect could be justified, especially after the disturbances had ceased, and when the country was in a state of tranquillity. He described the mode in which the courts at Matele were constituted and their proceedings were conducted, laying great stress upon the opinion expressed by the Chief Justice of Ceylon, Sir A. Oliphant. That the country was tranquil when the courts martial sat was proved by a proclamation of the Governor himself. He adduced evidence of acts committed, he said, by the Governor of Ceylon under the supposed omnipotent power conferred upon him by martial law,—proclamations ordering the confiscation of lands and property, and carried into effect in the most oppressive manner, particularly in the cases of Dulawe Dewi Nileme and Golahella. He stated the case of the Buddhist priest, whose execution Lord Torrington had refused to stay at the request of the chief law officer of the colony, who had suggested that there was reason to believe he was innocent. Lastly, Mr. Baillie referred to the despatches of Earl Grey, conveying a general approbation of the conduct of Lord Torrington in relation to the disturbances, which he considered injurious to the character of this country.

Mr. Serjeant Murphy, avowing that he spoke as the advocate of Lord Torrington, defended his conduct. He entered with forensic minuteness into the history of the insurrection, its formidable character, the necessity of martial law, and the salutary effects of that measure, which led to the prompt capture of the Pretender, without which tranquillity could not have been restored. He defended the proceedings of the courts-martial at Matele—with which, however, Lord Torrington had no connexion—and contrasted the number sentenced by those tribunals with that of the rebels convicted capitally by the Supreme Court, who were spared by the clemency of Lord Torrington. In the matter of the priest shot at Kandy, upon which a charge of worse than judicial murder had been founded, Mr. Murphy gave a very full exposition of facts, which he insisted established the guilt of the prisoner and the regularity and fairness of the trial; and he denied that the Governor was bound to stay the execution upon the idle testimony of a proctor. The conduct of Sir A. Oliphant was inconsistent with the culpability of Lord Torrington, who, as the whole evidence proved, had exercised a wise discretion, and would, had he acted otherwise in the peculiar emergency, have been guilty of a dereliction of duty. As to the confiscations, except the two cases of Nileme and Golahella, there had been no instance of actual confiscation of property. Mr. Murphy then diverged into a collateral history, in which Mr. Elliott, the editor of the Colombo Observer, Mr. John Selby, the brother of the Queen's Advocate, and the notorious Tickery Banda, where the chief agents, which, he alleged, was connected with a cabal against the governor. If Lord Torrington, after acting to the best of his ability and with the soundest motives, leaving the island in a state of prosperity, was to be visited with censure, the house would establish a fearful precedent.

Mr. Ker Seymour supported the motion, and Earl Grosvenor defended Lord Torrington.

Mr. Roebuck felt it to be his duty, after going through the evidence, to vote against the motion. Ceylon was termed a colony, but it was not so; it was an outlying possession, densely peopled with various races differing from us in language and religion, which had been gained by the sword and was maintained by force. Different tests were to be applied to such a possession and to a colony. He should test a government like that of Ceylon, not by rules applicable to constitutional governments, but by the result; and the question, therefore, was, whether security had been obtained there at the least expense of pain and suffering to the community. Although the obligations of the King of Kandy, who maintained the priesthood, had devolved upon us, our policy had weakened their power, and destroyed that of the chiefs and head men, and all these classes had been exasperated against us. Mr. Roebuck then described the difficulties which beset Lord Torrington when he assumed the government of the island, which he represented as a hotbed of insubordination, discontent, and intrigue, and he then examined the grounds upon which Mr. Baillie rested his resolutions. The evidence negatived the allegation that martial law had been unnecessarily proclaimed; the tribunals which had administered it were efficient and safe, and their proceedings deserved no censure, nor was there any evidence that while martial law continued the punishments were unnecessarily cruel. A priest had been shot, it was true, in his sacerdotal robe; this robe was a vest of yellow calico, and had it been removed he would have been left naked. But, if a priest engaged in rebellion and was convicted, he should be executed as a priest, by way of example. Then, did Lord Torrington continue martial law too long? There was no proof of this; in short, there was nothing in the three blue books, except afterthoughts, which impugned the conduct of that noble lord.

Mr. Hume declined to regard Ceylon, with Mr. Roebuck, as a possession to be ruled without constitutional government, and differed from his theory, that if the island was kept quiet, this result was sufficient. When Ceylon was conquered, we pledged ourselves to govern it according to certain rules, and the question was, whether Lord Torrington had violated those rules, and disregarded the dictates of humanity as well as the interests of the colony. He contended that there had been no rebellion; disturbances there had been, but they were caused by taxes imposed by Lord Torrington, as shown by Sir E. Tennent, who admitted that the people when they assembled were unarmed, and that "no disaffection existed in the country." The taxes enforced upon the priests were peculiarly unjust in conjunction with the injudicious policy adopted by Lord Torrington towards that body, by direction of Earl Grey. The proclamation of martial law, which was not warranted by any evidence of its necessity, was, he contended, an abuse of power; and he expressed his astonishment that Earl Grey should have approved the executions—murders, as he called them—confiscations, and outrages which had taken place under martial law.

Sir J. Hogg asked what was the practical use of the motion? Lord Torrington was no longer governor of Ceylon, and if the censure was aimed at the Colonial Secretary, it should have been confined to him. The first allegations,—that the taxes had produced the insurrection, that the disturbance was of a trivial character, and that there had been no need of martial law,—had been negatived by adverse witnesses. The necessity of proclaiming martial law had been fully established; the charges commenced with the continuance of martial law, contrary to the opinion of Mr. Selby, whose opinion was opposed to that of experienced officers. The insurrection was fostered by the priests and headmen, and, as to the police putting it down, the whole police of Ceylon was intrusted to headmen. The regularity, the publicity, the fairness of the courts-martial were attested by Sir H. Maddock and other witnesses. The one court-martial put prominently forward in the resolutions, Sir James said, he was content to make the standard by which to measure the others. With respect to the cases of Nileme and Golahella, they were liberated owing to distrust of the evidence against them; some of their property was, however, seized and sold, and he did not justify these irregularities. If Earl Grey had withheld his approbation from Lord Torrington in the difficult circumstances in which he was placed, he would have exhibited an example injurious to the interests of this country, and dangerous to the peace of her colonies.

Sir F. Thesiger was not afraid to avow that he had come to an opposite conclusion, taking a view of the question as narrowed in the resolutions. The use of this motion was that of recording the opinion of the House upon the conduct of the Secretary of State, in approving, instead of censuring, the measures of a colonial governor. Sir Frederick adduced portions of the evidence to show that the outbreak was really caused by the imposition of taxes, and the apprehension of others among the mass of the people, that the "rebels," as they were termed by some witnesses, were a tumultuary rabble, and that their bond of union was soon broken. Martial law was justified only by necessity; it should be continued no longer than the necessity, and should be carried out with as much justice and equity as the case allowed. With this view, it was the duty of Lord Torrington to give definite instructions as to the constitution and proceedings of those terrible tribunals, the courts-martial. No such instructions had been issued, and he undertook to satisfy the House that there was no pretence for continuing martial law after the dispersion of the rabble at Matelle and Kornegalle; yet it had been prolonged from August until October, on the plea that the Pretender was at large, which was no justification; whereas, martial law was continued for three weeks after the capture of the Pretender. The real object of Lord Torrington was not to recall the proclamation of martial law until an act of indemnity passed, although the country was in a state of perfect tranquillity. The constitution of the courts-martial, composed of young officers, the irregularity of their proceedings, the defective and suspicious character of the evidence, were commented upon by Sir Frederick, who contended that there was nothing to call for this summary process, since the civil court at Kandy, presided over by Sir A. Oliphant, was sitting at the time when these military courts were pursuing their bloody course. If these resolutions were rejected, and the House should virtually express its approbation of these measures, the acts of the Secretary of State would become the acts of the nation, and the result would inflict a fatal blow upon its character for honour and humanity.

Mr. Hawes observed that the two questions were, first, what was the state of the island at the eruption of the rebellion; secondly, supposing it to have justified the proclamation of martial law, was that law carried into effect with unnecessary severity? He reminded the House that 1848 was a remarkable year in Europe, the events in which produced a sensible influence throughout our colonial empire. Independent of this, the same causes were at work in the island which had produced the rebellion of 1842, and it had been distinctly stated by Chief Justice Oliphant from the bench, prior to the proclamation, that there was a rebellion; that it had been hatched by the priests, and that it had nothing to do with taxes. The authorities generally, civil and military, concurred in the necessity of proclaiming martial law; courts-martial necessarily followed; the only question then was as to the proceedings under martial law in the disturbed districts. No complaints of unnecessary severity had been heard in the island at the time; the Legislative Council, before the cessation of martial law, addressed the Governor, approving its proclamation, and no complaints were lodged before the magistrates, which would have insured redress. Though confiscations were authorized by a proclamation, none took place. In the circumstances in which Lord Torrington was placed he was fully justified in the use he made of the formidable power given to him by the proclamation of martial law.

Mr. Gladstone observed, it was most important for the House to understand that they were to discuss the conduct of Her Majesty's Government—the approbation conveyed to Lord Torrington in October, 1848, repeatedly reaffirmed after a flood of light had been shed upon all the circumstances of his conduct, which had now been fully adopted by the Government. The question was not of a mere error of policy; it ascended to the very highest matter, the main question being whether there had been a judicious and wise, or an unwise and wanton exercise of the awful prerogative of determining when the span of human existence should be brought to a close. If the outbreak in Ceylon in 1848 was really a rebellion, it was one of the shortest ever known; it lasted only two days; beyond that time there had been no assembly of armed men. The two heads under which Mr. Hawes had divided the question might be reduced to one; there was no question as to the propriety of proclaiming martial law; the question was, what was done after its proclamation? In considering this point the origin of the outbreak must be kept in view, and, looking to the provocations which the Cingalese had received, there was much to palliate the rebellion, and to entitle the people to tenderness and mercy. What was there to justify the prolongation of martial law from the 16th of August to the 10th of October? He was not aware of a single testimony to justify it; and on this head a grave censure should rest upon the Government. But there was a far graver matter, the military executions. When the Government affirmed the proceedings of Lord Torrington they assumed his responsibility, and the question was, whether that House would put itself in the place of the Government with reference to the execution of eighteen men, carried into effect after the suppression of the rebellion without the loss of a life. He held this to be an unjustifiable effusion of human blood, the majority of these men having been, not priests or headmen, but common people, the tools of others. These were the grounds upon which he considered it to be the duty of the House to affirm the resolutions.

The Attorney-General charged Mr. Gladstone with shifting the ground upon which the motion had been originally based. All was now abandoned except the prolongation of martial law, and the severity of the punishments. This was a question, he observed, demanding the closest examination of a vast bulk of evidence, which few members had, perhaps, mastered, and upon which even the committee had not reported. There were reasons for the continuation of martial law, which Lord Torrington had intended to terminate as soon as the Pretender was taken, whose capture could only have been accomplished by the continuance of martial law. Mr. Baillie had alleged in his resolutions that eighteen persons had been executed, and 140 others punished, not capitally. What would the House think when he proved that the whole number of persons convicted and punished in relation to the rebellion was only sixty-four? Past instances of conspiracy and revolt, engendered by a dislike of foreign dominion, had shown that energetic measures were the true remedy with a hostile and discontented population—for the taxes were a mere pretext—with disaffected headmen and priests, and with the experience of the past, it was the duty of the Governor to mete out punishment with regard to all these circumstances. If, instead of proclaiming and prolonging martial law, Lord Torrington had pursued a different course, and the result had been unfortunate, where would have been the limit of reproach?

Lord J. Russell took a rapid view of the general administration of Lord Torrington, who had in a few weeks suppressed a rebellion and eradicated its seeds; he had left in prosperity a colony which he had found embarrassed, and the people tranquil who had been on the verge of a rebellion; and observed that Mr. Baillie should have taken the whole result into consideration, and not have fastened upon one or two points which he thought open to objection. The Government had not expressed any disapprobation of Lord Torrington's conduct in dealing with the rebellion; and, in his opinion, confidence ought to be placed in the governor of a colony, and the Government ought not, as a Government, to throw censures upon measures of which he was more likely to judge rightly.

Mr. Disraeli asked why, with the sentiments he now expressed, the noble lord yielded to clamour and granted the committee so easily? He adverted to the strange doctrines which had been enunciated during this discussion; that Ceylon was not a colony; that it was gained and must be held by force; that the conduct of absent governors must not be called in question. The Ministers had withdrawn and sacrificed a governor who, according to the Premier, had fulfilled the highest duties in the most complete manner. The proceedings under martial law, Mr. Disraeli maintained, were dangerous to the tenure of the colony, and observed that he looked to the responsibility of the Colonial Minister, with which he fixed him, not because he had approved these measures in the first instance, but because he had repeated and confirmed that approbation at a recent period.

The motion was negatived by 282 against 202.

MISCELLANEOUS.

MAJOR-GENERAL SIR WILLIAM MORISON, K. C. B. and M. P., who died on the 15th May, was an artillery officer in the service of the East-India Company, on the Madras establishment. He was the son of Mr. James Morison, of Greenfield, Clackmannanshire, N. B. He went to India as a cadet in 1800, became captain in 1807, and in 1809 filled the office of secretary to the Military Board at Madras. He had already been designated by Mr. Petrie, acting governor of that presidency, as the most competent person to form a commissariat establishment, then new to India; and in 1810 he was selected for that important undertaking by Sir George Barlow. His intimate acquaintance with the constitution and working of every branch of the public service, as well as with the military and general resources of the country, enabled him to introduce a system so efficient and economical in the supply of provisions, of equipage, and of carriage, in camp, in barrack, and in hospital, as to stand the test of experience, not only in peace, but in warfare on the most extensive scale, and under the most trying circumstances. In addition to these laborious duties, he undertook the superintendence of the geographical and statistical survey of the Madras territory in the years 1811 and 1812, when Colonel Colin Mackenzie, the Surveyor-General, had proceeded as chief engineer in the expedition against the island of Java, in which he acquitted himself greatly to the public advantage. He was in the field, as Commissary-General, throughout the military operations of the Mahratta war in 1817 and 1818, and was present at the battle of Mahidpore. In 1823 he became major, and in 1825 he was transferred by Sir Thomas Munro to the diplomatic department, as resident at the court of Travancore. He was subsequently deputed by Lord William Bentinck, the Governor-General, in conjunction with Mr. J. M. Macleod, to administer the government of Mysore. He became lieutenant-colonel in 1827, and brevet colonel in 1831. On the change in the constitution of the Indian Government, which took place in 1834, he was the first military officer selected for a seat in the Supreme Council of India. He filled that high position for five years, embracing the remainder of Lord William Bentinck's administration, that of Sir Charles Metcalfe, and the first part of the administration of Lord Auckland; and enjoyed the entire confidence of these three eminent men. During Lord Auckland's absence from the seat of government, the offices of President of the Council of India and Deputy Governor of Bengal devolved upon him. He returned to England in 1840, after forty years of active service in the East, and soon after attained the rank of major-general. Impaired health now restricted the exertions to which his habits and the activity of his mind would otherwise have prompted him. For above nine years, however, he represented his native country in parliament, and gave a steady support to the Liberal party. He found amusement in the study of physical science; and took a lively interest in certain improvements in gunnery and small arms of his own invention. He was a Fellow of the Royal Society and of the Royal Asiatic Society. For his military services he had, in 1821, been made a Companion of the Bath, and on the extension of that order the dignity of a Civil Knight Commander was conferred upon him. Sir William Morison's disposition was remarkably benevolent and sociable; his heart warm and kind.

SIR R. ARMSTRONG.—At a Court of Directors held at the East-India House on the 20th May, Lieutenant-General Sir Richard Armstrong, C.B., the new Commander-in-Chief of the Forces on the Madras establishment, was appointed Second Member of Council at the Presidency of Fort St. George.

INDIAN ZOOLOGY.—The New York Tribune says:—"The bark Regatta has arrived here from India, freighted with nine living elephants, a zebu or Burmese bull, sixteen enormous serpents, including a brace of boa-constrictors, of 24 and 16 feet in length, besides a wilderness of monkeys, the fretted porcupine, and other live 'varmints.' One of the most curious features of this Noah's ark collection is a calf elephant, about nine months old, and weaned from its dam on the passage from Ceylon, being but 3 feet high, and as docile and playful as a kitten. Another is one of the native chiefs of Ceylon, who accompanies the show in charge of the elephants. This enterprise is the greatest, probably, since the days of the flood. The elephants were hunted and caught in their native jungles by Messrs. June and Nutter, accompanied by 160 of the natives. Their capture was effected by driving 250 of them into a kraal or rude pen, constructed in the jungle, out of which they succeeded in securing thirteen, two having died on the passage, and another being stolen from the drove. The Regatta made her passage home, 13,000 miles, stopping at the Cape of Good Hope and the island of St. Helena in 112 days. The elephant hunters were three months and four days in the jungles before they effected their object."

RAILWAYS IN BENGAL.—A report upon this subject, by Mr. W. P. Andrew, addressed to the late Sir A. Galloway, has appeared in the Artizan for the present month. The appearance of the report at this moment is singularly well-timed, when accounts reach us from India that the views it advocates are those which have been adopted both by Mr. Turnbull, the East India Railway engineer, and Major Pell Kennedy, the consulting engineer to the Indian Government. Soon after the appointment of the latter gentleman, when alluding to Indian railways, we predicted that he would approve of the moderate and practical views so long advanced by Mr. Andrew. Mr. Andrew's plan is stated in the following paragraph of his report:—"The upper terminus of the proposed railway at Rajmahal would necessarily become the steam port of Calcutta, and the grand depot of all the valuable commodities constituting the inland trade; while the lower terminus at Howrah, meeting continuously in the same focal area, with wet docks, and communicating with Calcutta by means of a steam-ferry or suspension bridge, would economize and expedite in an extraordinary degree the transactions of the external commerce of India. By connecting in this manner the two great channels of commerce, the Hooghly and Ganges, 528 miles of a circuitous route, large portions of which are extremely dangerous and intricate, through the labyrinth of the Soonderbunds, would be saved for eight months in the year, and the "rapid and ever-tortuous Bhagerruttee," always dangerous to commerce, and annually occasioning numerous wrecks, attended with the total loss of large amounts of property, would be avoided for the remaining four months. The railway train would, with certainty, perform in ten or twelve hours what now takes the steam-vessel, on the average, as many days, and what is only precariously accomplished by the heavily-laden country-boat in a month."

LIEUT. COL. STONEHAM, whose death was recently recorded, took an active part in many important movements of Indian warfare. He entered the service as a cadet of 1798, attained the rank of ensign 1799, of a lieutenant in 1800, of captain in 1812, on staff, and his majority in 1821. He attained the rank of lieutenant-colonel of 69th N.I. in May, 1825. In 1828, he was appointed to the command of the 53rd N.I. He was employed in the campaign and took part at the storming of Sarsnee, at Bukkhar, and Cutchawarrar in 1802 and 1803, and at the latter he received a graze on the body by a jungle-bull. At the battle with the Mahrattas at Shakoabad, in Sept. 1803, he was wounded very severely in the knee. He was three years adjutant to the Cawnpore and Goruckpore provincial battalion, till the latter was disbanded in 1807, and received the particular thanks of General Sir George Hewett, the commander-in-chief, for killing and dispersing a number of dacoits at Dinapore, in April, 1809, when in command of a detachment from Moradabad, it being a treasure charge. He was at the siege and storm of Callagir, and served in the Rewah campaign under the command of Generals Sir G. Martindell and Sir J. W. Adams; and for his general service and judicious conduct was, in 1814, appointed by his patron, the Marquis of Hastings, superintendent of the Pindarry chiefs, Kurrem Khan, and others, after the battle with Maharajah Scindeah. At the same time the duties of superintendent of the north-western frontier from Goruckpore to the Nepaul territories were intrusted to him. While superintendent of the Tharoos, he allowed the newly-conquered inhabitants a settlement to enable them to cultivate their lands peaceably, and was assured a fixed salary by the British Government after the celebrated Nepaul war in 1816.

A PORTRAIT OF R. THOM, ESQ., H.M.'s consul at Ningpo, and a distinguished Chinese scholar, has just been issued. It has been drawn on stone from a painting by Mosses, and bears evidence of a strong likeness. This celebrated individual was born at Glasgow, in 1807, and died at Ningpo, in 1847.

COMMISSION TO THE CAPE.—The Queen has been pleased to appoint William Hogge and Charles Mostyn Owen, Esqrs., to be assistants to Lieut. Gen. Sir H. G. W. Smith, Bart., K.O.C.B., Governor of the Cape of Good Hope, as her Majesty's High Commissioner for the settling and adjustment of the affairs of the territories in Southern Africa, adjacent or contiguous to the eastern and north-eastern frontier of that colony.—London Gaz., May 30.

ENGAGEMENT OF SHIPS.—The Wellesley and Charlotte have been engaged for the freight of stores to Calcutta; the Lord George Bentinck and Camperdown for conveyance of troops to Bombay; and the Schah Jehan for freight of stores to the same presidency.

Home

The obstacles which superstition offers to social improvement are forcibly shown by the objection raised on the part of the Parsee community of Bombay, the most liberal of the native classes of India, to the use of water transmitted through iron pipes.

This Society offers a lower and more economical scale of Premiums for Life Assurance than hitherto demanded by the established Offices in India.

Annual Premium for assuring 1,000 rupees:—

CIVIL.			MILITARY AND NAVAL.
Age.	With Profits.	Without Profits.	Age.	With Profits.	Without Profits.
20	Rs. 33	Rs. 31	20	Rs. 38	Rs. 35
30	38	35	30	44	41
40	49	45	40	53	49
50	63	59	50	66	61
60	82	77	60	84	79

All holders of Policies in India on the Profit scale, who may have paid five annual premiums, will be entitled, at the expiration of the fifth year, to a year's profit, calculated on the average of the preceding five years; such profit to be paid in cash, or to go in diminution of the future premiums payable, or to be added to the sum assured by the policy, at the option of the holder, after the calculation of the profits shall have been made in London.

After the expiration of 1851, the profits will be declared annually, and the payers of five complete annual premiums be regularly entitled to a participation therein, with a like option as to the mode of application.

Parties assured in India for Life shall, on their return to England for a permanency, and on the first half-yearly premium becoming due, be entitled to come upon the English rates of premium, and be placed under the rules and conditions of the Society there obtaining.

All parties assured for Life, or for terms other than for Life, whatever the number of payments, or the permanency or otherwise of their residence in Europe, shall, after completing a full year from the date of their quitting India, and on the first half-yearly premium thereafter becoming due, be entitled to a reduction of their premium to the English rates, such reduced rates being continued during their further residence in Europe.

Notices of Assignments of Policies will be duly registered at the Office of the Secretaries.

The Society also grants ENDOWMENTS and DEFERRED ANNUITIES for India, the Tables for which, with full information, may be had at the Office of the Family Endowment Society, No. 12, Chatham Place; or at the Office of the Secretaries in Calcutta, Messrs. GORDON, STUART, and Co.

UNIVERSAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, No. 1, King William Street, London.

Established in 1834.—Empowered by Special Act of Parliament.

The Annual General Court of Proprietors of this Society was held on the 14th inst., when a reduction of 45 per cent. on the current annual premiums on all policies entitled to participation in the profits was declared, being a greater amount of reduction than that declared for the last few years, arising from the steady increase in business, and general prosperity of the Society.

By order of the Board,

DAVID JONES.

TO PRESERVE LIFE IN SHIPWRECK.

Laurie's Patent Floatable Mattresses

(NOT INFLATED), PILLOWS, LIFE BELTS, and sundry buoyant articles. S. W. SILVER and Co., Sole Licensees. Every Ship Mattress will sustain eight persons in the water for an indefinite period, and at a small increase on the usual cost of those in common use. Every pillow or seat-cushion will sustain one or more persons. The Life Belts are preventives to sinking, the cheapest yet submitted, very portable, and applied in an instant in case of accident. Thus, every sailing vessel, Steamer, Yacht, Boat, or craft of any kind, and every person on board, ought to be furnished with those clever Sinking-Preventives, which may be seen and tested at the manufacturers', S. and W. SILVER and Co., Clothiers, Outfitters, and Contractors, 66 and 67, CORNHILL, and 4, BISHOPSGATE STREET, LONDON; and at LIVERPOOL, where Passengers may be supplied with the whole or any portion of their Outfit without sacrificing the too usual intermediate profit, SILVER and Co. being the Makers of the Mainfold Articles in the Outfit, and supplying them at their Shipping Prices, including Folding Furniture for Cabin use on the Voyage, which is so contrived as to form a supply on arrival. Department for Outfitting Cadets, Clergymen, and Cabin Passengers generally, Naval and Military Uniforms, and Clothing for Home use, at 66 and 67, CORNHILL. Department for Outfitting Ladies, and for Home use, with experienced Female Managers, 66 and 67, CORNHILL.

Department for very low-priced OUTFITS, 4, BISHOPSGATE STREET, opposite the London Tavern, where a comfortable fit out for a four months' voyage may be procured for Four Guineas, including a SINKING-PREVENTIVE MATTRESS.

WATER CURE, BEN RHYDDING.

THE CELEBRATED WHARFEDALE HYDRO-PATHIC ESTABLISHMENT is now only 7 hours' distance from London, is 2 hours' distance from Harrogate, and 2½ from Fountains Abbey and Studley Park, 1¼ from Leeds and Bradford, 2¼ from Manchester and York, 3¼ from Liverpool, and 7 miles' drive from Bolton Abbey, the beautiful seat of the Duke of Devonshire.

Physician to the establishment, Dr. WM. MACLEOD, Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians, Edinburgh; Member of the Edinburgh Medico-Chirurgical Society; Honorary Member of the Royal Medical Society; formerly Lecturer on the Institutes of Medicine in the Argyle Square School of Medicine, Edinburgh; and Physician to the Royal Public Dispensary, &c. &c.

On a high eminence near the banks of the Wharfe stands this noble edifice; the extensive and varied scenery of the locality, with its salubrious springs and bracing air, have for centuries back rendered it a favourite place of resort for invalids. The establishment, for its situation and completeness, is unrivalled in England. It was built expressly for the Water Cure treatment, at an expense of £26,000, and is provided with every convenience, comfort, and even luxury. The Estate, which has been elegantly laid out, consists of 65 acres of hilly and wooded pleasure-grounds. The Hotel, for the accommodation of friends of the patients, is complete in every department. Terms: Board, Lodging, Medical Attendance, &c. (including all servants), per week, £3. 6s.; Board and Lodging in the Hotel department (including all servants), per week, £2. 9s. Further particulars respecting coaches, &c., may be obtained of the House Steward, by letter addressed to him, Ben Rhydding, near Otley, Yorkshire. Dr. Macleod begs to refer those resident in India for further particulars of his establishment and method of treatment to his friend, Robert Browne, Esq., M.D., Superintending-Surgeon of the Honourable East-India Company's Service, Dinapore, Bengal Presidency.

A SEARCH AFTER HEALTH, AND WHERE IT IS TO BE FOUND. A LETTER by a LIVERPOOL MERCHANT to his Brother Merchants, and to all who are labouring under the Great English Malady, the wear and tear of the system, or an over-wrought brain.

"The letter is written in a high tone of elation, because of a complete return to health. . . . He had consulted most of the eminent physicians at home and abroad; visited Harrogate, Buxton, &c., and the German Spas. All of no avail. At last he places himself under Dr. Macleod, at his palatial establishment of Ben Rhydding, from which, at the end of three months, he emerges completely cured." Glasgow Citizen.

HOWARD ON THE LOSS OF TEETH, and on a new method of FASTENING LOOSE TEETH.—A very curious invention connected with Dental Surgery has been introduced by Mr. Howard, consisting of an entirely new description of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, fixed by SELF-ADHESION, without springs, wires, or ligatures. They will never change colour or decay. This method does not require the extraction of any teeth or roots, or any painful operation. The invention is of importance to many persons, and those interested in it should read this Treatise.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS A CERTAIN SPECIFIC FOR NERVOUSNESS, LOWNESS OF SPIRITS, AND DISORDERED STOMACHS.—The wonderfully regenerating effects produced by these invaluable Pills are truly astonishing. This fine Medicine acts in so peculiar a manner on the system, that by following the directions affixed to each box, as to the mode of using it, nervous irritability is allayed, the tone of the stomach strengthened, the digestion improved, freedom of circulation given to the blood, and a robust state of health attained. Persons of studious and sedentary habits, being more especially liable to the class of disorders alluded to, should take Holloway's Pills to insure a good state of health.

Sold by all Druggists, and at Professor Holloway's establishment, 244, Strand, London; and by all European and Native vendors of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

EXTENSION OF STEAM-COMMUNICATION

WITH

INDIA, CHINA, &c.

On or about the 20th August next, and of every alternate month thereafter, until further notice, one of the

Peninsular & Oriental Steam Navigation Company's First-Class Steam-Ships

WILL BE DESPATCHED, AS AN EXTRA SHIP, FROM

CALCUTTA FOR SUEZ,

CALLING AT MADRAS, CEYLON, AND ADEN.

In combination with these extra Steam-ships from CALCUTTA, the Company will despatch from BOMBAY, about the 1st September next, and of every alternate month thereafter, a first-class Steam-ship for ADEN, to meet there the Ship from CALCUTTA.

At ADEN, the Passengers, Parcels, and Goods from BOMBAY, will be transferred to the Calcutta Ship, and be conveyed to SUEZ.

At ALEXANDRIA, one of the Company's Steam-ships will receive the Passengers, Parcels, and Goods, and convey them to SOUTHAMPTON, calling at MALTA and GIBRALTAR.

OUTWARD ROUTE.

In combination with the above arrangements, one of the Company's large first-class Steam-ships will be despatched from SOUTHAMPTON on or about the 1st September, and of every alternate month thereafter, for ALEXANDRIA, touching at GIBRALTAR and MALTA, for the conveyance of Passengers, Parcels, and Goods to those places, and also, via EGYPT, to ADEN, CEYLON, MADRAS, CALCUTTA, SINGAPORE, and CHINA. But Passengers, Parcels, and Goods for BOMBAY and WESTERN INDIA will be conveyed from SOUTHAMPTON in the Mail Steamers leaving that Port on the 20th of the month, and the corresponding Vessels from SUEZ to ADEN, at which latter Port a Steam-ship of the Company will be in waiting to embark and convey them to BOMBAY.

N.B.—Steam-ships of the Company now ply direct between CALCUTTA, PENANG, SINGAPORE, and HONG-KONG.

For further information, and tariffs of the Company's recently revised and reduced rates of Passage-money and Freight, apply at their Office, 122, LEADENHALL STREET, LONDON, and at SOUTHAMPTON.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

WE have again a very barren mail. The approach of the hot season, when activity is torture, and all European functionaries who have power to visit the cool regions abandon the torrid plains of India, is commonly heralded by a state of repose in the public departments, the transactions in which supply materials for journalism.

The Governor-General had reached Simla, and held his first levee on the 1st of May. It is described as a brilliant gathering, and a large number of the residents and visitors of Simla were formally presented. It is said that he purposes to pass the season at his old quarters in Kunawar. The marquess, it appears, met with a slight accident on his journey. On returning from an inspection of the fort at Kangra, while riding down hill on a ghoot, he came in contact with a loaded camel, on turning a corner rather suddenly. The ghoot shied, and fell with his rider down a khud, most fortunately neither steep nor deep, and with the exception of a small cut and a bruise over one eye, his lordship escaped unhurt. Sir H. Lawrence was on his way to meet the marquess, intending to proceed to Chumba. Mr. Thomason, governor of the North-west Provinces, and Mr. J. Lawrence, of the Lahore Board of Administration, had likewise sought the hills.

The Commander-in-Chief had reached Simla before the Governor-General, and it is reported in the Mofussil journals that he intends to make that station his head-quarters during his term of service. Sir William has purchased the property known as the Barnes Estate. It is stated, however, that, during the next cold weather, he will visit the north-western frontier, and provide for its settlement and security.

The state of this frontier appears to demand attention. The Lahore Chronicle says:—

"There has been no intermission of the robberies and murders committed by the tribes bordering on our westernmost provinces, from the Yonzoozfaie country in the north, to Rojhan in the south. The Momands, the Khaiberees, the Afreedees, the Kutuks (within our frontier, whose possessions extend to the Indus), the Wuzzerers, the tribes of the Sooleman range, and the Beloochees (to use a generic designation) have been so long accustomed to look upon the plains adjoining their hills as their own peculiar hunting-grounds, from which periodically to obtain by force what nature has denied them in their mountain fastnesses, that they cannot and will not now desist from the pursuit of their accustomed avocations. The payment of black mail, in some parts of the immense line open to their depredation, instead of having a beneficial and civilizing influence, is an encouragement of those who receive it to further acts of aggression in the hope of receiving more, and to those who do not in the belief that the douceur will be extended to them. They naturally assume that we prefer paying to fighting them, and presume accordingly.

"The frontier has been of late much strengthened. The troops that have been raised for special service in the Punjab, and beyond if necessary, and which were scattered over the face of the country, have been concentrated in the Derajat, and in the hill country to the north, near Kohat, and placed beyond the probability of an attack so long as the tribes act independently; for all the attempts made in Kohat, in the Kutuk country, in the Hushtangur Doab, and further south, in the shape of movements, on a larger scale, have been met by the new levies, and by the Guides, with a determination that must prove to the hill-men that their want of discipline will always expose them to defeat in encounters similar to those that have recently occurred."

The latest letters from Kohat say that murders are more frequent, and that the pass continued closed.

The accounts from Hyderabad tell the same unvarying tale of disorders in the Nizam's capital and provinces. His Highness still refused to appoint a minister. The resident had demanded that the Nizam should order the fort of Dharoor to be dismantled, and make some better provision for the administration of criminal justice. The first request had been granted, and troops had been sent out to raze the fort. The correspondent of the Englishman mentions a most atrocious case of oppression in the Nizam's territory. A body of Arabs had a pecuniary claim against the Rajah of Wunpurty, and being unable to seize him, seized upon all the children in the village. Three of them, being still unweaned, died for want of nourishment, and the resident has presented a strong remonstrance to the Nizam on the subject.

A letter from Lucknow states that the King of Oude was continuing his mad pranks, with his purrees and giants, and blocked up thoroughfares, to the great inconvenience of everybody.

The Nawab of Jhujhur, near Delhi, having broken through the custom of Indian nobles, of leaving all business to their ministers and dependants, and creditably endeavoured to manage his immense estates himself, the parties thus thrown out of power have raised a clamour of oppression and tyranny; complaints are made by the Jhujhur ryots of ill-usage, and already have many arrived at the gates of the Governor-General's agent with their complaints.

News from the northward had been received at Madras that some three or four thousand men from the hills were up in arms, and that Mr. Crozier, in charge of the Vizianagrum zemindary, had started for the scene of outbreak with a detachment of sepoy, accompanied by the young Rajah of Vizianagrum, with his followers.

The Bombay Telegraph reports that the Shahzada (heir apparent) of Candahar was at Kurrachee, hoping to obtain assistance from the Government of India in asserting his claims. "He was deprived of his possessions in Candahar by a revolt of the chiefs, and now offers to place the country at the disposal of the British, on condition of being reinstated."

The great topic in all the journals is the escape (we can hardly term it acquittal) of Jotee Persaud, the further prosecution of whom, it is understood, has been abandoned by the Government. This course is dictated by wisdom: the witnesses discredited on one charge would scarcely be believed on another. The statement that Jotee Persaud had intimated his intention of relinquishing the suit against Government has been contradicted by the Mofussilite, which adds that the Lala, so far from evincing any such desire, has "manifested his anxiety to make the Government pay interest on those sums that ought to have been adjusted years ago." The Lahore Chronicle further states that Mr.

Lang, the counsel of Jotee Persaud, had started for Calcutta, to carry on the suit in the Supreme Court: "the probabilities of that suit being successful are now greatly increased, as all the documents which the military board refused to acknowledge, on the ground that they were forgeries, are now authoritatively pronounced genuine vouchers, which will make a great difference in favour of the plaintiff."

The state of the weather becomes at this season of the year one of the most interesting topics of discussion at the presidencies. The atmospheric perturbation all over India seems to have commenced on the 17th April. A violent hailstorm had visited Meerut on the 28th March, the hailstones being the size of pigeons' eggs. On the 17th April, Delhi, Meerut, and the districts around, were visited by a furious storm of thunder, lightning, rain, and hail; on the same day a heavy shower of rain, accompanied by hail, occurred at Hyderabad, in Scinde, and a heavy shower fell at Simla. The intense heat which had prevailed since the end of March seems to have terminated when the storms began; dense showers poured down all over Lower Bengal about the 23rd, and so continued for a week; the spring sowings having gone on rapidly and cheerily. On this occasion a violent hailstorm visited Calcutta: no great damage, however, was occasioned by it. Hail fell at Secunderabad on the 11th April and 2nd May, and on the 22nd April a hailstorm of terrific violence occurred at Rungpore, near Calcutta, the hailstones being as large as ducks' eggs. Nearly all the fruit in the districts, hundreds of houses, and a great number of trees, were destroyed by it. On the 5th and 6th May, showers and squalls prevailed all over Western India,—the barometer at Bombay having sunk so low as to lead to the inference that there must have been a hurricane then prevailing within 800 or 1,000 miles.

We regret to observe that several officers in the Bengal army have been remanded to their regiments, forfeiting their staff-appointments, owing to want of competent acquaintance with Hindustani.

The embankments for the Bengal Railway, so far as its course has been determined, are proceeding so rapidly that it is believed the road will be ready for work in a twelve-month.

The wheel-tax inquiry commissioners, at Bombay, have finished their task, as far as taking evidence is concerned. The disclosures made by the principal witnesses, though humiliating and painful to a degree, are not considered to have affected their characters for integrity.

The chief subject that engaged attention at that presidency is the examination of the persons who are discovered to have committed the robbery at the Oriental Bank some months ago. The robber turns out to be a Parsee, who was employed as one of the cash-keepers of the bank, and who also had charge of the ledger, in which latter capacity he is under more than a suspicion of having lent himself to very serious frauds on the bank by means of forged cheques. The mode in which the bank-notes were discovered is ingenious, and reflects great credit on an individual recently brought under public notice by Sir Charles Napier, who complained, at the Byculla Club dinner, that his moonshee, Ali Akbar, had been shamefully neglected by the Government, though his services had been invaluable to him whilst in Scinde.

From Rangoon we hear that the Burmese authorities continues their system of extortion with increased rapacity. An insurrection in the north-east of Ava is said to cause an urgent want of money, and to furnish a reason for these oppressive proceedings; but they are regarded as proof of a hostile feeling on the part of the court.

The China papers report the continuance of the rebellion in the two Kwang provinces, which, it appears, has seriously affected foreign trade. The Friend of China has reason to believe that the progress of the insurgents has been so great that the whole of the available resources of Southern China must be speedily brought into action. It adds: "The successes of the insurgents are now freely talked of amongst the Chinese in Hong-Kong, and some are in expectation of shortly seeing a new coinage, bearing the usurped designation, Tien-tuk, in place of that of the proper dynasty."

BENGAL.

THE CASE OF JOTEE PERSAUD.

As to the result of the trial, whether it would have been of a different complexion if all the material evidence which was excluded had been admitted, it is not for us to say. The acquittal of the accused must be taken as a fact; and in one point of view, we consider it a most important and gratifying fact. In the memorial presented to Government against the so-called Black Acts, one of the greatest objects which was raised against them had reference to the construction of the Company's Courts. It was stated, that some of the judges of the Courts of the East-India Company, "possess, no doubt, high honour and integrity, and a much nearer approach to judicial fitness than others, but none possess a shadow of judicial independence, because every one is a servant of the East-India Company, and removable at pleasure, a power which is not suffered to be dormant, and because all are compelled to act under a system by which the orders and circulars of Government, and of the superior Courts, have the force of law, even in matters affecting life and death." If ever there was a case in which these alleged defects of the country courts were likely to be fully developed, and the charges brought against them to be unequivocally substantiated, it was in the present instance. The prosecution was instituted by Government, the Court was a Company's Court, the judge was a servant of Government; the prosecutor was a servant of Government; the jury were in Government employ. It was repeatedly and confidently predicted, that the defendant had not the remotest chance of escape, because the constitution of the Court ensured his condemnation; yet he has been at once acquitted. Every assertion which has been made regarding the want of judicial independence in the judges of the country courts, because every one is a servant of the East-India Company, and removable at pleasure, and because this power of removal is not suffered to lie dormant, is at once refuted by a reference to this trial. The charge of habitual and inevitable subserviency to the Government, on the part of the judges in its service, is triumphantly disposed of. In one of the most important suits in which the Government has been engaged for many years, the Government has been defeated in its own courts by a judge and a jury who are its own servants. Whether the decision was just or unjust, we will not inquire; this fact at least is established beyond all further question, that the judges are not affected by the fear of removal, and that they have the solid substance, however they may want the shadow, of judicial independence.—Friend of India.

The speech of Jotee Persaud's counsel is very generally condemned here for its flippant, jesting, unbecoming style, unworthy altogether of the gravity of the subject and occasion. It was also grossly insulting to both judge and jury, and such as no barrister would have been allowed to proceed with by any judge in any of her Majesty's courts. It should also be observed, that the frantic passions of victory in which Jotee Persaud's friends have indulged, since his acquittal, are somewhat more exuberant than the pretended cause warrants. The Scotch verdict of "not proven" would have suited the case better than that of "not guilty," and would doubtless have been the one delivered had the forms of the court allowed of it. Notwithstanding all the time expended upon it, the case for the prosecution seems to have been very badly got up, and as a natural consequence quickly broke down without any assistance from the opposite side. This quite contented the defendant and his legal adviser, who, delighted to find matters taking this unexpected turn, made no attempt to set his client's innocence above suspicion, by proving "the actual existence of the herds of paper bullocks which Jotee Persaud was accused of creating." In fact, as has been well remarked, Mr. Lang chiefly relied upon "the merit" of his client, in not being a bigger rascal than the prosecutor would make him out to be.—Madras Athenaeum.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE LONDON MAIL of March 24th reached Calcutta on the 2nd May.

THE FIRST STEAMER of the Peninsular and Oriental Company on the direct line from Calcutta to Hong-Kong, was to start from the Hooghly on the 11th May. The Erin, which will be the first steamer despatched on the new line, is of 900 tons measurement, with engines of 300-horse power.

ÉMEUTE.—The Citizen says there has been an émeute among the natives who perform the offices necessary for the burning of the native dead of Calcutta, at the great ghauts allotted for that purpose. They have demanded an extortionate price for their services, and resisted by force the burners who attempted to invade their illegal monopoly.

SOMETHING IN THE WIND.—The following circular, addressed to officers commanding divisions, was issued from the adjutant-general's office, Simla, on the 8th April, 1851:—"Sir, I am directed by the Commander-in-Chief to request you will have the goodness to call upon officers commanding native regiments and battalions within your command—artillery, cavalry, and infantry, regular and irregular—to furnish, at their earliest convenience, for ultimate transmission to Government, the following information:—1st. A statement of the age and service of the native ranks (combatants) of corps, on the 1st of January, 1846, in the annexed form. 2nd. A statement showing the average number of the native ranks (cantonments) of corps, discharged annually, at their own request, from 1836 to 1846, with their average length of service at date of discharge."

MR. HOGG.—An address has been presented, with a silver vase, to Mr. Charles Hogg by the native establishment of the Bank of Bengal, on his retirement from the office of secretary. A minute of the directors also pays a well-deserved compliment to the zeal and ability of Mr. Hogg. The numerous friends of this gentleman entertained him at a farewell dinner in the Town Hall.

CASHMERE PRESENTS.—The Governor-General has sold by auction all the presents received from Maharajah Goolab Sing. What do the natives think of this mode of using their gifts?

MAHOMMEDAN FEELING.—The Citizen, in an article upon the late rebellion in the Calcutta Muddressa, quotes the following passage from a Persian newspaper of Calcutta on the subject:—"We know that if the Medressa, which is to be considered as the head-quarters of the Mahommedan religion, should remain in this state of disorganization for two or three months longer, it would not be a matter of surprise if all the Mussulmans were to unite and prepare themselves for active resistance, and fighting, and if it was to occasion a general rising, which would be enough to destroy a whole world in an instant. Should this happen (and would to God that it may happen!) the battles of Cabul and Kandahar would be re-enacted, and there would be another Chilianwallah. On the one hand it is true that the subjects have not the power to fight with their masters, but on the other hand that is equally true what the poet says, Let there be a sufficient number of musquitoes and they will kill an elephant, and if many ants unite they can overcome a lion, notwithstanding his strength and prowess."

ALEXANDER CHALMERS, presidency surgeon, died on Monday evening. The service has lost in Dr. C. an able energetic officer, and the community a man of liberal sentiment and kindly feeling. Those who saw him a few weeks ago, and now learn that he has fallen a victim to disease of the liver, will be forcibly reminded of the rapid progress of disease in this climate. A remarkable strong and healthy looking man, in the prime of life, is so suddenly prostrated, that though his passage was taken by the Precursor on the symptoms of the malady first appearing, he had to be left behind, and ere another opportunity presents itself, he is dead.—Englishman, April 30.

THE NORTH-WEST BANK's affairs are again becoming a subject for comment in the north-west papers. The Mofussilite of May 6 contains a report of the directors of this bank, which occupies eight columns of the paper. The directors state the estimated deficit in the bank's assets to be, in round numbers, eight lacs of rupees, or 80,000L, which they thus account for:—

We divide the losses under four different heads, viz. :—

	Rs.	a. p.
1. Major Angelo's defalcations	1,40,520	5 9
2. On purchase and sale of Agra bank scrip and Oriental ditto.....	18,381	11 9
3. On the agency accounts of Calcutta, Mussoorie, and Lahore.....	3,46,660	7 7
4. Bad and doubtful accounts at Meerut	2,82,520	8 2
	Rs. 7,88,083	1 3

They recommend the shareholders to forego a "division of last years' profits!" and to consent to reduce the nominal value of their shares. The Mofussilite, in the teeth of such disclosures, has the hardihood to write in the following terms respecting the affairs of this bank. The exact amount of loss suffered by the bank cannot be ascertained until the report of the London auditors shall reach this country and be compared with the accounts now before the public. But from the nature of the London business, its results are not likely to affect the statements now given very materially.—Bengal Telegraph, May 14.

MESSRS. SLOLEY AND THORNTON were convicted in the Supreme Court for the abduction of Mr. Arrathoon from Chandernagore. Mr. Sloley was condemned to four months' imprisonment, and a fine of Rs. 1,000, and Thornton to six months' imprisonment without any pecuniary mulct. It is also stated that the French Court at Chandernagore had condemned Sloley, par contumace, to six years' imprisonment with hard labour, and a fine of Rs. 50,000.

RECOVERY OF CASTE.—A native journal states that the project of enabling converted Hindoos to return to their former faith, by a particular form of purification, has again been mooted among the orthodox Hindoos. These gentlemen are sorely frightened by the late conversions, and want to establish a system somewhat similar to the Mussulman Toba. The Probhakur says, he doubts not that texts may be found in the Shastra to sanction such a proceeding.

THE UNION BANK.—In our last despatch we reported the application made on the part of Messrs. Glyn & Co., the London bankers, for a scire facias against several wealthy shareholders of the Union bank, who had not filed memorials of their retirement according to the provisions of the Union Bank Act, nor taken advantage of the terms of the compromise which the shareholders in general availed themselves of. It will be recollected, that these gentlemen relied on the last memorial in 1846, which had been filed by the bank officers, as not containing their names. They deemed the omission of their names equivalent to an express memorial stating their retirement; and this was the view taken by the Court, and on that ground the scire facias against them was refused. We have now, however, to state that they seem to distrust this position. Glyn & Co. having appealed against the refusal of the scire facias, the question may be considered as still sub judice, and the shareholders alluded to have, since our last despatch, applied to the Court on behalf of themselves and others in the like predicament, for a mandamus to the bank directors to file a memorial of retired shareholders. The Court has not yet delivered any written judgment, nor come to any final decision, but have intimated an opinion that the mandamus ought to issue, provided the applicants will consent not to take advantage of the memorial as against Glyn & Co., or any other parties who may have proceedings pending. That is to say, if the Privy Council reverse the order of the Supreme Court as to the scire facias, and decide that Glyn & Co. are entitled to one, then the memorial shall not be set up as a defence against them.—Englishman, May 2.

DANGEROUS LEVITIES.—The Englishman has letters from Ferozepore, dated the 20th of April, which give an account of an occurrence which had just taken place there, and which must hold out a salutary warning to the young officers at that station. It appears that four of them took it into their heads to perambulate the city of Ferozepore, after mess, and insulted some females belonging to respectable residents there, or attempted to get into their houses. The inhabitants of the portion of the city they were in, rose upon, seized and bound them, and, after inflicting upon them a most severe beating, tied them two and two together, and threw them into a ditch, from whence they were not released for nearly twelve hours. Three of these officers are none the worse beyond some wholesome bruises, but the fourth still lies in a dangerous state. We refrain from giving their names, as the matter has been adjusted by the authorities.

LIEUT. SALE.—It is our painful duty to record the occurrence of a melancholy accident near Hurreepoor, on the road to Simla, on the 30th ult., Lieut. H. P. Sale, of the 13th N.I. adjutant of the Nusseeree battalion, stationed at Jutog, went down towards Kalka, for the purpose of meeting a detachment escorting treasure from that place. After encamping near the river at Hurreepoor, he strolled up the hill in the neighbourhood, with his gun, whilst the men were cooking their dinner; he had not been long absent, when, to the surprise of the Goorkhas, he fell from a tremendous height into the river close by them. The man who was with him says, that he begged of his master not to go so near the edge of the precipice; that whilst speaking to him, his foot slipped, and that, in falling, he caught at a tuft of grass, which gave way, and the unfortunate young man was precipitated down the khud. He lived about a quarter of an hour after, but quite insensible. Mr. Apothecary Law arrived very opportunely just after the accident, and rendered every assistance in his power. Mr. Law remained on the spot until life was extinct. The deceased was the youngest son of the late Sir Robert Sale, and his untimely death has cast a gloom over a large circle of friends, by whom, as well as the men of his regiment, he was much esteemed. He was buried at Subathoo, on the evening of the 1st inst.—Delhi Gaz., May 7.

RECATANTION.—We learn from a Calcutta paper that five Hindoos, students of the Bhowanipore Missionary School, recently offered themselves to the Rev. Dr. Boaz for baptism. They took up their residence in the Bhowanipore Mission House from that moment; but subsequently three of them changed their minds and returned home.

CAPTAIN WATT.—The Delhi Gazette understands that Captain Watt, lately a director of the North-West Bank, retires from the service at once, receiving Rs. 25,000 a month.

THE PRESS IN DANGER!—The Delhi Gazette tells the following strange story of Lord Dalhousie:—"It appears from the communication of a friend at Peshawur, upon whose good faith towards us we place the utmost reliance, that Lord Dalhousie expressed his anger at any account of the late doings at Dera Ghazee Khan and Bunnoo having found its way into the Delhi Gazette. Now we have always been led to believe that the most noble marquis was a sensible and liberal minded man, and were it not that the information comes to us in the most unquestionable shape, we should not hesitate to express a doubt whether his lordship ever was guilty of giving utterance to so foolish an expression, as 'that he would put an effectual stop to that kind of thing in future;' for such, we are assured, was the remark that he made at Peshawur. Does his lordship flatter himself that he is able to carry his threat into execution? Does he think that he can gag grown-up men, who think proper to communicate with their friends? If he does think so, we beg to assure him that he is egregiously mistaken. If he entertained any doubt as to the efficacy of his threat, it was exceedingly indiscreet in him to give vent to vague words in hearing of others."

THE AGRA BANK.—It is rumoured that the directors of the Agra and United Service Bank have invited Mr. J. S. Smith to audit the books of that bank, conjointly with Messrs E. H. Longden and W. W. Crawford, who were appointed auditors by the last general meeting of proprietors. Mr. Smith was recommended to be added to the committee of auditors by Mr. C. S. Stowell, in his reply to Mr. Neilson's letter published in the Delhi Gazette of the 16th ultimo, and we are glad to find that the directors have so readily acceded to his request; to use a favourite expression of Mr. Stowell's, "having nothing to conceal they have nothing (apparently) to dread." We have no doubt that occasional searching examinations by competent parties, such as the books of the N. W. Bank have undergone—are more likely to establish the credit of a bank than the farcical half-yearly audits at present in vogue; commenced and completed generally within three or four hours, at an unnecessary expense to the proprietors of five gold mohurs to each auditor. The "half-yearly audit," of the Agra Bank's and its agencies' accounts at this rate, stands the bank 50 gold mohurs—which in three years, if saved, would amount to Rs. 4,800. We are of opinion that it would be much more satisfactory to the proprietors to have their books thoroughly examined triennially than to continue the present system. The expense to the proprietors would be the same, and they would have the satisfaction of knowing that they had their "money's worth." We are informed, moreover, that Mr. Stowell has been requested by the directors to lay his "charges" before the committee of audit, evidently with a view to making the transactions of the bank "patent" to him, and that he may be convinced that there is neither "fraud" or "conspiracy" in the management. We hope the scrutiny about to be entered upon will satisfy Mr. Stowell and clear the directors.—Mofussilite, April 25.

THE CHARTER QUESTION.—The Probhakur, noticing the approaching expiration of the Company's Charter, exhorts his countrymen to engage, by a subscription amongst themselves, the services of an efficient and trustworthy agent, who will advocate their claims, and represent their grievances to the proper authorities at home.

NEGLECT OF SERVANTS.—A case of considerable importance to the residents in Calcutta was tried before the first judge of the Small Cause Court of Calcutta on the 1st April. Mr. Emerson brought a claim for damages against his coachman of Rs. 100, for injury caused to his carriage by wilful neglect. The coachman's defence was, that the care of the carriage belonged to the syces, and he had nothing whatever to do with it; but, as the evidence was conclusive as to his wilful neglect, and the coachman was obviously the responsible party, the judge awarded the plaintiff the full amount of the damages sued for.

THE RAILWAY.—Of the forty miles of line from Howrah to Pandooah, for which contracts have been made, the ground along thirteen miles has been already transferred to the railway officers; two-thirds of the land, therefore, still remains to be made over. But not one of the trees which have been cut down, and not one of the houses which have been demolished, on the ground already placed in the hands of the contractors, as far as we have been able to learn, has been paid for as yet. All the claims to compensation for the land, likewise, remain to be settled. We are afraid to state the number of these claims, as popularly reported, lest we should be suspected of exaggeration; but as the whole line of forty miles, for which contracts have been made, comprises nearly 9,000 bighas, if we allow three bighas for each holding, we shall have now fewer than 3,000 such claims.—Friend of India, April 17.

THE GOVERNMENT VERNACULAR SCHOOLS, in the district of Backergunge, have been abolished. The ostensible reason is, that the inhabitants of that district do not take a sufficient interest in their progress to justify the Government in maintaining them.

THE STEAMER "PATNA," belonging to the Ganges Steam Navigation Company, has been wrecked near Bulleah. She struck upon her anchor, and bored an immense hole in her bottom, through which the water rushed rapidly. Fortunately, no lives were lost, and it is said the goods in the stern will be saved. The value of the vessel and her cargo is reported to exceed two lakhs.

A ZEMINDAR OF HOOGHLY, a great oppressor of his ryots, so excited their hostility, that it appears they entered into a conspiracy against him, and one night literally cut him to pieces.

THE ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH.—Intelligence has been received from Diamond Harbour by means of the electric telegraph. The direct communication was opened between that station and Calcutta on the 3rd inst., and it is found to have succeeded most completely. It is as superior in precision as in speed to the old semaphore; besides which, it possesses the advantage of being available in all weathers. The half-educated boys, who have been trained in the novel science of signalling, have sent up the names of French vessels, their commanders, the port, and the date of departure, with singular accuracy, though most of the words were in French. In the infancy of our operations, it is found more advisable to adopt the system of spelling, because, though very slow and difficult, it is far more certain than the use of numbers. We have to wait the effect which may be produced by the heavy rains of the next rainy season upon the experiment, before any confidence can be placed in its success. Should the result correspond with our wishes, the question may be considered ripe for decision, and it will then be for Government to decide whether the sum of seven lakhs and a-half of rupees shall be expended for two successive years in the establishment of a line embracing Calcutta, Agra, Bombay, Simla, and Lahore. All that appears at present to be required to give these stations news from London within the month, and to render the Supreme Government ubiquitous, is 150,000*l.*, or the amount of two days' gross revenue of this empire. Indeed, as the last intelligence from England reached Bombay in twenty-seven days, it would have reached Calcutta by means of the telegraph in the same period. There is every reason to believe that the telegraph here will prove successful. The simple composition which Dr. O'Shaughnessy has used, as a coating for the wire, appears to be little affected by damp. It has apparently triumphed over our two greatest enemies, the heat and humidity of the climate. It is formed simply by boiling one-fourth of rosin with three-fourths of fine sand. As soon as the compound is cool, it becomes as hard as a stone. It is admirably adapted for roofs. We have exposed it on a piece of wood for three days to the burning, blistering sun of April, and have buried it in water for two days together, without the slightest deterioration of its consistency.—Friend of India, April 7.

COAL IN THE PUNJAB.—The Delhi Gazette affirms, in opposition to the Lahore Chronicle, that coal is to be found in the Punjab, or, if not coal, a species of lignite quite as useful for steam purposes. Nearly 3,000 maunds of this substance have been obtained from a place near Kalabagh, but the "scientific committee" do not consider it worth their while to look for the mineral in that quarter. Another seam has also been found near Deyra Ghazee Khan, and a third near Kuchee, in the Salt Range.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDER.

ABOLITION OF BRIGADE-MAJOR AT LOODIANA.

Camp, Buehala, April 3, 1851.—The services of a brigade-major being no longer required at Loodiana, the Most Noble the Governor-General is pleased to direct that that appointment shall be abolished from the 15th instant.

MADRAS.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CONVERSION OF NATIVES.—On Sunday evening last the baptism of Streenavassa Charry, a Brahmin converted to Christianity, took place in the Church of St. Thomé. There was a large attendance on the occasion. Another native, who belonged to the Sudra class, was baptised at the same time. In the course of the service appointed for the baptism of adults, the question was put to Streenavassa, by the Rev. Mr. Symonds—"Do you renounce the Brahmin custom of caste?" and was answered in the affirmative, and the convert removed his Brahminical string, which Mr. Symonds laid on the baptismal font. The service for the Brahmin was conducted in English by Mr. Symonds, that for the Sudra in Tamil by the Rev. Mr. Brotherton. The desire of the Brahmin convert is to be qualified to act as a missionary amongst his countrymen.—Athenæum, April 15.

SINGULAR COURT MARTIAL.—The Spectator reports a court-martial of a rather singular character. Four pupils of the Company of Ordnance Artificers were tried for refusing to assist in whipping with a rattan a boy who had been sentenced to that punishment by the superintendent of the gun manufactory. Two of the boys were sentenced to confinement for two months, half the time to be solitary, another to three months, and a fourth to four months' imprisonment.

PUNKAHS IN CHURCHES.—The press, and we conclude the society, of this presidency are at violent odds upon the question whether punkahs should be allowed in churches. The Eastern Guardian denounces punkah-pulling in churches as "offensive to the Creator." The Circulator, with more moderation, takes the same view of the question. The Athenæum and the Hindu Chronicle treat the question as a silly one, and the former paper refers to the case of a native punkah-puller, who, by following his occupation, was converted.

"A CURIOUS INCIDENT took place at Manantoddy the other day. Six wild elephants took it into their heads to visit a thatched bungalow belonging to Mr. Kennedy, a coffee-planter, who was then absent at Calicut. Not finding the master at home to give them a warm reception, they very unceremoniously walked into what was considered to be the hall, where a few jars of jam were lying on the table. They broke the jars one by one, and after feasting on the contents, which they must have found really delicious, they went about searching the rooms for more, but finding none, returned to demolish the unfortunate bungalow, a work which we are informed they accomplished in the twinkling of an eye. This done, they thought it high time to depart, leaving Mr. Kennedy's domestics to pick up the fragments of the jars and bungalow!"—Letter from Calicut, April 24.

COOLIES.—The Madras Spectator has published several articles, intended to call the attention of the authorities to the drain on population caused by the emigration of Indian coolies to the Mauritius and other places. So much for the fears of the alarmists!

LIEUT. AND ADJUTANT JOHNSTONE, of the 3rd Light Cavalry, took his usual drive with his wife, on the 24th instant, and sat down to dinner with good spirits. His wife and one child were seated at table with him, and he had stood up to carve, when a deafening report and a cloud of smoke burst upon them. The victim of an assassin's cowardly shot leapt up in amazement, thinking that a firework had accidentally been discharged into the room; but soon staggered, turned deadly pale, and fell on his face upon the ground; a bullet had entered his back, and he lay senseless and weltering in his blood. The servants, in their terror and surprise, were at first thunderstricken. No one pursued the murderer, though one of the servants actually saw the wretch as he turned and fled. He had fired at his victim when his back was turned towards him, from an open window of the room where the party sat at dinner. The doctor arrived, but the sufferer was wounded beyond human cure. The bullet had passed through his back to the surface of the skin in the lower part of the stomach. He lingered on until four A.M. the next morning in tortures, with short intervals of comparative quiet; about that time death began to gain the mastery over life. His devoted wife often knelt by and prayed with him. The bullet extracted from the body is precisely the same as that in use for the cavalry pistol; a carbine cartridge and some wadding were found near the house of the deceased. It is to be hoped that the assassin will soon be discovered. Jaulnah, April 25.—Athenæum, May 6. A later paper states that private intelligence had reached the presidency to the effect that a trooper of the 3rd L.C. had been taken into custody on suspicion of being the perpetrator of the murder of Lieut. Johnstone. The suspicion is founded on the fact of the man having applied for leave of absence and been refused; on which occasion he had some angry words with the deceased.

THE MADRAS UNIVERSITY.—The anniversary of the university was celebrated on the 15th April. The occasion was more numerously attended than on former years, the attractive force being the rumoured intention of the Governor to enunciate his educational views and plans. As was anticipated, Sir Henry, after the ordinary routine of business had been disposed of, addressing the president of University Board (Mr. Advocate-General Norton), reiterated the opinion he had in previous years expressed, that the Madras High School had not fulfilled the expectations entertained of it. He was fully aware that, in proficiency of attainments, the students of the Madras institution would not suffer by comparison with the élèves of the colleges of Bengal or Bombay; but it was in point of numbers that the latter establishments were very greatly in advance. For the languishing condition of the High School in this respect, he professed himself unable to discover any adequate reason; but, by way of infusing fresh life into it, raising it if possible to a position of equality with the sister establishments in the neighbouring presidencies, he had come to the resolution of reconstructing the Council of Education, with whom would rest the organization of such schemes as appeared adapted to render the existing educational resources more efficient, and the adoption of measures for the diffusion of education throughout the presidency by means of provincial schools. The president of this new council, he proposed, should be the Hon. D. Elliot, with whom should be joined as vice-presidents, Messrs. G. Norton and Walter Elliot, Sir T. V. Stonhouse, Mr. W. Morehead, and Sir Henry Montgomery. The names of the members were also read over, amounting to twenty, including the leading men in the various classes of society, European, East-Indian, Hindu, and Mahomedan. Sir Henry, in the course of his oration, expressed himself decidedly in favour of a very unpretending standard of education in English. It was of primary importance, he insisted, to ground native scholars well in their own vernacular tongues; superadding such instruction in European science and literature as would not interfere with the efficient accomplishment of this main object.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDER.

CONSOLIDATED MEDICAL STAFF MONEY.

Fort St. George, April 22, 1851.—The Right Hon. the Governor in Council is pleased to declare, in conformity with the regulations in Bengal, that the rule* under which no assistant-surgeon is entitled to consolidated medical staff salary, or to head-money in lieu of it, for the charge of native troops, unless he has passed the required examination in Hindoostanee, is not applicable to assistant-surgeons of her Majesty's service, their charge of native troops being merely incidental and temporary.

ROBBERY OF THE ORIENTAL BANK.

The robbers who plundered this bank three month since have been discovered. On the evening of Saturday, the 8th February, the head native cash-keeper stated that he counted the money, amounting to about 12,000*l.*, of which 9,500*l.* were notes of the Bombay Bank. They were locked up in the safe in the strong room as usual, the keys being taken charge of by the European assistant treasurer, who saw that the boxes were all in the strong room, but had no responsibility for their contents. On Monday morning, at ten o'clock, when the bank was opened, the notes were found wanting; the other cash was safe, the locks were all found fast and right, and the keys in their proper places, with no appearance of either having been tampered with. The numbers of the notes were immediately advertised—the notes themselves were desired to be stopped, when a panic arose, a run on the bank was threatened, and an intimation was issued that all notes would be cashed as usual—the Oriental Bank running the risk of the loss. Suspicion attached to the native employés: the head cash-keeper was dismissed, and Dorabjee Hormusjee, a Parsee also, in whom the utmost confidence was placed, appointed for a time to act in his stead. For two months and more no clue to the robbery could be discovered. At last, the employés of the police got on the track: it was reported to them that Dorabjee had some bank-notes he wished to dispose of—an interview with him was contrived, when he said that a party with whom he was acquainted was possessed of a considerable amount of notes, of which he wished to get quit. After some further arrangements, it was agreed that the parties who had assumed the character of money-dealers should bring cash with them to Dorabjee's house, and arrangements would be concluded; this was accordingly done, when the notes were found in his possession. He was at once secured, and is now in custody—the great bulk of the missing cash has been recovered, and the whole circumstances of the robbery are likely very speedily to become known. Dorabjee is a young man of good family, and until of late he has borne the highest character, no suspicion ever for a moment attaching to him. For some months he has been living extravagantly, and entering into house-building speculations much beyond any money he could fairly have come by—the results are now manifest; his guilt has been established, and that of others will soon be revealed. As men of business the Parsees have generally borne the highest character amongst us,—the present mishap is altogether unaccountable.—Bombay Times, May 14.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE LONDON MAIL of March 7th reached Bombay on the 4th April.

NATIVE FEMALE EDUCATION.—A Surat correspondent of the Bombay Telegraph gives us a sketch of a lecture on female education, delivered in the vernacular, by a young Brahmin of that city. The most interesting statement in the lecture was that a class of Brahmins in Surat, called "Nagar Brahmins," had always been accustomed to instruct their wives and daughters in reading, writing, and singing, and that the females of the caste were remarkable for the regularity and decorum of their lives.

GAOL ATTRACTIONS.—The grand jury of Bombay have suggested a new cause for the late increase of crime in the capital of this presidency. They declare that both the gaol and the house of correction are more attractive than dreadful to the prisoners confined therein, and that numbers of criminals have been known to commit offences solely with the view of being again incarcerated. The solitary imprisonment and hard labour, which usually accompany the sentence of imprisonment, are said to be mere moonshine, as natives do not care about solitary confinement; it affords the means of indulging the dolce far niente propensity, which is one of the strongest elements of the native character; there exist no means of making them work, if disinclined. The gaols are the most popular almshouses in Bengal. Even the common slang terms express this idea; the prisoners calling the gaol "Mother" and "House of Fortune."

THE WHEEL TAX FRAUD COMMISSION has closed its labours: the only results likely to arise from these will be the dismissal of a few native employees, the disclosure of the loss of 3,000*l.* to the public by the frauds of parties unknown, and the exposure of an amount of laxity in business-matters on the part of various public servants of distinction almost incredible. On their part there is no evidence of fraud or ill intention of any sort, but a sad exhibition of lack of discretion.—Bombay Times, May 14.

MR. MACKAY.—A letter from Guzerat of the 8th inst. mentions, we regret to state, the alarming illness of Mr. Mackay, the cotton commissioner.—Bombay Telegraph, May 14.

LIABILITY OF OWNERS OF SHIPS.—A case was tried before the Supreme Court, on the 3rd April, which appears to have excited considerable interest among the mercantile community of this presidency. Messrs. Peel, Cassels, and Co., merchants, received five bails of canvass from Liverpool by the Robina, and, on inspection, found that the goods had been greatly damaged by "chafing" in the voyage. As the bales when shipped were in good condition, the damage must have occurred during the voyage, and as the vessel had met with no bad weather, or other casualty, it must have been produced by careless stowage, they therefore claimed damages from the commander of the Robina. The Chief Justice decided for the plaintiffs on the ground of bad stowage.

CEYLON.

Our worst apprehensions as to the weather have been realized; the gale at Colombo has been attended with the loss of six lives, and the wreck of four vessels, one of them, the Colombo, of 610 tons, after she had cleared fully laden for London. In connection with this melancholy event, considerable blame seems to attach to the master-attendant. The Colombo was beached so close to the shore, that it seemed utterly incredible that any lives could possibly be lost under the circumstances; and in proportion was the astonishment and indignation of the public when they learned that six of the people whom they had seen sitting calmly on the wreck in the early morning, had, in the course of a few hours, perished in getting ashore.

Floods and boisterous weather have prevailed over the chief portion of the coffee districts. Several bungalows have been blown down, and some stores damaged. In many places, also, the coffee bushes have been stripped and injured, and it is to be feared that considerable loss of property will be the result. In the neighbourhood of Colombo, the inundation has produced much damage, and a good deal of distress amongst the native population.

Capt. Watson's court-martial is at an end; the decision is not known.—Colombo Observer, May 10.

CHINA.

THE "PEKIN," WITH THE LONDON MAIL OF February 24th, reached Hong-kong April 14th; and the Malta, with the London Mail of March 24th, reached Penang May 4th.

The disarrangement of trade in southern China, consequent upon continued turbulence in the Kwang-si and Kwang-tung provinces, is now become of such magnitude, that the period appears to have arrived when it is necessary for the representatives of foreign powers, resident in this country, to enter upon some correspondence with the imperial government upon the subject. It would appear that the imperial commissioner Li and his aid the Governor Chau-tien-sieh, have been either unable to concentrate their forces, or obliged to retire before their antagonists. A late report runs, that the district towns of Ho and Kai-kieu, both situated on the river Ho, the former in the province of Kwang-si, the latter adjoining it in the north-western part of Kwang-tung, have been attacked and pillaged, and that every officer, civil or military, has been put to indiscriminate carnage; the wealthy inhabitants having been held to ransom. This report appears to a great extent to be well founded.

Governor Yeh has returned from Ying-teli to Canton; and it is now certain that his diplomacy has been insufficient to check the rebels. His return appears to have been the signal for numerous bands of discontented spirits to take their departure for the field of action, and what effect it may have upon the mass has yet to be seen. For ought we know to the contrary, the residents in Canton are slumbering on the surface of a volcano. The taking of Kwe-lin-fu still requires confirmation.

It is nearly a month since information was sent to us from the north that the young emperor had remitted all dues and deficits, as an act of grace, to signalize his accession to the throne: a similar remission was made in 1840, on the occasion of Taoukwang attaining his sixtieth year. It will have been the remission of these dues and deficits that gave rise to the report of an abolition of the imperial salt monopoly; it being pretty certain that there is a greater accumulation of arrears on this gabel than on any other. The revenue derived from salt is raised, on the sea-coast, principally in the shape of a land-tax; the sum paid for permission to manufacture it being somewhat after the rate of a quarter of a dollar per acre per annum.

By the present mail, Don Sinibaldo de Mas, Spanish envoy, takes his departure for Europe; and we are informed that her most Catholic majesty has determined on refraining from further attempt to negotiate with the imperial court, and from keeping a legation in China. We presume, however, that it is not her majesty's intention to leave the trade with this country without a superintendent of some kind, although it is rumoured that no definite arrangement has yet been determined on.

The Peking Gazette contains the following:—"Luh-keen-ying, governor of the Kieu nan and Keang se provinces, in a memorial to the throne, dated the 10th of February, says,—All sects of false religion burn incense, fast, and live upon vegetable diet to gather money. Amongst such the Roman Catholics are notorious, worshipping the cross, and caring alike neither for heaven nor for ancestors: under the cloak of religion they transgress the law. To put the people in good paths, it is requisite to demolish bad religions, and put forward good ones. The classics should be taught to every one, even to the peasants, and then no error would find entrance."—Friend of China, April 24.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

The intelligence from the Cape is to the 2nd May. The Governor was still at King William's Town on the 23rd of April, waiting for reinforcements. The Singapore, with troops, had reached the Cape on the 24th, and they were despatched by a steamer to head-quarters. Patrols had been sent out, in different directions, to harass the Caffres and destroy their resources, it being their time of harvest.

Major-General Somerset set out from Fort Hare with a strong patrol to the Kat River; but later accounts represent that the troops had been halted in the basin of the river, Gen. Somerset having been directed by the Commander-in-Chief not to move forward, most probably owing to the attempt made by Krelli to induce Pato to withdraw from the British cause.

The enemy, Hottentots and Caffres, were in great force in the mountain fastnesses of the Kat Berg, Eland's Berg, and the Chamie, thus presenting a most difficult front to the colonial troops, at the same time having the whole extent of the Amatola to retire upon in the event of having their position forced in the first instance. A Burgher force of 400 men had assembled at Shilo.

Report had reached Graham's Town to the effect that a convoy of waggons sent thence to Fort Hare with supplies was attacked when near Birt's deserted mission station, a few miles east of the Kat River, by a large body of Hottentots and Caffres, the officer in charge, Capt. W. Ayliff, being thrown off his guard by a party of rebel Hottentots riding up in the uniform of the Cape Mounted Rifles. Capt. Ayliff had his horse shot, and the Fingo escort, supposing him killed, retired, but were speedily rallied; they recaptured the oxen which had been driven off by the assailants, and succeeded ultimately in reaching Fort Hare with the whole of their charge.

A patrol into Seyolo's country, under Major Wilmot, appears to have been ably and gallantly executed. Seyolo's country was completely traversed, and it was fully ascertained that the great body of his men and all their cattle are in the Amatola, where, it is said, Sandilli has with him a force of 5,000 men, well equipped, and prepared to dispute the ground with the British troops. From the report of Major Wilmot, it appears that, in the three days' movements, in a very difficult country, the enemy were completely baffled, and between thirty and forty of them killed in the several skirmishes. The Fingoes are said to have behaved remarkably well—the chief of the fighting falling to the share of Lieut. Griffith, with about 200 men, one-fourth of whom were Fingoes. The second night the patrol bivouacked on a very lovely spot on the banks of the Kieskamma, some twenty or thirty shots being fired on the pickets during the night, but without damage. Among the killed was Umlanjeni's man, who boasted that he bore a charmed life, and that no bullet could have effect upon him. "Having effected the object of my patrol," the Major says, "I returned to head-quarters, having traversed the whole of Seyolo's country, and driven him out of it; and also having destroyed many kraals and large quantities of Caffre corn and 'mealies,' which were found collected."

Fort Brown was attacked on the 10th April by a combined force of Caffres and Hottentots, who carried off the whole of the stock at the post.

Col. Mackinnon left King William's Town on the 15th April, with 3,000 men, on a patrol in Stock's and Seyolo's country, returning on the 19th. They had a sharp conflict with the enemy upon the 16th, when 150 Caffres were killed, and a greater number wounded; villages and cornfields were devastated, and the Caffres driven in every direction. On the following day, a supply of cattle was thrown into Fort Cox, and the troops had orders to return through the Amatolas, to induce the enemy to descend from their fastnesses, and assail them at many favourable passes; but not the slightest opposition was offered. Every wounded man was brought off, as well as the killed. Among the latter was Adj. Fletcher, 73rd reg., who accompanied a detachment of Armstrong's Horse, under Lieut. Robertson, C.M.R., who pursued the enemy most gallantly, though rashly, and had some of his men cut off, and Lieut. Morris, of Armstrong's Horse, severely wounded.

Some serious disclosures had been made at King William's Town, which show that the conspiracy among the Hottentots is much deeper and more wide-spread than many were led to believe. It is said that the Cape Corps has supplied Sandilli with large quantities of ammunition, and that on examination of the carbines of the disbanded men, all, with one or two exceptions, were found loaded with blank cartridge. This may account for the little execution done by these men, and may afford us a clue to the loss of Adjutant Gordon and the gallant men of the 91st, at an early period of the war. An official notice, relative to this conspiracy, states that two Hottentot women had arrived from Sandilli's, where the deserters of the Cape Mounted Rifles are, for the purpose of tampering with this corps and the Albany levy, by Sandilli's desire. They were immediately arrested; one of the women turned Queen's evidence, which led to important disclosures and to the arrest of a Caffre mule waggoner, called Jack, who, after some intimidation, also turned Queen's evidence, acknowledging that he has been in constant communication with Sandilli. Upon this the Cape Corps was immediately paraded, and several leading characters called out and made prisoners.

A good deal of excitement prevailed at King William's Town, in consequence of intelligence from Krelli's country, leading to the full belief that the Ama-Galeka chief, Krelli, is deeply implicated in the war. It is affirmed that there were with Krelli about 200 Hottentot rebels, many of them being deserters from the Cape Mounted Rifles, and that these miscreants have burnt down the trading station of Messrs. Crouch, on the Commama, not far from Krelli's kraal, and plundered it of all the property. It is supposed that the chief, with about half his tribe, is now openly engaged in hostilities. Krelli had also sent messages to Umhala and Pato to attack the English. This information induced the Governor to countermand a large patrol, which was just on the eve of starting to scour a portion of the enemy's country. Later advices, however, give the satisfactory assurance of the unshaken fidelity of Pato and his tribe. Pato, as well as Umhala, is considered by Caffre custom as belonging to that division of the Caffre nation of which Krelli is the paramount chief—the Gaika tribes being the other great division of the Caffre family.

In rejecting the warlike proposal made to him, Pato seems to have acted, not merely with great decision, but with consummate prudence. On being informed of the arrival of Krelli's messengers at his kraal, he proceeded there—declining, however, to communicate with them until he had assembled his people, when he requested the messengers to state their message, which was to the effect that he called upon Pato and Umhala to join him in aiding Sandilli to drive the white men into the sea. This message having been proclaimed in the hearing of the assembled throng, Pato desired the messengers to retire while his people consulted upon the subject. This having been done, they were recalled, when Pato desired his chief councillor to declare to them the decision to which the tribe had arrived; that they were unanimous in their refusal to obey the order of the Ama-Galeka chief—charging him, at the same time, with breach of faith in having sent a dun ox to Smith in token of amity, and then, in defiance of this solemn pledge, provoking hostilities—that they had declared themselves in favour of the English, and with the English would stand or fall. Umhala seems to have acted very differently from Pato. He received the message of Krelli with great complacency, and at once afforded assurance that his behest should be complied with.

The Governor has been induced to restore their arms to 118 of the disbanded Cape Mounted Rifles, their good conduct having been guaranteed by old and stanch non-commissioned officers; and, as it is said, everything promising that they will be faithful to the British cause.

The latest advices leave no doubt that Krelli had openly joined the belligerent party; he had been personally engaged in conflict. By reports from all quarters, however, the Caffres were becoming heartily tired of the war. They would not be allowed to rest in the low countries, and being driven to the Amatola mountains, they would experience much suffering from the cold and continued harassing. Information had been received through one of Krelli's great councillors that the Gaikas cannot hold out much longer; that thirty of their great men had fallen, and that they could not count the inferior victims. They were in perpetual alarm, driving their cattle higher and thicker, to the great injury of the milch cattle and calves. Pato remained steady and was in high spirits, occasioned, it is said, by the punishment inflicted on Stock, Seyolo, &c.

Intelligence had been received at Graham's Town that Krelli had endeavoured to oppose the Burghers and other forces at the Imvani, and had been completely routed with considerable loss, having narrowly escaped with his own life. He had retired to the "great place," and had called on the Fingoes in his country to join him, but without effect. Another account of the Commando against Krelli and his allies states, that the Boers, &c., moved against the Temboes (Tambookies) in the upper part of the Bolota, where Krelli, with a large force, met them; that a brisk encounter ensued, when the colonial forces retrograded to the Imvani neck before the vastly superior numbers brought against them (stated to be more than four to one); that they made a stand, and opened a tremendous fire on the pursuing Ama-Galekas, who soon retreated in the utmost confusion, the allied forces of Burghers and British charging them and carrying all before them—even in their ardour getting completely within the Caffre ranks; that the Temboes stood their ground much better, and continued to fight until the victorious troops returned from the pursuit of the Ama-Galekas and fell on their rear, when they were dispersed, and fled in all directions. Eighteen petty chiefs had been killed.

On the north-eastern frontier, there was a successful engagement with the Chief Morosi. No casualty occurred on our side, and the enemy left 200 dead on the field. From the Tambookie country an account had also been received of a victory gained by Capt. Tylden, Royal Engineers, in which the enemy, 4,000 strong, was put to flight, leaving 300 dead on the field.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

Captain G. Siddons, of the 1st Bengal Cavalry, has increased our knowledge of the creed of the Sikhs, by a translation of the Vichitra Natak, or "Beautiful Epitome," a fragment of the Gurmukh entitled the "Book of the Tenth Pontiff," i.e. Guru Govind, the last of the Sikh Padshahs, whose names and acts are fully detailed in the History of the Punjab, vol. i. c. 4. Subjoined is a portion of the 1st chapter of the Vichitra Natak, as published in the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal :—

"THERE IS ONE GOD.

"O good and holy One! by Thy favour I commence this beautiful Epitome of the verbal declarations of the ten padshahs. "To Thy power I am obedient with my whole heart, and shall complete this work if thou deignest Thine assistance.

"THE PRAISE OF TIME."

"Thou dwellest in Heaven and upon earth,
Thou destroyest armies of wickedness,
In war thou art ever victorious,

Ever Superior.

Thy power is not only great, but perfect,
Thy refuge is incomparable,
Thy brilliancy is illimitable,

Equal to the Sun's.

Thou comfortest all who are virtuous,
Thou correctest every evil precept,
Thou puttest to flight all iniquity :

My hope is in thee.

Noble Creator of the world, all hail!
Who mercifully protectest the good,
Who bestowest all favours upon me,

To thy second, all hail!

Even one brightness

Ungenerated,

God above all gods,

King above all kings

Incorporeal,

And everlasting.

Formless and spotless,

Parent of each age.

Exterminator! I bow to thee.

"Without body, unchangeable, eternal, boundless, never aged, peculiar, never infantile, never youthful, neither rich nor poor, invisible, unmarked, without colour, passionless, illimitable, without countenance, nameless, houseless, playing with fierce brilliancy, never hostile, without counterfeit, more devout than all Jogis, essentially pure. Invincible, fearless, desired by all, never-fated, undisguised, without commencement, yet infinite, perfect, bearing no enmity, primeval, friendly, filled with abundance, glorious, tranquil, without affection, without deceit, impartial, chaste, amiable, and omnipresent. Vast, pure, invincible, ancient, before all that has been and that will be, who knoweth neither sorrow nor anger, always new, unborn, aiding, well acquainted with all things. Thou knowest of the past, the present, and the future; obedience to thee, oh unchangeable One, never infirm. Obedience to thee, thou God of gods, thou King of kings, who desirest power from no one, thou eternal One, greater than all the potentates of the earth! Indescribable, inexhaustible, friendly, sanctified amongst saints, desiring nothing, the chief of every enjoyment.

"Sometimes thou art as the principles of truth, of passion, or of ignorance. Sometimes thou appearest as a man, sometimes as a woman; sometimes thou art as an angel, at others, as a devil; it often pleaseth thee to assume various forms. Sometimes thou blossomest as a lovely flower, or thou art a bee and goest thy way buzzing; sometimes thou speedest on the swift wings of the wind. How can I tell of thee who art indescribable?

"Sometimes as an echo thou reverberatest pleasantly; now as a huntsman thou killest with arrows. Sometimes thou art a stag, which approaches the snare; sometimes thou art more beautiful than the god of love. No one can tell what form it may please thee to assume, nor where thou residest, nor what disguise thou wilt choose to go about in; none can call thee by thy name. Alas! how can I tell of thee, who art indescribable? Thou, who hast no father, nor mother, nor brethren, nor sons, nor grandsons. Thou, who wast never nursed; without family, kindred, or friends, without a house, without an army, without followers. Powerful over all kings, Lord of all lords.

"MIGHTY TIME!

"In thy left hand is a bow, in thy right a sword exceedingly bright in appearance; thy teeth are firm set, and innumerable; thy devour thousands. Thy kettledrum is for ever sounding; a white canopy is above thy head; thou art ever merry, and thy diadem glistens brightly; thy voice is tremendous, and thy horn resounds like the howlings of the damned amidst the flames at the judgment day.

"Time's bell sounds louder than Heaven's thunder,

The sea, so mighty, hears it and is still;

His necklace ringing, his anklets jingling;

Though loudly sounding, create no alarm,

How bright his chaplet! Siva sees it abashed,

Its colours resplendent, perfectly chaste,

And his gold earrings charm all who behold.

"Time created all classes of things. Mammillary, oviparous, viviparous, mineral, and vegetable. He is the Maker of the world and of every portion of the four quarters; he made the earth and the ocean. He composed the Védas, the Korán, and the Puránas. He formed the day and the night, the sun and the moon, angels and devils, and warriors; with his iron pen, He marks each man's fate on his forehead. The most powerful succumb to Time!

"He has produced many, and exterminated many, and reproduced, but to destroy again. Who knows the extent of his kindness, which thousands have experienced and daily are experiencing?

"Time has fashioned many like Krishna; he has created and destroyed several like Ráma; Mohammads likewise in abundance, who, when their days were numbered, died. How many wise men have passed away! but Time, who conquers all and everything, remains unvanquished still. Rámas, Krishnas, Vishnus, all have vanished from the face of the earth, but Time remaineth yet!

"The dwellers in heaven, the inhabitants of the moon, have, in their turn, been destroyed by time. Every sage and every philosopher must submit to his devouring jaws. From the days of Mádhátá even until now, every prince has been and is subject to Time.

"He pardons those who worship him, but condemns the wicked.

"His shining scimitar instils terror,

His anklets resounding are heard afar,

His locks are lovely, and he hath four arms;

Even death crouches beneath his weapons;

He hath a flaming tongue, and dreadful teeth;

His shankh,* so noisy, fills the world with dread;

Dark is his visage, yet withal is full

Of beauty, as his attributes are chaste.

"The canopy above Time is white and lustrous, and the sun is humbled in comparison with his splendour. He hath large red eyes, whose pupils are like the luminary of day, they gaze upon myriads.

"His countenance is so beautiful, that the proud daughters of the gods cannot compare with it. Sometimes he seemeth a warrior, who taketh his bow in his hand, or as a king, who soundeth his loud kettledrum. When armed, the bravest heroes fly from before him. He handleth his sword like a powerful warrior. He is mighty in battle, and to be feared, nevertheless he is an ocean of mercy,—always kind, always consistent. Kings tremble when they hear thee, the world is thy garment, those who believe in thee will be forgiven. Thou resemblest a black cloud, whose loveliness is perfect; nevertheless thou hast four arms, and when thou holdest the club, the mace, the shankh, and the discus, thou art terrible.

"Countenance unequalled,

Excelling the God of Love;

Loveliness unrivalled,

Coveted by all mankind;

Forehead like the full moon

Which humbles even Shéa,†

With his snake-like necklace.

Time reproveth the sinful.

Arm'd with a scimitar,

He scourgeth evil doers.

He hath a massive club,

And bendeth the pliant bow.

He soundeth his loud shankh,

And his bell'd girdle ringeth.

Oh Lord! I bow to thee,

Accept my humility.

Thou hast various forms,

And the great gods are alarmed.

Thou art above all gods,

The Prince of benevolence.

Thou art the First, and Last,

With attributes infinite;

* Conch used by Hindu gods as a war-horn.

† Shéa (Siva) is represented in Hindu mythology as wearing a snake round his neck.

* The Supreme Being is personified by Kali, or Time.

Sin sees thy flaming sword
And trembling tries to escape.
Time holds the sword and bow;
All foes he putteth to flight.
His person is so bright
That I am fascinated;
His anklets sound loudly
And create a strange noise.
He is bright as lightning;
My love for him is sincere.

The sound from thy anklets is pure, very pure;
Thy face flashes like lightning, like lightning;
Thy voice is of the loudest, the loudest,
Like the cub in the forest—the forest.
Thou art the past, present, future,
And only solace in this iron age.
Thou art present everywhere
With thy bland and delighted countenance.
In thy head are two savage teeth
Which frighten away all thy enemies.
When angry thou seizest a sword,—
Devout and brave men shout forth, Victory!
Thy armlets and thy anklets sound,
And mountains tremble at thy heavy tread.
Thy girdle and thy gong are loud:
Spirits and mortals all marvel at thee.
Thy wheel revolves throughout all space,
And none can check, or hasten on, its course.
Thy mandates who can disobey
Amongst the dwellers of the earth, the sea:—

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

TUESDAY, June 17, 1851.

SMOLLETT, in the Proem to one of his novels, introduces an author encouraging a bookseller to publish a libel he had written, by assuring him that, if he should be prosecuted for it and flogged at a cart's tail, his fortune would be made. He might have added, as a further encouragement, that, if the prosecution failed, his prospects would have been brighter still.

The break-down of the prosecution in the case of the great Indian commissariat contractor, Lala Jotee Persaud, must have exalted that personage far above his most sanguine hopes; it has insured to him all his vast gains; it has spread the hue of honesty over all his deeds; it has exhibited him in the light of a victim of unjust and vindictive persecution, and diffused his fame over the Western as well as the Eastern world.

Upon the supposition of the Lala's entire innocence, there is, however, but a very narrow basis upon which to build a charge of tyranny and oppression against the Indian Government. Commissariat contractors, their gomashas and agents, are not educated in a system of ethics so strict and pure as to furnish strong presumptions, à priori, of innate abhorrence of fraud on their part; and when Indian journalists allege that "any man's character and property" might be placed in jeopardy by such a proceeding, we would suggest that every man is not a commissariat contractor, nor are all contractors likely to be exposed to such a violent degree of suspicion as Lala Jotee Persaud. "The commissariat of India," observes an "Indian Magistrate" in the Times, "is popularly believed to be the least efficient and most lax department of the public service; it is the only department in which the natives are still the chief agents, and in which matters are still conducted on the ancient native system; there is consequently immense opportunity for fraud and overcharge, and the public in India do not scruple to allege many things to the disadvantage of the department and of individuals." During the active operations of war, it is next to impossible, as experience in the Peninsula of Europe amply showed, to check the various charges; but when hostilities in the Punjab ceased, representations were made to the Indian Government, by informers,—themselves parties to and participants in the transactions,—that the most extensive and audacious frauds had been perpetrated, and that a great portion of the enormous expenditure incurred by the Government in the commissariat department had gone into the pockets of the Lala and his agents.

Jotee Persaud, a mahajun of much ability and shrewdness, as well as of prodigious wealth, admits in his memorial to the President of the Council of India, that, as contractor for the supply of grain, stores, &c., in the Cabul, the Sutlej, and the Punjab campaigns, he had made "large profits on his transactions with the Government," insisting, nevertheless, that those profits were perfectly legitimate. It is due to the Lala to say that Lord Gough, offering "no opinion on his financial arrangements," has borne testimony to the efficient manner in which the troops were supplied by Jotee Persaud during the Gwalior, Sutlej, and Punjab campaigns.

The disclosures commenced as early as February, 1849; the informers' petitions being addressed at first to the local commissariat officer, then to the higher commissariat authorities. Jotee Persaud states, and we believe with truth, that one of these informers was a convicted felon, who, before accusing him, had attempted to extort money from him as the price of his silence. Truth, however, does sometimes ooze out from tainted sources. It appears that, at first, the Military Board hesitated and was divided in opinion as to the expediency of entertaining charges that appeared to spring from a mercenary motive; and ultimately the Board decided that the matter should be submitted to the Government, with a candid statement of the difference of opinion existing amongst its members. The President of the Council of India in Council (Sir John Littler) called for the original petitions, and, after duly considering the subject, instructed the Government of the North-West Provinces to cause "a thorough and minute investigation" of the matter by the proper civil authority at Agra. Accordingly, one part of the case was subjected to "the most searching inquiry" by Mr. C. B. Denison, first as officiating magistrate, and afterwards as officiating joint magistrate under Mr. M. R. Gubbins, the officiating magistrate, who reported that he had examined the whole proceedings, and one of two of the principal witnesses, "especially Muheysh Doss, of Delhi," and that he was "fully satisfied that the existence of most extensive frauds had been established." Meanwhile, other charges had been investigated by Mr. R. K. Dick, magistrate of Bijnore, and Mr. E. Wyly, joint magistrate of Bareilly, both of whom reported that they had discovered proofs of frauds to a great extent. These several reports were dated in June and July, 1850.

Now it would have been a very extraordinary, not to say culpable, forbearance on the part of the authorities,—provoking a suspicion, which would probably have been expressed, that European agents, whom it might not be convenient to implicate, were involved in these charges,—had no proceeding been taken upon such reports, declaring that proof existed of “most extensive frauds,” of “frauds to a great extent;” and the only course of proceeding was to put the accused parties, Jotee Persaud and his principal agents, upon their trial. This course was accordingly directed by the Government of the North-West Provinces on the 23rd July, 1850, the order having been subsequently reported to and approved by the Governor-General.

It is said, and this is a main ground upon which the prosecution is impeached, that the proceeding was commenced in consequence of a suit instituted by Jotee Persaud against the Government in the Supreme Court of Calcutta, to recover fifty-seven lacs of rupees, which he alleged were due to him on a balance of accounts; that it was, in short, a dishonourable expedient to escape from the fulfilment of a just obligation. A reference to dates will settle this point at once. Although the Government authorities might, without any imputation upon their motives, have directed proceedings against Jotee Persaud after the institution of his suit in the Supreme Court, the fact is, that this suit was not commenced until upwards of two months after the proceedings were directed to be taken against the party in the Mofussil Courts, and whilst he was actually held in personal recognizances to appear and answer the charges. These facts are admitted in the Lala's own memorial,* wherein he states that, being much inconvenienced by his detention at Agra for two months, he applied for and obtained permission to leave the station upon entering into personal recognizances in Rs. 20,000, to re-appear at Agra when called upon; “that, having been thus released from Agra, he was advised to bring an action in her Majesty's Supreme Court for the amount of his claims against the Government, where any question of fraud would be speedily brought to an issue, and he relieved from the suspense and vexation with which he was threatened in the Mofussil Court; and that, in pursuance of such advice, he repaired to Calcutta, and on the 3rd of October, his attorneys served the attorney of the East-India Company with a notice of proceedings for the recovery of the balance due to him, amounting to Rs. 57,79,239, with interest.” The fact, therefore, seems to be that the civil suit in the Supreme Court was suggested by the astuteness of the Lala's legal advisers, as an expedient to deter the Government from proceeding against him criminally in the Mofussil Court, and this is the fair inference from the terms employed in his memorial. The impression of Jotee Persaud, and apparently that of his advisers, was, that this suit would cause the suspension of the criminal proceeding, and under this impression he forfeited his recognizances, and was not undecieved until the warrant of the Mofussil judge was backed by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court.

The charges, based upon the information in the possession of the prosecutors, imputed to Jotee Persaud the perpetration of enormous frauds, supported by perjury, with the subornation of which he was accused. The difficulties encountered by the Government in grappling with this case are described by Mr. Wyly as almost unexampled even in India, “where justice never strikes down the wealthy culprit until all the weapons of intrigue, perjury, intimidation, and corruption have been fairly worn out in his defence.”

The Lala, he said, commanded influence, as the head of wealthy firms at Agra, Meerut, and other places; the whole body of the native agents of the commissariat, most of whom were his dependents, were banded together on his side, and their machinations had been of a peculiarly daring character, the names of English officers having been made improper use of, and threats having been held out against gentlemen in the civil and military services. Having no other direct evidence of the frauds than that of the native agents, men notorious for lubricity of morals, and exposed to all this influence and to all these machinations, no wonder that the first charge should have broken down: it is worthy of remark that the Government are accused, in the Indian journals, of folly in putting the Lala upon trial at all, however strong the moral conviction of his guilt, when they had only native evidence upon which to rely. Muheysh Doss, before referred to, who had sworn to certain facts in support of the claims of Jotee Persaud, afterwards confessed he had sworn falsely, and had been suborned to do so by the Lala; and he deposed upon oath to “the truth,” directly contradicting his first deposition. The credit of this man was, upon this ground, impeached, and his last testimony was not believed. Another native witness, who had in like manner deposed in favour of Jotee Persaud, and subsequently contradicted that deposition, went further, for, upon the trial, he repudiated his second deposition and reverted to his first.

It is plain that, with witnesses of this character, justice has no chance. To maintain, however, that in such circumstances, no attempt should be made to enforce the law, is to offer impunity to crime. All that the executive authority can do is to subject the party accused to the scrutiny of an impartial tribunal, and if he should escape conviction through the treachery and falsehood of the witnesses, the executive authority has nothing wherewith to inculcate itself,—it has done its duty.

Very sinister prognostications have been uttered respecting the effects which this abortive prosecution will exert upon our authority in India. We believe its effects will be simply these:—to convince the native population of the impartiality of our administration of justice, and to teach native rogues how great are the chances of impunity.

Major Lang, in his last report, says that the proportion of female children to males in all the tribes in Kattiawar is now so nearly equal, and the progressive increase of the female population so regular, that there would appear to be ground for believing that the practice of infanticide must have become almost extinct in the province. “Let us no longer be accused of infanticide,” said one of the chiefs; “it has perished, never to revive; not another life shall be taken.” Cutch, in which the Jadejahs are numerous and isolated, is follow the example of Kattiawar.

The mayor of Tsing-ho, by name Seaou-ling-yu, in a disquisition upon the maritime trade with Canton, proves the absolute dependence of Europeans upon the Flowery Empire thus:—“The foreigners from the west are naturally fond of milk and cream; indulgence in these luxuries induces costiveness, when there is nothing but our rhubarb and tea that will clear their system and restore their spirits: if once deprived of these articles, they are immediately laid up.”

There is scarcely a country from the Oxus to the sea that has not its representative in the course of the year in Kurrachee. A new market-place is about to be constructed there for the general resort of traders.

INDIA AT THE GREAT EXHIBITION.

It is impossible to contemplate the stores of wealth comprehended in the Indian department of the Great Exhibition without being struck with surprise that the East-India Company should so long have neglected to make the world privy to their wonderful possessions. While individual enterprise contrived a few years ago to spread before the eyes of the British public a rich and handsome collection of the produce of Chinese industry, instructing and entertaining thousands who had hitherto believed the contents of the Celestial Empire to be a sealed book to outside barbarians, the museum of the Company in Leadenhall Street continued to present a meagre assemblage of rude and clumsy works. No one who had passed any portion of his life in India could, upon his return, pay a visit to the gloomy rooms up two pair back of the locale of the Home Government without being ashamed of the array. Excepting the comical automaton tiger, who was accustomed to devour a prostrate European to soft music, for the special delectation of that singular compound of grandeur and ferocity, of civilization and brutality, Tippoo Saib, there was—there is—nothing in the East-India House Museum which a visitor would care to remember. The venerable curators and cicerones seemed ashamed of their enforced idleness; they had little to classify, less to show, and nothing to say. Their offices, for which so wide a field of activity was open, had degenerated into mere sinecures; and although the works treating of India, and the commercial operations of the two countries, gave them some assurance of the existence of boundless stores, their belief was, on the other hand, shaken by the habitual absence of any accessions to their dreary stock. Equally barren were the rooms of the Royal Asiatic Society,—a few slabs, “an alligator stuffed,” and a beggarly account of empty boxes, was “all the store” that they could offer to an inquiring community. In fact, the public began to be ashamed of the miserable specimens of Indian produce with which their curiosity was mocked.

On a changé tout cela! India has sent forth contributions with profuse generosity; she has opened her cornucopia, and vindicated to the world her reputation for ilimitable wealth; and it is most gratifying to know that, when the Crystal Palace shall have fulfilled its “mission,” and the riches which it contains are scattered over the universe, all that India has sent, with the exception of the perishable goods, will be conveyed to the Leadenhall Street Museum, to inform and delight the thousands who may not have the means or opportunity of beholding them in Hyde Park.

We promised, in our last, to enter more minutely into a detail of the articles exhibited in the compartments of the Great Exhibition appropriated to India than we were enabled to do upon a cursory survey of the display. We feel the obligation to fulfil our promise the more imperative upon us, because, in the first place, there is nothing like a complete catalogue of the Indian stores extant; and, in the second, there is no one in the compartments to explain to strangers the uses of nine-tenths of what they may see. Dr. Royle, and his intelligent and active assistant, Mr. Downing, have enough to do to classify and arrange the continual additions to the stock, without becoming chaperons to the crowds of inquisitive visitors. A catalogue of the articles transmitted from Bengal has been printed at Calcutta and sent home; but the offerings of Madras and Bombay are nowhere named; and of the whole collection, catalogued or otherwise, we have nothing in the shape of description. It is expected, we suppose, that, as George Robins used to say, the vegetable tallow shall “speak for itself,” and the volatile oils “attest their own utility.”

The Koh-i-Noor continues the chief object of attraction. Its pecuniary value is now pronounced, upon the rule which governs the lapidary's purchase and sale of diamonds, to be 610,000*l.*—a nice little sum to be divided amongst the Punjab heroes, if Lord Ellenborough can succeed in procuring the transfer of the Mountain of Light to their prize-coffers. Pains have been taken, since we last wrote, to improve the means of seeing the diamond. The pedestal has not been raised, but a barricade has been constructed around the cage at a distance of four or five feet, which prevents people from concealing the view by nearly rubbing their noses, as was their wont, against the bars.

Second only in attraction to the Koh-i-Noor is a tent in one of the northern compartments, manufactured by the Thugs (we believe) at the Jubbulpore Penitentiary. It is not so much the material of the tent as the articles that it contains which draw the multitude to its portals during the whole of every day, and who are only restrained from effecting an entrance by stout barricades at either door. Within may be seen crimson, green, and blue velvet carpets (tuktposh), embroidered in gold; caps of costly gold cloth, i. e. the crown as worn by the King of Oude, and the turban or mundul sported by his prime minister. We cannot condemn them as tasteless pieces of head gear so long as Englishmen wear chimney-pots, but they are by no means as well calculated to set off the human face as the ordinary head-dress of a Bengal baboo. Near them is a teapoy supporting some exquisitely carved chessmen, some elaborately constructed boxes of ivory and silver, and about the floor are hookahs, carpets, and shawls, of considerable value and undeniable beauty. Outside of the tent, upon the western flank, runs a table, or counter, on which are disposed some capital clay figures (in good preservation) of native artisans, domestic servants, and others. These have been labelled, and it excites the special wonder of the shilling visitors that their countrymen in India should be waited upon by so many respectable-looking individuals as the Khansumalgees and Khetmutghars, who figure in muslins and gay puggrees. The figures are highly creditable to the skill of the Kishnaghur artist. On the eastern side of the tent are numerous marble and wooden models, which do not serve to elevate native art in popular estimation; and opposite these is a long counter, spread with numerous pieces of silk of various colours, fabricated at Cossimbazaar. They are much admired for their texture and their hue; and we may drop a hint to gentlemen abroad, that a few articles of this description will not form unacceptable presents to female friends at home, in the absence of Delhi scarfs and Cashmere shawls, of which, by-the-way, the Exhibition contains a great many goodly specimens. The scarfs and shawls are in glass cases, very tastefully disposed, and in the society of countless beautiful dress-pieces from the looms of Rajpootanah, Jeypore, Gowhatti, and Nagpore; sarees and doputtahs from Benares, and shawls from Rohilkund. The Cashmere shawls have been contributed by Mr. George Cheape, Bengal Civil Service, and Mr. Emerson, of the Peninsular and Oriental Navigation Company. It would swell the list to an unconscionable length were we to enumerate all the persons who have helped to represent India in the Crystal Palace, but we cannot omit to notice that the Rajah of Dholepore, in Rajpootanah, has been most liberal in his contributions of shawls, dress-pieces, kincobs, gold and silver rosewater-bottles and spice-boxes, diamond and emerald necklaces, stocks, bangles, rings, and garlands. The jewellery and gold and silver work are disposed in glass cases, vis-à-vis, in the western avenue, and attract innumerable devotees. Worthy companions of the “barbaric pearl and gold” are the light and elegant flagree silver ornaments, manufactured by the silversmiths of Cuttack, and worn only by European mem-sahibs; the agate betel-boxes; the ear-rings of the Burmese; the coins from Nepal; the gold and silver lace from Lucknow; the ornaments of native ladies, made by the sonars of Calcutta; the nuths, or nose-rings; the bejoo-bals, nongrees, and other armlets of Delhi, and the silver boxes from the Rajah of Ulwah, Rajpootanah, and the Tenasserim provinces. Nor has it been without due regard to its value as a curious piece of workmanship, that in one of the glass cases is placed a figure, 12 inches high, of a native of rank of Trichinopoly, formed of pith called the Netty shrub (Eschynomene Aspera, Linn.), a white coloured, corky-looking substance. For this, and many other articles of interest, the Exhibition is indebted to Mr. T. E. J. Boileau, of the Madras Civil Service, who appears to have entered most warmly into the objects of the Commission, and to have collected, at his own expense, and clearly described, not less than sixty specimens of produce and manufactures. Among these may be mentioned certain slabs and blocks of the fossilated minute shell-stone from Volatour, several petrifications, numerous saligramuns (stones highly venerated by the Hindoos), crystals, muslins, woollens, cord and twine from the fibres of the aloe, cutlery, models, musical instruments, and curiosities. Mr. Boileau's MS. notes are highly intelligent and interesting, especially those which relate to the history of musical instruments formed out of the scooped gourd.

Turning from the gay and brilliant objects, and walking to the southern extremity of the Indian collection, we find ourselves in what, after all, must be, to the philosopher, the statesman, and the merchant, the most attractive portion of the Oriental wealth of the British Crown. Along the counter is ranged an unsurpassable variety of oils,—medicinal, volatile, drying, fat, and solid,—from the fertile states of Rajpootana, from Benares, Patna, Meerut, Berhboom, Calcutta, and Singapore; in short, from Upper India to the Malayan peninsula! Also, a series of gums, resins, spices, condiments, sugars, starch, distilled spirits, dyes, and colours. From many of these a large accession to the Indian pharmacopœia has been obtained. We believe that it was during the government of Lord Auckland, and soon after the establishment of the Calcutta Medical College, that the professor of chemistry, Dr. O'Shaughnessy, was called upon to ascertain which of the botanical and other products of India might be made subservient to curative purposes, and the result was an invaluable report, and the immediate introduction into the maternæ medicæ abroad of many of the simples and drugs whose virtues until then were imperfectly known to the faculty. The extensive learning and research of the scientific men of Europe will doubtlessly be applied to the ascertainment of the suitability of much more of the produce of the vegetable and mineral world of India to medicinal purposes, in this and other kingdoms, than has hitherto been found to be of practical utility. And now that greater facilities exist for the transport of commodities overland, and the art of hermetically sealing volatile substances to prevent wastage by evaporation is becoming better understood, there can be little question of the extensive importation of useful additions to the pharmacopœia by all the principal European apothecaries and chemists. Of the oils, gums, and medicinal substances available for inspection in the Exhibition, there are not fewer than one hundred and sixty-three specimens, very many of which were not even known by name until now.

The timbers and fancy woods of the East Indies are very copiously represented in the space allotted to the vegetable kingdom. We count no fewer than 433 specimens, admirably classified. Still we miss the products of the vast forests to the west of India and the peninsula, and the forests of the north. There is not one contribution from Coorg or Canara; not an article from the coast of Malabar. Neither are there any of the woods of the Turaye, nor of the Himalayan chain. Everything seems to come from the Benares division, Rohilcund, Serampore, Chittagong, Assam, the Tenasserim provinces, Amherst, and Tavoy. Are we to infer that all the timber of India is comprehended in those districts, and that the produce of the rest of the country is a mere repetition of the offspring of the south-eastern provinces? Certainly no great exertion appears to have been taken to accumulate fresh specimens of timber from any source. All the contributions from Amherst and Tavoy were sent to the Hon. Company's Botanic Garden, Calcutta, so far back as 1835, by Mr. Blundell, the commissioner at Moulmein, who seems to have taken much pains to describe the objects to which such quality of wood is applied.

Great and successful endeavours have been made to illustrate the domestic life, agricultural pursuits, and method of manufacture common to the Hindoos. We cannot recall a single farming implement, plough, harrow, hoe, dibble, threshing, rake, mattock, reaping-hook, &c., of which a model is not here given with little clay figures of ryots working with them in the fields. All the varieties of corn-mill—all the methods of drawing water and irrigating land—all the descriptions of cart for the transport of produce—are faithfully represented. Among the models of manufactures, are a very complete indigo factory, in which the whole process of indigo making, from the placing the plant in the vat to its separation into cakes, is clearly shown; a primitive sugar-mill, cotton-gins of modern structure, spinning-jennies of the rudest kind, hand-loom, distilling apparatus, and tools employed in every kind of handicraft. It is instructive to observe how close a resemblance the simplest native implements of husbandry and manufacture bear to those which were in common use in England even as late as fifty years ago. It would seem that the obligation we were once under to the inventive genius of the East has scarcely been suitably acknowledged in the introduction of the advantages of British machinery. Excepting the cotton-jin, none of the improvements, which in this country expedite manufacture, reduce manual exertion, and multiply production, appear to have been adopted in India.

We shall not attempt to enumerate the fibrous substances which occupy the centre of the inner compartments to the south of the India branch. They are numerous and remarkable. We have seen Lancashire manufacturers contemplate them with much interest, and we have been assured by some of the most eminent Manchester men, that, in the raw produce of India now exposed to view, they have discovered material adapted to the loom, of the very existence of which they had previously no cognizance whatever. And further, the dyes exhibited in a contiguous department contain promise of rich and novel colour of the greatest value to manufacturers, who are constantly in search of novelty.

The success which attended the Diorama of the Overland Mail suggested several dioramas, which comprehended scenes in India, and illustrations of Indian life. To one of these, we believe, it was intended to attach a sort of museum of Indian curiosities. Alas, for the hopes of speculation! The Great Exhibition has anticipated every project of the kind, for there is nothing which private enterprise can produce that is not to be found within the walls of the Crystal Palace—nothing short of scenery which is not here displayed. In our last we enumerated several of the principal illustrations of European and native life to be found in the northern compartments. A little industry has enabled us to discern many more. Would you see the court of a native judge, guarded by sepoy, the sadder ameen himself, all cloth of gold and mofussil integrity?—It is to be found near the collector's encampment. Would you know how toddy-wallahs climb the palmyra? how ekkas and raths are formed and propelled? what bridges we have in India? what temples, palaces, houses, and huts? what palanquins, tonjons, boats, &c. &c.?—You will learn all here; and we will excuse you if you give a preference to the usages and structures of Europe. If there be one thing which is imperfectly illustrated, it is the religion of the Hindoos. There are, indeed, some clever representations of the remarkable pagodas in Southern India, and a cluster of tiny dû penates among the household oddities of the Hindoos. But why could not the Bombay Government have got up a model of the curious cave-temples of Elephanta and Karlee, and despatched a few marble representatives of the principal idols? A figure of Ganesha, another of Durga, in the character of Kali,—a specimen or two of the Vishnu, Parvati, and the Trimurti,—would have served to give the English visitor of the Exhibition a fair idea of the monstrous perversions of the Oriental heathen, and supplied material for reflection upon the varied influences of religious feeling on the sculptor. While the Greek, in his enthusiasm, exhausted his skill in imparting to the heroes and heroines of his mythology the ultraism of human beauty—while the Roman Catholic, labouring in the convent studio, invested his Madonnas and Saviours with the expression of divine attribute—the Hindoo statuary set form, proportion, and perspective at defiance, and lent alike to the face of destroyer and tutelary deity a leaden impassiveness, strangely at issue with the occupation of the god. Devotion guided the chisel and the pencil in Pagan Greece and Papistical Italy; the Hindoo, uninfluenced by religious fervour, carved from a given pattern,—the produce of uncultivated Brahminical taste,—and thought only of the wages of toil.

We have run through four columns of a second notice, and still we find many articles which have not yet been even named. Our readers must, therefore, suffer us to defer the conclusion of our sketch of the contributions of India until our next issue.

BANQUET TO SIR RICHARD ARMSTRONG.

On the 7th of June, the Directors of the East-India Company gave a great farewell banquet to Sir Richard Armstrong, commander-in-chief at Madras, at the London Tavern. Mr. Shepherd, the Chairman, presided, having on his right hand Sir Richard Armstrong, the guest of the evening. There were also present Lord Hardinge, Earl Granville, Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, M.P., Hon. J. E. Elliot, M.P., Lieut.-General Sir Willoughby Cotton, G.C.B., Lieut.-General Sir W. M'Bean, K.C.B., Sir James Brooke, K.C.B., Sir G. R. Clerk, K.C.B.; Baron C. Dupin, Chevalier de Burg, and Herr Von Visbahren, foreign commissioners to the Great Exhibition; Major-General Sir G. Pollock, G.C.B., Sir Claude Wade, C.B.; Peer Ibrahim Khan Bahadoor, native agent at the Court of Bhawalpore, &c.

The usual loyal and constitutional toasts having been disposed of,

The Chairman said: I beg to propose to you the health of our gallant and distinguished guest. In appointing Lieut.-General Sir R. Armstrong to the high and honourable office of Commander-in-Chief of the Company's Forces at Madras, and a member of the Council of that Presidency, the Court of Directors have the satisfaction of knowing that the gallant general is well entitled to their confidence, on the ground of his varied and distinguished services in her Majesty's army. He commenced his military career at a very early age, having served in the 24th regiment in Canada, and afterwards with the 5th at Gibraltar, until the peace of Amiens (from 1796 to 1801), and after a few years' interval, he succeeded in getting a company in the 97th, forming a portion of the expedition to Portugal. This brought him under the immediate command of the great captain of the age, under whose auspices he shined in the glories of the battles of Oporto and Busaco. Major Armstrong received a medal for his services on the latter occasion. Having been specially selected to take command of a Portuguese regiment under Marshal Beresford, he commanded the picquets of General Packe's brigade, and received on several occasions the unqualified thanks of Sir Denis for his gallant conduct, particularly at the battle of Redinha. He was subsequently employed by Lord Beresford to form a battalion of Caçadores. This he accomplished most successfully, and led his new battalion—the 10th—to Badajoz, where he covered the assault and capture of that fortress. In the campaign of 1813, he was again in the field, commanding his battalion, and was present at the great battle of Vittoria, for which he received a gold clasp. Subsequently, at the battle of the Pyrenees, Major Armstrong was severely wounded, and for his gallant conduct on that occasion he received a gold clasp, and a brevet-lieutenant-colonelcy. He was afterwards present at the battle of Toulouse. On his return to Portugal, after the peace, he obtained the rank of brigadier-general, and by a vote of the Cortes received the military order of the Tower and Sword. Shortly after this, on his return to England, Lieut.-Colonel Armstrong was appointed to the 2nd battalion of the Royal Regiment; and this brings him to a period of his service in which the East-India Company were more directly interested. He commanded his regiment during the Burmese war, carried several stockades, and advanced with the army to the capital of the enemy, where peace was concluded. On his return to Madras he was placed in command of Bangalore, and of the southern division of the army, during which time he received more than once the thanks of the Governor in Council. After his promotion to major-general, he was selected by Lord Hill for the staff in Canada, where he proceeded in 1842, and remained in command of Upper Canada until 1848, and during that time frequently received the thanks of the commander of the forces in that colony, and from his Grace the Commander-in-chief. Sir Richard is, therefore, fully able to appreciate the many excellent qualities of our native troops, and we are persuaded that we may depend upon his utmost exertions to encourage and draw forth their eminent qualities, and that he will know how to gain and retain their regard and attachment to himself as their chief, and to inculcate on others that important duty. Sir Richard is also from experience well aware of the importance and great advantage, in India above all other places, of cordial and harmonious co-operation with the civil authorities, not only as it affects the efficient administration of public affairs, but as an example to all those officers and servants holding subordinate stations in the various departments of the public service; a duty, I may add, not only quite compatible with the utmost zeal for the interests and honour of the army under his command, but most conducive to the effectual accomplishment of those important objects.

Sir Richard Armstrong returned thanks. If he might be permitted to speak of himself, he would say that he had always endeavoured faithfully to perform his duties for a period of fifty years—that he had done so with zeal and promptitude. He began life as the son of an officer, having joined his regiment at the age of fourteen. He had adverted to his services the more particularly, because it was often alleged that no person not of aristocratic extraction, or who could not command the means of a large outlay of money, could possibly rise in the army. In contradiction to that he could say that he had never purchased a commission in the army. It had been his good fortune, when it was found necessary to augment our forces in the Peninsula, to be placed under the command of that eminent soldier, Marshal Beresford, who by his talents, assiduity, and perseverance, raised the Portuguese army, which had been almost totally ruined, from misrule and want of care, into an army that was not unworthy to stand side by side with the glorious British army. Since that period he had been in India, and a large body of the Indian army had been placed under his immediate command. He had found them gallant in the field, obedient in quarters, always worthy of the confidence of their British officers; and he now went to take the command of that army in the full assurance that he would find them in every respect well calculated to meet an enemy in the field, or to maintain the peace of the country. It would be his study, on all occasions, to uphold the honour and to consult the welfare of that army, and to promote their efficiency by every means in his power. In fact, nothing should be wanting to secure the good opinion and the good will of the troops entrusted to his charge.

The Chairman then gave "The Army and Navy;" "The Royal Commissioners for the Great Exhibition" (responded to by Lord Granville and Herr Von Visbahren), and "Lord Hardinge."

Lord Hardinge was extremely obliged for the honour done him by the greatest company in the world. He was gratified to be present on this occasion when they were assembled to do honour to his gallant friend, whom he would not attempt to eulogize; but this he would say, that he had known his gallant friend for upwards of forty years, and that during the Peninsular war he was remarkable for his energy and judgment, his coolness, and discipline.

The Chairman then proposed "The health of the Marquess of Dalhousie, the Governor-General of India," who was actively engaged in forming new works and developing the resources of the country, and he was happy to say that there was the utmost cordiality between his Excellency and the Court of Directors in all the measures he adopted.

The Chairman then gave "The health of the Civil Servants of the Company," and "The Military Service." Their hearts must be cold indeed, he said, if they did not cherish the warmest affection for that gallant army to whom they were indebted for the tranquillity and security of their power. It ought to be remembered that a considerable number of the Court of Directors themselves had been in the Indian military service, and they must, therefore, be insane if they cherished anything else than the most friendly feeling towards that army. Should they, therefore, hear or read, perchance, opinions stated contrary to the feelings he now expressed—should they hear it stated that the Court of Directors cherished ungracious or ungenerous feelings towards the army,—he begged them to believe that these opinions must originate either in prejudice or in a misunderstanding of the feelings of the Court of Directors towards the Indian army.

The Chairman then proposed the health of the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone and the other distinguished visitors.

Mr. Gladstone, in returning thanks, said: "We do not forget that we are the guests of a body charged with the social, political, and, in great part, the moral interests of one-ninth of the inhabitants of the globe; that for many years your army has been the rival, the worthy rival, of the gallant army of England in their services in the field, and that the military glory of England would never suffer by comparison with that of any nation on the earth, even if it were tested only by the achievements of our Indian heroes. We do not forget your civil service—that it is the pleasure and advantage of the advisers of the Crown to draw, in circumstances of difficulty, upon the aid of those men who have been rarely equalled, certainly unsurpassed. It is no small praise to the training which these men receive from the East-India Company that it qualifies them, not only for the immediate purposes of your service, but for the higher and more important purposes of the State. You send forth the high-spirited youth of England to undertake offices where their authority must necessarily be despotic, but, in my opinion, it is the highest praise that can be bestowed upon the discipline established by the East-India Company—the most unequivocal proof of the effect it communicates to the mind is, that the Government of the Queen has come to you, on more than one occasion, to draw from your service the fittest and most competent men, not to exercise despotic power over other races, but to rule over the freemen of English blood—such as the colonists of North America, placed under the authority of Lord Metcalfe. I cannot but rejoice in this opportunity of alluding to that distinguished man, for the fame of the East-India Company would be well sustained if it had bred no other person than Lord Metcalfe. This country abounds with men who are ready to devote their energies to its service; who are martyrs even in the labours of political life; who, whether in youth or advanced age, are ready to give up the endearments of home for motives of un-mixed patriotism. It has been my good fortune to know many of these men; but I never knew a man who came nearer than Lord Metcalfe to the character of a civil hero—a man whose genuine English principles in political life had been matured, not impaired, by his intimate acquaintance with the affairs of India; whose private munificence was equally splendid with his public talents; who, under the keen pressure of an excruciating disease, devoted his matchless energies to the prosecution and to the solution of political problems the most difficult that ever offered themselves to a statesman. I hope this company will excuse me if I have been led beyond measure to dwell upon the character of Lord Metcalfe; but, in my opinion, there is no better way of encouraging public virtues than by showing, at a meeting of an enlightened company like this, how public virtue in England is appreciated and rewarded. And there is no better way of showing what is the spirit of the East-India Company, and of what the East-India Company is capable of performing for the benefit of England, than by referring to what her careful discipline and active service have done, whether in respect to the glories which your army has achieved for us, whether in respect to the enormous additions to our regal power by the great tributaries which your empire affords, or whether in respect—and that is the highest praise of all—to adding to her character and fame by maturing for her service virtues and abilities so consummate as those of the great Indian statesmen to whom I have referred. I own I have sought for words with which to render a just tribute to the services which the East-India Company has performed for this country. I conclude by saying, May God speed the East-India Company to discharge its high functions, and grant that the rule which has fallen into its hands by the decrees of Providence over vast masses of men may be a rule, not sustained by the sword, but governing in the spirit of justice and wisdom, and justified in the face of the world by the happiness of the vast population placed under its charge!"

Earl Granville proposed the health of the Chairman.

The Chairman replied to the toast. He was delighted to state that they had with them on that occasion the native agent of a faithful ally of the East-India Company, who had taken a long journey to see this country. He begged to propose "Peer Ibrahim Khan Bahadour, native agent to his Highness the Rajah of Bhawalpore."

Syud Abdoolah (interpreter) returned thanks.

The company then broke up.

STEAM COMMUNICATION WITH AUSTRALIA.

On the 2nd of June, the Select Committee of the House of Commons decided, by a majority of 11 to 5, in favour of the route via the Cape of Good Hope, as the most eligible for postal communication with Australia.

The report of the Committee, containing the reasons on which they recommend the Cape route for the mail service to Australia, has since been made public. The points kept in view were speed and certainty of postal communication, accommodation and rates of fare for passengers, facility and cheapness in the transmission of merchandize, and independence, as far as possible, from political objections consequent on routes through foreign countries. Three plans are described by the Committee, for each of which tenders have been made. The first is the Panama line, via Tahiti and New Zealand, to Sydney; the second is the Cape line to Port Phillip and Sydney, with branch steamers to Swan River, Van Diemen's Land, and New Zealand; the third is the Overland Indian line from Point de Galle to Sydney, via Swan River. A summary of the several plans gives the subjoined results:—

Route.	Company.	Vessel. Size, Horse-power, and Speed.	Cost.	Course of Post.	Proposed Fares.
Panama ..	Pacific.	Screw. 1,000 tons, 300 horses, 9 knots.	£50,000	133 days, allowing 8.	£105 and £60.
Cape	General Screw.	Screw. 1,400 or 1,700 tons, 250 or 300 horses, 8½ knots.	£39,000	135 days, allowing 3.	£75, £32. 10s., and £12.
India ..	Eastern Steam.	Paddle. 1,200 tons, 400 horses, 10½ knots.	About £60,000	109 days, allowing 3.	Not stated.
	Peninsular and Oriental.	10½ kno's.	Ditto.	112 days, allowing 5.	Not stated.

The present course by post by sailing-vessels is 257 days, without allowing any interval, and by the Indian Overland route this might be reduced to 109 days, with an allowance of three days. The Committee, however, do not regard rapidity of postal communication as paramount, but the balance of advantages. Against the Indian route, the inconvenience of three transshipments, the charge to passengers (which would render it unavailable in ordinary cases), its inapplicability for goods, and the fact of its traversing the heart of Europe and Egypt, and thus being greatly dependent upon our relations with foreign powers, were considered to present insuperable objections. With regard to the line by Panama, a tranquil and secure passage is admitted to be rendered certain; but the inconvenience of crossing the Isthmus (although to be lessened by the projected railway), and the fact of that transit being through a foreign state, seem to have deterred the Committee from recommending it. The Cape route, therefore, has been decided upon as the only one presenting a direct communication without any change of vessel, and as being entirely independent of other countries, while at the same time it is the cheapest for passengers, and peculiarly adapted also for merchandize. The Committee consider it possible that in this line there may be an uncertainty at first of six or seven days in the homeward mails, but feel satisfied, from the evidence of navigators, that when the experiment of well-found screw steamers shall have been sufficiently tried, there will be little doubt of their maintaining their engagements.

The Committee, looking at "the prospect of remuneration which it holds out to its promoters, and likewise at the great changes rapidly taking place in the requirements and commercial communications of those distant parts of the world," recommend that whatever arrangements may be entered into should be for as short a period as possible.

It is stated that the General Screw Steam Ship Company have offered to undertake the extended service, and to commence it early in 1852.

The Times, in its remarks upon this conclusion of the Committee, very truly says:—"The question is considerably affected by the conformation of Australia itself, for such is the magnitude of this insular continent that the distances between its own ports are little short of the whole breadth of the Atlantic between Liverpool and New York. Swan River is the haven on the west coast, and Sydney on the east, and from Swan River to Sydney is 2,318 miles, while from the latter port to New Zealand is 1,138 more. Accordingly, as Sydney is reputed the capital of our southern empire, the Panama route exhibits the obvious advantage of leading directly to this settlement, and taking New Zealand on its way; whereas the other routes, after nominally touching the Australian continent, are still at some ten or twelve days' distance from the particular terminus of the voyage. In point of fact, if 'Australia' is to be represented by Sydney, the Panama route is only some 1,000 miles longer than the short cut by Suez. So rudimentary, however, is Australian greatness, that the metropolitan dignity is conceived to be yet open to competition, and the local legislatures are earnestly exerting themselves to get this or that port selected as the final rendezvous of the steamers, in order to a due development of grandeur and precedence."

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS, JUNE 2.

PUBLIC WORKS IN INDIA.—Lord Wharfedale, in moving for papers relating to public works and internal improvements in India, made some remarks upon the rarity of information relating to this subject, and contrasted the large outlay made by the ancient dynasties of India upon canals, and works of drainage and irrigation, with the small sums expended by the East-India Company upon canals, roads, and other internal improvements. He found, he said, that, from the close of the great Burmese war down to 1838, there existed in the Indian exchequer a considerable surplus; from that time to this, however, there had been a succession of military events, by which the Company had necessarily been driven into great expenditure, and in 1848-49 the surplus had been converted into a deficiency. This state of matters was, no doubt, inimical to the construction of public works; but, nevertheless, he could not help thinking that much more ought to have been done, and that the cessation of public works had in itself proved injurious to the Indian revenue.

Lord Broughton said, although he was not prepared to deny that, on the whole, more attention might have been paid by the Indian Government to the construction of public works, during the course of many years, especially from 1837 to 1846, the East-India Company had been engaged in most expensive wars, and therefore it was impossible for them with the same earnestness to carry into effect any great works. But even during those nine years of war the Government of India had done very great things in that direction, for he found a considerable sum annually expended on public works. The noble lord then gave the details of various works undertaken in India, comprising the great trigonometrical survey, as well as canals in India, the Punjab, and Scinde; and, in conclusion, observed that it signified little what had been done in times past, if they had the assurance that more would be done in future; and he concurred entirely in the hope expressed by his noble friend, that no more wars would occur to interfere with those measures that were necessary for the improvement of India, and the development of her resources.

The Earl of Ellenborough expressed doubts and apprehensions respecting the Ganges Canal. He was satisfied that, in all cases where the formation of the country was such as to render it possible to have tanks, it was cheaper and more convenient to have irrigation by these than by canals. Of late years, great improvements had been made in the roads of India, but such improvements went on slowly; the persons who superintended their construction were engineer officers, who were liable to have their attention occasionally taken off that employment. He had at one time gone carefully over the accounts, but he did not see his way to a surplus, though the state of matters was very much better than when he arrived in India. With respect to railways, he would much rather that the Government of India should, if it approved of their formation, dispense altogether with the aid of speculators, and take the matter into its own hands. After referring to the subject of the encouragement of Indian cotton, he observed that he had examined the subject on the spot; he had considered it deeply; and he had sent home the result of his inquiries. Let the noble lord (Broughton) read the answer, and he could not wonder that he (Lord Ellenborough) felt disgust that the efforts of a public servant should have been not only met by captious objections, but by a sneer against him for those very efforts.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. Lowry, who has lately erected a flour-mill at Mazagon, Bombay, though he undertakes to supply flour and rulong, of all its different sorts, not only much cheaper, but much better, than any which can be made by "two women grinding at a mill," cannot obtain the custom of the Parsee bakers.

MILITARY SEMINARY, ADDISCOMBE.

A public examination was held on Friday, the 13th inst., at the East-India Company's Military Seminary, in the presence of the Chairman (John Shepherd, Esq.), the Deputy-Chairman (Sir James Weir Hogg, Bart., M.P.), and the following visitors, viz.—Generals Sir R. Armstrong, C.B., Com.-in-Chief at Madras; Lacy, R.A.; D. Macleod, Bengal Engrs.; Tickell, do.; Scovell, K.C.B.; R.M. Coll., and Taylor, C.B., do. Colonels H. D. Jones, R.E.; Hay; Bonner; Craigie, C.B.; H.M.S.; Wetherall, H.M.S.; Wyld, C.B.; Lewis, C.B.; Harding, C.B.; R.E.; D. G. Scott; P. Montgomery; J. Bell; D. Cunningham; Dunsterville; Spiller; Bagnold; Leslie, C.B.; Brereton; Greene; Tait, C.B.; Barnard, Onseley, Finnis, White, Davidson, Cotton, Campbell, and Le Mesurier. Majors Malcolm; Walpole; Bingham, R.A.; D. Leith, Bom. Fus., and Herbert. Captains McKerie, R.E.; Fanshawe, R.E.; Tucker; Manderson; Lempriere, R.N.; Sim, R.E.; Savage, R.A.; Wilmot, R.A.; Wrench, Bengal Cav.; Newbury; Baird Smith, Engrs., and Farrer, Trinity-House. Lieuts. and Ensigns Grindlay, Bengal Cav.; Shepherd, do.; Benson; Olphants, Bengal Art.; Pasley, R.E.; Clements, Bombay Inf.; Craster, Engrs., and Brownlow, do. Rev. Messrs. Hodgson, Coles, and Stapylton, Messrs. Peer Ibrahim Khan, Syed Abdoolah, Narrien (F.R.S.), Melvill, Romer, Easton, Christie, Darby, Eade, Greene, and G. G. Campbell.

The class brought forward for public examination consisted of thirty-eight Cadets, six of whom were selected for the Engineers, viz.—

Henry Goodwyn
William Raffles Tucker
Robert Preston Malcolm

Alexander Urquhart Hamilton
Finch
John Heron Maxwell Stewart
James Vertue

Fifteen for the Artillery, viz.—

James Alex. Haldane Eckford
George Rennie Manderson
Henry Moubay Cadell
John McKenzie Fraser
Charles Vaughan Arbuckle
Charles Edward Lewes
David James Welsh
Eardley William Childers

Ross Dunlop Gowan
Robert Pope
Charles Johnson
William Herbert Malden
Hubert Le Coeq
Arthur Reginald Hoskins
Thomas Ignatius Maria Hog

And the remainder for the Infantry, viz.—

Henry Alexander Cockburn
Charles Marjoribanks Morrison
Willoughby Chas. Stanley Clarke
Robert Russell Woodhouse
John Egremont Lee
Cecil David James Dodd
Justinian Armitage Nutt
William Siddons Young
James Cornwall Miller

Robert Henry Cunliffe
William Pemberton Fisher
Hugh Watson
Wm. Campbell Deans Campbell
William Minto Gibbon
James R. Gordon
Frederick William Dobree
Richard Smith Gray

Distribution of Prizes :—

First Class.

Henry Goodwyn	1st Mathematics, 1st Fortification, Military Surveying, The Pollock Medal, 1st General Good Conduct.—
---------------------	---

In presenting which prize, the Chairman said: "Mr. Goodwyn, I have great pleasure in presenting this medal to you, struck by the inhabitants of Calcutta, in the year 1848, in commemoration of the distinguished services of Lieut. gen. Sir George Pollock. I congratulate you, Sir, most cordially on the honour you have now gained. It is awarded on the combined grounds of eminent proficiency in studies, and also of exemplary conduct. I am persuaded, Sir, that in your case it will be the forerunner of an honourable and useful career of service."

In presenting the 1st General Good Conduct prize (an artillery sword, with steel scabbard), the Chairman said: "Again, Mr. Goodwyn, I have to present to you this sword, awarded by the Court of Directors on the special ground of most exemplary conduct during the whole period of your sojourn at Addiscombe. Sir, you may well be proud of this distinction, and I trust and believe you will long wear it with credit to yourself and honour to your country."

Wm. R. Tucker	2nd Fortification, 2nd Hindustani, 2nd General Good Conduct.
J. H. M. Stewart	Latin.
R. P. Malcolm	2nd Mathematics.

James A. Eckford.....	1st Hindustani.
A. W. H. Finch	Military Drawing.
James Vertue.....	Civil Drawing.
John M'K. Fraser	Chemistry.
	French.
Second Class.
	Mathematics,
James P. Basevi	Military Surveying.
	Latin,
	Hindustani,
	3rd General Good Conduct.
Æneas Perkins	Civil Drawing.
W. W. Goodfellow	Military Drawing.
J. H. M. Martin	Fortification.
A. Tollemache	French.
Third Class.
Welby W. Boddam	4th General Good Conduct.

The proceedings of the day commenced with the Mathematical examination, in which the cadets evinced, by the aptitude and clearness of their demonstrations, a knowledge of their subjects, according to their respective courses, fully adequate to the services for which they were recommended.

Fortification Department.—After dinner, the Chairman proceeded to the Coldstream, across which the cadets threw a barrel bridge, and after passing over a field-piece limbered up, marched across two deep. Various light bridges were likewise exhibited, suited to field operations, which had been previously constructed. A charge of 20 lbs. of gunpowder was then lowered to the bottom of the water, and exploded by voltaic battery, throwing up a column of water to a considerable height with good effect.

The Chairman then proceeded to the sand modelling hall, in which had been constructed a variety of interesting models. The one which attracted the greatest notice was the model of the landward defences of Aden, on a scale of twelve feet to an inch, consisting of the line of works across the isthmus, with the occupation of the rock on its left flank, projected by Lieut. col. C. H. Grant, Bombay Engineers, and Lieut. col. Jacob, Bombay Artillery, who formed the special committee appointed by the Bombay Government for fortifying this important possession. The model was explained by Cadets Cadell, Vertue, M. Fraser, and Robert Pope, who pointed out the peculiarity of this position, and the way in which the difficulties that opposed building on so sandy a spot were overcome, by first laying a foundation of concrete, on which one large inverted arch was turned to form the bottom of the ditch, whose piers constituted the escarp and counterscarp of the work. The second model, a front of Bousnard's system, on a scale of six feet to an inch, was explained by Cadet J. Maxwell Stewart. The third model was a front of Coehorn's first system, on the same scale, explained by Cadet Finch. The fourth model was a front of Carnot's system, explained by Cadet Tucker, on the same scale. The fifth was a model of a front of Vauban's third system, explained by Cadet Arbuckle, likewise on the scale of six feet to an inch. The whole of these interesting models were much admired.

After the proceedings in the sand modelling hall, the Chairman adjourned to the examination hall, where the rest of the 4th term cadets underwent a visà voce examination in fortification by Major-gen. Sir Charles Pasley, K.C.B., the public examiner. The plans in this department were, as usual, very satisfactory, particularly those projected on that peculiar principle so long introduced at Addiscombe.

Among the above were several masterly productions, and many of a promising nature.

After the report had been read by Mr. T. R. Clarke, of the cadet department, East-India House, the Chairman addressed the cadets in the following terms:—

He said, the reports which had been read and the proceedings of that day, notwithstanding that he was bound to notice two unfortunate exceptions, on the whole were such as to enable him to address them in the language of approval and congratulation. During this term there appeared to have been a degree of steadiness, application, and general good conduct, highly creditable to the institution, and which reflected on many of them both honour and distinction. He need not tell them that these results were most gratifying to the Court of Directors, and (he would be allowed to say) especially to their Chairman. They were all aware of the great importance which the Court of Directors attached to the acquirements of their officers in the Indian army. At the present time there was perhaps more progress made in these acquirements and scientific studies than at any former period of our history, and they must be anxious that the qualifications of their officers should keep pace with, if they did not excel, those of any other army in the world. With this view the Court of Directors had placed over them professors and teachers whose talents in their several departments were of the highest order; and on a late occasion, when a vacancy occurred in the office of lieutenant-governor, they selected one of the most eminent officers, whose distinguished services and eminent qualifications were alone the grounds of his appointment. (Hear.) He (the Chairman) was happy to have that opportunity of expressing their kind acknowledgments to that gallant officer for his assiduous attention and indefatigable exertions during the past term; and he was satisfied that the expectations of the Court of Directors in making the appointment would be fully realized. (Cheers.) Their acknowledgments were also justly due to the gallant Major-General Sir Charles Pasley, for the careful, able, and impartial manner in which he had discharged his duty of public examiner; and he would also express their most sincere thanks to all the professors and officers of the establishment—to the former, for their continued success in their arduous duty of teaching; and to the latter, for their zeal in forwarding the best interests of the institution. And while on that subject, he might be allowed also to express their acknowledgments to the many distinguished officers who had attended that day to give their countenance to the proceedings and their encouragement to the future career of those who had successfully passed their examination; and more especially were their thanks due to Sir Richard Armstrong, who had expressed to him how much he was gratified on that occasion, and had declared his belief that if anything could raise the just estimation in which our Indian army was held, it was the creditable manner in which the gentlemen cadets had acquitted themselves that day (Hear, hear.) Most of them would remember that at the close of the last term, when he (the Chairman) addressed them, he dwelt at considerable length on the many advantages which the highly-educated officer in India possessed over the officer of inferior qualifications. He pointed out the necessity imposed on the Court of Directors of only employing such officers as they could confidently entrust with honourable and responsible duties, and he endeavoured to show that no service offered more inducement to industry and exertion than the service of the East-India Company. It had now fallen to his lot, by the favour of his colleagues, to address them for the third time, and he could only repeat the advice which he had previously given to them; but if he could find language to express his sentiments more emphatically, he should gladly avail himself of it, because every additional year's experience he had of the Company's affairs only tended more to convince him that the true path to honour and distinction in their service, whether in its military or its civil branches, must be commenced at an early period of life. If sound principles, both moral and religious, and a good education were not the foundation of the student's career, the great chances were that it must end in failure and disappointment. He entreated his young friends, then, to be advised, and to continue to prosecute their studies with increased vigour; and he particularly addressed himself to those who had not yet been so successful as many of them had been. They might depend upon it, it required but determination on the part of each individual to obtain at least a respectable position in his class. They were aware that measures had been adopted for insuring now that every cadet sent out with a commission in their army should undergo an examination previous to joining the service. That rule had also been adopted in her Majesty's army; thus showing that all the authorities were agreed upon the great importance and value of education in our army. He felt convinced that it would tend to raise the general acquirements of their officers and to promote the advantage of the public service. It must be obvious to any one that, let an officer be as brave as a lion, if he knew not the art or science of war, if he knew not, for instance, how to conduct his operations against such a fort as they had just heard described, and how to prevent his forces from being exposed to the fire of the enemy, all his personal valour, however brilliant, would be of little avail. Now was their time for qualifying themselves for the service of the army, and they should remember that, if they neglected the present opportunity, it could never be recalled. On their arrival in India, although they might discover their mistake, they would not be able to repair it. They would have to attend to the regimental duties, and devote their time to acquiring the native languages; and for instruction in the higher branches of the service they would not then have leisure. Therefore he besought them to embrace all their present opportunities of improvement. Those of them who had completed their studies, and who would speedily be enrolled as officers in the gallant army of India, he would have bear in mind the high reputation which that army had maintained. Let them remember that each of them, in their respective stations, must either add to or diminish that reputation; for the conduct of each officer not only exerted an influence in determining the general character of his own particular corps, but also exercised its effect upon the character of the army generally. He would also recommend them, on leaving this country, to maintain a regular and constant communication with their relatives at home. The frequent communication now carried on between India and this country was a source of great comfort to absent friends; and, if regularly availed of, it enabled parents and guardians to exercise a wholesome influence in maturing the character of the young officer. He trusted that it was unnecessary to warn them against the vice of intemperance, the most direful and ruinous vice of any that could be indulged in in India. Indeed, excess of any kind must prove seriously detrimental to all their best interests; for they must be aware that no prudent person could confide in an officer who was a slave to any vice, or even to any amusement. Let them cherish, therefore, an anxious desire to find pleasure in the performance of their public duties. They might, perhaps, at first not find this very easy; but a little diligence and perseverance at the outset would enable them to overcome all their difficulties, and at last they would take a delight in the exercise of their profession. They would find the Indian native soldier possessed of many rare and excellent qualities, devotedly attached to the European officer who treated him with kindness and consideration, and ever ready to sacrifice his own comfort and even his life for theirs. Let them make it their study, then, to gain his confidence and esteem, and be most careful not to give him offence, and especially by offering the slightest disrespect to his religion. Let them remember that the native soldiers of India were acute judges of character, and formed their estimate of men according as they set them a good or a bad example. Let them endeavour, then, on their arrival in India, to make themselves masters of the language of the troops over whom they would be placed in command. Let them communicate frequently with them (of course not forgetting the proper respect due to themselves), but more particularly and especially let them cultivate friendly intercourse with the soldiers of their own country. Let them study the character and temper of every man, and show him that they knew and were aware of his good character or his imperfections, and soon he would feel that not only was his commanding officer his friend, but the result would be mutually beneficial to themselves, to the soldier, and to the public service. He now begged to caution them against a very serious evil, and which would require self-command and self-restraint to avoid it. He alluded to the habits of extravagance which were sometimes indulged in by young men in India. Now, nothing could be more detrimental to their prospects and to their interests than pecuniary embarrassments. A man having once got into a very small original debt, his liability increased in India with such a rapidity, that the ordinary emoluments of an officer would be insufficient for extricating him. The consequence was, that once in difficulties always in difficulties; their energies became paralyzed, and the result frequently was, first, loss of character, then loss of fortune, and not unfrequently, he regretted to say, loss of commission. He besought them, therefore, to commence a steady and determined career of prudent and economical management of the funds at their disposal; and they might believe him, no notion was more absurd than that a man's character was to be estimated in proportion to his expenditure of money. He could assure them, that in their case the fact was directly the reverse of that. A young officer in India was respected in proportion to his prudence in regulating his expenses so as to keep himself free, unfettered, and independent. (Cheers.) He trusted it was unnecessary for him to repeat his admonition with reference to the vice of play or gambling. He hoped they all viewed it as he did—as a vice the most demoralizing that could ever infect society. He now solemnly gave them all warning that no man guilty of that crime (as he might call it) would ever receive favour or sympathy either from the Government of India or from the Court of Directors, who were anxious that the most rigid measures should be adopted to root out and eradicate this vice in every portion of India, and every quarter of their service either at home or abroad. (Cheers.) Finally, his dear young friends would allow him to recommend them to remember their Creator in the days of their youth. This was a duty on which all others depended. If they habitually neglected it, their own hearts would soon fail to convey to them the true principles which guide the actions of honest and upright men. He earnestly entreated them, therefore, to be punctual and regular in the discharge of their religious duty—to cherish always a humble dependence on God's mercy, and God's guidance; in difficulty and in doubt to have recourse to Him who never fails to hear when prayers were offered up with meekness and sincerity. With this parting advice, and beseeching them to remember that not only in adversity, but in prosperity, their duty was binding upon them, he bade them all an affectionate farewell. (Cheers.)

The business of the examination concluded with the cadets being put through their sword and bayonet exercise, and their musket and field-artillery practice, in the grounds of the institution, in the presence of a large assemblage of spectators, who appeared highly gratified with the precision displayed in the whole of the evolutions.

After the close of the proceedings, the Directors entertained a large party of their friends to a cold collation.

The Report of the Committee of the Chinese Hospital at Shanghai, for 1850, gives the following account of Chinese suicides, the methods and motives:—"The modes of suicide chiefly followed by the Chinese are hanging, drowning, and taking opium; and, among the rich people, swallowing gold. Opium is very frequently taken for this purpose. The usual plan is to take one, two, or three drachms of the drug, cleared from all the grosser impurities, and made ready for the pipe; this is mixed with wine, and then swallowed. Women generally hang themselves, but sometimes throw themselves into wells, head foremost. It is not exactly known how swallowing gold causes death, for various accounts are given of it. It is said that gold leaf is rolled up into a ball, which is swallowed, and some water drunk after it, which speedily causes death. Another mode is to thrust the loose gold leaf into the mouth, which causes suffocation. The causes for the commission of the act were various. One man took opium because he had squandered his money in gambling, and was ashamed to meet his partner in business; another, because his brother had defrauded him of a sum of money, and to be revenged he took opium, so that his brother would be considered as his murderer. The Chinese frequently commit suicide in order to throw the blame of their death at another's door. A case occurred of a woman attempting to poison herself, because her husband had reproved her for some misconduct, and she wished to annoy him. Another woman had pawned a person's clothes, and the owner wanted them when she had not money enough to redeem them. Another woman had been beaten by her husband. Another was not allowed the liberty she wished for, and took this plan of obtaining her freedom, and causing her death at the same time. By much the larger proportion of these attempts originated in very trivial causes."

MISCELLANEOUS.

COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF AT MADRAS.—At a Court of Directors held at the East-India House on the 7th June, Lieut.-General Sir Richard Armstrong was sworn in as Commander-in-Chief of the troops at the Presidency of Madras.

PRESENTS TO THE QUEEN.—Lord Broughton had an audience of the Queen on the 11th inst., at Buckingham Palace, to present some presents from the Newab Nazim, of Bengal, to her Majesty. The articles consisted of an elephant's state trappings of velvet and gold, the howdah framed of ivory inlaid with gold, with coverings of gold and silver embroidery; a state palkee, or palanquin, also of ivory inlaid with gold; the covering of similar rich materials to the howdah; a throne, or state resting-couch, of crimson velvet and gold, with a canopy richly embroidered with the precious metals, and supported by silver columns; a pair of gold moorchals, or emblems of rank, and a palkee or palanquin for evening conveyance. The articles have since been transferred to the Crystal Palace.

STEAM TO AUSTRALIA.—The Parliamentary Committee on Steam Communication with India, China, and Australia, decided, on June 2d, by a majority of 11 to 5, in favour of the route to Australia by the Cape, as being the most desirable for the transport of the mails.

H. ST. GEORGE TUCKER, Esq.—We regret to announce the lamented death of Henry St. George Tucker, Esq., on Saturday last, at his house in Upper Portland-place. This sad event has occasioned a vacancy in the direction of the East-India Company,—which it is believed, will be filled up by the election of John H. Astell, Esq., late of the Bengal civil service.

In India, the average time of labour is about eight hours a day amongst those of the population that work the hardest; about a third part of their whole time is wasted in holidays; at an average, five hours a day are spent in exertion, which is fully double of what household or stable servants bestow in actual labour: and at this half-time sort of work,—the hardest of which would scarcely be looked on as half work in Europe,—enough is secured, not only to meet all the necessities, but the luxuries of life.

EMBARKATION OF TROOPS.

Per Kent, for CALCUTTA, from GRAVESSEND, June 14.—237 Company's troops; Capt. G. M. Prendergast, 44th Bengal N.I. Lieut. C. F. F. Halsted, 14th M. N.I.; Lieut. A. P. Symons, Beng. asst.; Dr. W. H. Jephson, asst. surg. 9th Lancers.

An official report of the statistics of New South Wales, including Port Phillip, from 1840 to 1849, has just reached this country, and furnishes a remarkable view of the progress of that colony. The population appears in the ten years nearly to have doubled, the total in 1840 having been 129,463, while in 1849 it was 246,299, of which number 101,470 were females. The population of South Australia, on the 1st January, 1851, numbered 63,000. This census is of the more importance, as the new constitution for the colony was to take effect when the population reached 50,000.

The Bombay Times supplies us with the following strange account of certain ceremonies performed on the last day of Passion Week at Bandora and Mahim:—"At Bandora, as we believe at other of the Roman Catholic chapels, the last supper was represented by a set of wooden puppets, representing our Saviour and his Apostles—at Mahim young lads were employed; the supper was mostly of fruit, and the awful scene represented, as well as the use of such beggarly elements permitted. Is it wonderful that the Hindoos look on Popery, so practised, as just a variety of idolatry a little different from their own? The Mahomedans detest and despise it altogether—not as Christianity, but as idol-worship."

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST-INDIA STOCK.

Ladies and Gentlemen,—

IT affords me the highest gratification to be enabled to inform you, that all the other Candidates for a seat in your Direction abstain from coming forward on the present vacancy.

Whilst this circumstance relieves me from the necessity of urging my friends to attend at their personal inconvenience, it will still be most satisfactory to me to be honoured with the presence of such of the Proprietors as may feel themselves at liberty to attend at the ballot to honour me with their votes.

Once more thanking you for the uniform kindness that I have experienced at your hands, and looking forward with perfect confidence to the realization of my wishes,

I have the honour to be, Ladies and Gentlemen,

Your very faithful and obedient servant,

JOHN HARVEY ASTELL.

6, Vigo Street, Regent Street,
June 16, 1851.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST-INDIA STOCK.

Ladies and Gentlemen,—

IBEG to acquaint you that it is not my purpose to contest the seat which has become vacant by the lamented death of your respected Director, Mr. TUCKER.

I am led to this conclusion by the information carefully collected during the canvass which I am zealously pursuing, and, as I am happy to assure you, with a progress the most satisfactory.

Immediately after the close of the coming election, I shall again have the pleasure of addressing you; meanwhile, with many thanks for the encouragement which I have received,

I remain, Ladies and Gentlemen,

Your faithful, humble servant,

FREDERIC MILLET.

HINDUSTANI WORKS BY JOHN SHAKESPEAR, Esq.NEW EDITION, with GREAT ADDITIONS.

This Day is published, the 4th Edition, in 1 vol. 4to. price £5. 5s. in boards, SHAKESPEAR'S HINDUSTANI AND ENGLISH DICTIONARY, GREATLY ENLARGED: to which is added, a DICTIONARY, ENGLISH AND HINDUSTANI, ENTIRELY NEW.

••• To the First Part of this Dictionary, the author has, by laborious study of Hindustani works, both printed and manuscript, made the most extensive additions. In the Hindustani and English Part, the Hindustani words are printed in their proper characters, together with the pronunciation in Roman letters. The Derivatives, which are traced from the Sanskrit, Arabic, Hebrew, Persian, and Greek, are given respectively in the character peculiar to each of those languages.

The Second Part, English and Hindustani, is ENTIRELY NEW. It comprises the most common English words, and also numerous usual phrases, with the fittest corresponding translations into Hindustani.

Review in "TIMES," Jan. 2.—"Much attention has been paid to the collecting of scientific terms, especially botanical ones, as well as to the correct rendering them into the technology of Europe." ••• "The Hindustani and English Part of it now contains upwards of 53,000 words and phrases explained, being 7,000 more than in the last edition, and 11,000 more than in any other Dictionary of the like description now extant." ••• "In India, as well as in Europe, the character of this work has long been fully established, and the present edition will greatly enhance its reputation."

II.

5th Edition, 1 vol. royal 8vo. price 14s.

HOWARD ON THE LOSS OF TEETH, and on a new method of FASTENING LOOSE TEETH.—A very curious invention connected with Dental Surgery has been introduced by Mr. Howard, consisting of an entirely new description of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, fixed by SELF-ADHESION, without springs, wires, or ligatures. They will never change colour or decay. This method does not require the extraction of any teeth or roots, or any painful operation. The invention is of importance to many persons, and those interested in it should read this Treatise.

GENTLEMEN,—

I BEG to apprise you of my having offered my services for the situation of Home Agent, in room of Major Devydon.

Though with little hope of success as to votes at home now, I trust to take up a better position here; and if exertion in the canvass can recover the start taken by my home opponents in the race, the situation shall not yet be won by any man out of the Service, but by

Yours faithfully,

ARTHUR KNYVETT,
Major, 64th N.I., Ex. Offr., Mooltan.

Mooltan, 15th April, 1851.

THE NEW TOOTH-PICK TOOTH-BRUSH,

thoroughly cleansing between the teeth when used up and down, and polishing the surface when used crossways, the hair warranted never to come out; in four strengths—viz. No. 1, hard; No. 2, less hard; No. 3, medium; No. 4, soft. The double anti-pressure nail-brush, which does not divide the quick from the nails. The triple hair-brush, which thoroughly searches and cleanses the hair in one-fourth part of the time of any other method, and acts as both comb and brush combined. The medium shaving-brush, being a selection of the strongest badgers' hair, so well secured in the socket as never to come loose. And, though last not least, the newly-invented "Renovator" clothes-brush, which makes an old coat look like a new one, and a new coat to look new double the usual time. Invented and made only by ROSS and SONS.

THE ATRAPILATORY, or LIQUID HAIR DYE.—The only dye that really answers for all colours, and does not require re-doing but as the hair grows, as it never fades or acquires that unnatural red or purple tint common to all other dyes. ROSS and SONS can, with the greatest confidence, recommend the above DYE as infallible; and ladies and gentlemen requiring it are requested, if convenient, to have it done the first time at their establishment, which will enable them to use it afterwards themselves, without the chance of failure. They think it necessary to add, that, by attending strictly to the instructions given with the dye, numerous parties have succeeded equally well without coming to them.

BOTANIC WATER and BEARS' GREASE.—When the hair is becoming thin, and falling off, the only effectual remedy, besides shaving the head, is the use of the two above-named articles, applied alternately—the botanic water to cleanse the roots from scurf, and as a stimulant, and the bears' grease as a nourisher. If any further evidence was required of the virtues of bears' grease for renovating and preserving the hair, Mr. Catlin's account of the quantity used, and the length of hair obtained, by some of the North-American Indians, would be a sufficient answer.—ROSS and SONS, who first introduced the use of bears' grease in this country, and who fat and kill the animals, recommend the public to purchase none other but with their names and address printed on the pot, or the chances are, their obtaining a spurious article.

ROSS and SONS, 119 and 120, Bishopsgate Street, London.

WITH INDIA, CHINA, &c.

On or about the 20th August next, and of every alternate month thereafter, until further notice, one of the

Peninsular & Oriental Steam Navigation Company's First-Class Steam-Ships

WILL BE DESPATCHED, AS AN EXTRA SHIP, FROM

CALCUTTA FOR SUEZ,

CALLING AT MADRAS, CEYLON, AND ADEN.

In combination with these extra Steam-ships from CALCUTTA, the Company will despatch from BOMBAY, about the 1st September next, and of every alternate month thereafter, a first-class Steam-ship for ADEN, to meet there the Ship from CALCUTTA.

At ADEN, the Passengers, Parcels, and Goods from BOMBAY, will be transferred to the Calcutta Ship, and be conveyed to SUEZ.

At ALEXANDRIA, one of the Company's Steam-ships will receive the Passengers, Parcels, and Goods, and convey them to SOUTHAMPTON, calling at MALTA and GIBRALTAR.

OUTWARD ROUTE.

In combination with the above arrangements, one of the Company's large first-class Steam-ships will be despatched from SOUTHAMPTON on or about the 1st September, and of every alternate month thereafter, for ALEXANDRIA, touching at GIBRALTAR and MALTA, for the conveyance of Passengers, Parcels, and Goods to those places, and also, via EGYPT, to ADEN, CEYLON, MADRAS, CALCUTTA, SINGAPORE, and CHINA. But Passengers, Parcels, and Goods for BOMBAY and WESTERN INDIA will be conveyed from SOUTHAMPTON in the Mail Steamers leaving that Port on the 20th of the month, and the corresponding Vessels from SUEZ to ADEN, at which latter Port a Steam-ship of the Company will be in waiting to embark and convey them to BOMBAY.

N.B.—Steam-ships of the Company now ply direct between CALCUTTA, PENANG, SINGAPORE, and HONG-KONG.

For further information, and tariffs of the Company's recently revised and reduced rates of Passage-money and Freight, apply at their Offices, 122, LEADENHALL STREET, LONDON, and at SOUTHAMPTON.

C. W. HOWELL, Secretary.

IMPORTANT FAMILY MEDICINE.

THE GREAT NUMBER OF NEW MEDICINES which have within the last few years been offered to the Public, would have prevented the Proprietor from submitting to their notice this valuable Extract, had not the fullest and most decided evidence of its superiority convinced him that, as far as he could, it was strictly a duty on his part to make it generally known. It is purely Vegetable, being extracted from CAMOMILE FLOWERS; hence, in all cases where the stomach does not rightly perform its office, it is at once the most harmless, pleasant, and efficacious assistant possible.

With the weak, the sickly, and the sedentary, the preventive art of Medicine must be an object worthy of particular attention. The effect of a few doses will fully prove its efficacy; for whether the constitution is naturally bad, whether it has been seriously injured by severe attacks of illness, or by some inferior dilapidating cause, or whether it has been impaired by time or by neglect, the general effect is similar, and, consequently, the repairing and propping up of the system can only be accomplished by invigorating and bringing into proper action the digestive organs, thus preventing the general breaking up of the constitution. The Proprietor, from experience, confidently recommends an occasional dose of this valuable Medicine, being assured of the most happy result, and that the period of life may be extended many years by the use of

NORTON'S CAMOMILE PILLS,

The most certain Preserver of Health;

AND, AS A NATURAL CONSEQUENCE, A PURIFIER OF THE BLOOD & A SWEETENER OF THE WHOLE SYSTEM.

INDIGESTION is a weakness or want of power of the digestive juices in the stomach to convert what we eat and drink into healthy matter, for the proper nourishment of the whole system. It is caused by everything which weakens the system in general, or the stomach in particular. From it proceed nearly all the diseases to which we are liable; for it is very certain that if we could always keep the stomach right, we should only die by old age or accident. Indigestion produces a great variety of unpleasant sensations; amongst the most prominent are a want of, or an inordinate, appetite, sometimes attended with a constant craving for drink, a distension or feeling of enlargement of the stomach, flatulency, heart-burn, or sickness: in some cases of depraved digestion there is a complete disrelish for food, but still the appetite is not greatly impaired, as at the stated period of meals persons so afflicted can eat heartily, although without much gratification; a long train of nervous symptoms are also frequent attendants, general debility, great languidness, and incapacity for exertion. The minds of persons so afflicted frequently become irritable and desponding, and great anxiety is observable in the countenance; they appear under great apprehension of some imaginary danger, will start at any unexpected noise or occurrence, and become so agitated that they require some time to calm and collect themselves: yet the mind is exhilarated without much difficulty; pleasing events, society, will for a time dissipate all appearance of disease; but the excitement produced by an agreeable change vanishes soon after the cause has gone by. Other symptoms are, violent palpitations, restlessness, the sleep disturbed by frightful dreams and startings, and affording little or no refreshment; occasionally there is much moaning, with a sense of weight and oppression upon the chest, night-mare, &c.

It is almost impossible to enumerate all the symptoms of this first invader upon the constitution, as in a hundred cases of indigestion there will probably be something peculiar to each; but, be they what they may, they are all occasioned by the food becoming a burthen rather than a support to the stomach; and in all its stages the medicine most wanted is that which will afford effectual assistance to the digestive organs, and give energy to the nervous and muscular systems,—nothing can more speedily or with more certainty effect so desirable an object than NORTON'S EXTRACT OF CAMOMILE FLOWERS. The herb has from time immemorial been highly esteemed in England as a grateful anodyne, imparting an aromatic bitter to the taste, and a pleasing degree of warmth and strength to the stomach; and in all cases of indigestion, gout in the stomach, windy cholice, and general weakness, it has for ages been strongly recommended by the most eminent practitioners as very useful and beneficial. The great, indeed only, objection to their use has been the large quantity of water which it takes to dissolve a small part of the flowers, and which must be taken with it into the stomach. It requires a quarter of a pint of boiling water to dissolve the soluble portion of one drachm of camomile flowers; and, when one or even two ounces may be taken with advantage, it must at once be seen how impossible it is to take a proper dose of this wholesome herb in the form of tea; and the only reason why it has not long since been placed the very first in rank of all restorative medicines is, that in taking it the stomach has always been loaded with water, which tends in a great measure to counteract, and very frequently wholly to destroy, the effect. It must be evident that loading a weak stomach with a large quantity of water, merely for the purpose of conveying into it a small quantity of medicine, must be injurious; and that the medicine must possess powerful renovating properties only to counteract the bad effects likely to be produced by the water. Generally speaking, this has been the case with camomile flowers,—a herb possessing the highest restorative qualities, and, when properly taken, decidedly the most speedy restorer, and the most certain preserver of health.

These PILLS are wholly CAMOMILE, prepared by a peculiar process, accidentally discovered, and known only to the proprietor, and which he firmly believes to be one of the most valuable modern discoveries in medicine, by which all the essential and extractive matter of more than an ounce of the flowers is concentrated in four moderate-sized pills. Experience has afforded the most ample proof that they possess all the fine aromatic and stomachic properties for which the herb has been esteemed; and as they are taken into the stomach unencumbered by any diluting or indigestible substance, in the same degree has their benefit been more immediate and decided. Mild in their operation, and pleasant in their effect, they may be taken at any age, and under any circumstance, without danger or inconvenience; a person exposed to cold and wet a whole day or night could not possibly receive any injury from taking them, but, on the contrary, they would effectually prevent a cold being taken. After a long acquaintance with, and strict observance of, the medicinal properties of NORTON'S CAMOMILE PILLS, it is only doing them justice to say, that they are really the most valuable of all TONIC MEDICINES. By the word tonic is meant a medicine which gives strength to the stomach sufficient to digest in proper quantities all wholesome food, which increases the power of every nerve and muscle of the human body, or, in other words, invigorates the nervous and muscular systems. The solidity or firmness of the whole tissue of the body which so quickly follows the use of NORTON'S CAMOMILE PILLS, their certain and speedy effects in repairing the partial dilapidations from time or intemperance, and their lasting salutary influence on the whole frame is most convincing, that in the smallest compass is contained the largest quantity of the tonic principle, of so peculiar a nature as to pervade the whole system, through which it diffuses health and strength.

As NORTON'S CAMOMILE PILLS are particularly recommended for all stomach complaints or indigestion, it will probably be expected that some advice should be given respecting diet; though after all that has been written upon the subject, after the publication of volume upon volume, after the country has, as it were, been inundated with practical essays on diet, as a means of prolonging life, it would be unnecessary to say more, did we not feel it our duty to make the humble endeavour of inducing the public to regard them not, but to adopt that course which is dictated by nature, by reason, and by common sense. Those persons who study the wholesomeness, and are governed by the opinions of writers on diet, are uniformly both unhealthy in body and weak in mind. There can be no doubt that the palate is designed to inform us what is proper for the stomach, and of course that must best instruct us what food to take, and what to avoid: we want no other adviser. Nothing can be more clear than that those articles which are agreeable to the taste were by nature intended for our food and sustenance, whether liquid or solid, foreign or of native production; if they are pure and unadulterated, no harm need be dreaded by their use; they will only injure by abuse. Consequently, whatever the palate approves, eat and drink, always in moderation, but never in excess; keeping in mind that the first process of digestion is performed in the mouth, the second in the stomach; and that, in order that the stomach may be able to do its work properly, it is requisite that the first process should be well performed; this consists in masticating or chewing the solid food, so as to break down and separate the fibres and small substances of meat and vegetables, mixing them well, and blending the whole together before they are swallowed; and it is particularly urged upon all to take plenty of time to their meals, and never to eat in haste. If you conform to this short and simple, but comprehensive advice, and find that there are various things which others eat and drink with pleasure, and without inconvenience, and which would be pleasant to yourself, only that they disagree, you may at once conclude that the fault is in the stomach; that it does not possess the power which it ought to do; that it wants assistance, and the sooner that assistance is afforded the better. A very short trial of this medicine will best prove how soon it will put the stomach in a condition to perform with ease all the work which nature intended for it. By its use you will soon be able to enjoy, in moderation, whatever is agreeable to the taste, and unable to name one individual article of food which disagrees with or sits unpleasantly on the stomach. Never forget that a small meal well digested affords more nourishment to the system than a large one, even of the same food, when digested imperfectly. Let the dish be ever so delicious, ever so enticing a variety offered, the bottle ever so enchanting, never forget that temperance tends to preserve health, and that health is the soul of enjoyment. But should an impropriety be at any time committed, by which the stomach becomes overloaded or disordered, render it immediate aid by taking a dose of NORTON'S CAMOMILE PILLS, which will so promptly assist in carrying off the burden thus imposed upon it, that all will soon be right again.

On account of their volatile properties, they must be kept in bottles; and if closely corked, their qualities are neither impaired by time nor injured by any change of climate whatever. Sold by all Medicine Vendors, price 13d. and 2s. 6d. each, with full directions. The large bottle contains the quantity of three small ones, or Pills equal to fourteen ounces of Camomile Flowers.

* Be sure to ask for "NORTON'S PILLS," and do not be persuaded to purchase an imitation.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

FROM barrenness, the quality of the last mail, the present has subsided into absolute dearth. At all the presidencies, the interval of twelve days that had elapsed since the departure of the preceding despatch to Europe had furnished no incident of political, commercial, or social importance which supplied any materials for comment in the usual summaries of intelligence. Even the excitement caused by the affair of Jotee Persaud, we are told, had entirely ceased, and the persecuted contractor was no longer the topic of fulminations against the Government in leading articles and bitter letters. The Lahore Chronicle states, that further proceedings were threatened by the civil authorities, and that the Lala was about to betake himself to Calcutta, there to reside for the rest of his days under the ægis of the Supreme Court. A letter from Agra, however, asserts that he had come to Simla, to obtain an interview with the Governor-General!

His lordship, it appears, reached that station on the 9th May. The incident which occurred on his journey, and which we noticed in our last summary, appears to have been of a more serious character than we apprehended: the marquess narrowly escaped destruction. He was riding down from Kangra to Dhurmsala, and when turning a somewhat sharp angle of the road, he met a laden camel, at which the horse shied, and bounded so close to the edge that the marquess thought it prudent to dismount; he had no sooner done so, than the horse lost his footing, and went down the precipice about 100 feet. The Calcutta papers state, that his lordship, accompanied by the marchioness, would proceed to Cheenec (without the British boundaries) about the 1st of June, to pass the extreme hot season: this was the retreat of the Governor-General during the last season.

A letter from Simla reports that the Governor-General's express, with news from London, up to the 7th of April, arrived on the 11th May, the quickest passage on record,—from London to Simla in thirty-four days! The Bombay express brought news to Calcutta in less than thirty-five days from England.

A private letter from Kohat says, fever prevailed dreadfully among the European troops there, and that within a few months more than twenty Europeans had fallen victims to the epidemic. It adds: "The hospital is at present quite full, and the doctor in charge is using his utmost exertions for his patients. The 4th Punjab Irregular Cavalry has commenced its march. The weather in the morning is pleasant and tolerably cool, but during the middle of the day it becomes excessively hot, so that we can scarcely stir out."

Sickness prevailed, likewise, at Lahore, to an unusual degree for the season of the year. "The influenza, from which many persons are suffering," says the Lahore Chronicle of May 19, "is attributed to the alternation of temperature from the almost cold of the nights to the great heat of the day. In H.M.'s 96th foot there were, at the commencement of the present week, no fewer than 160 patients in hospital."

The Nizam's territory continues in a highly disturbed state. His Highness has been surrounded in his palace by mutinous troops demanding arrears of pay. They were at last dispersed by the troops of a native nobleman. His debt to the Company, by the last account rendered, is seventy-six lacs, and the cash payments for the last month not having yet come in, that debt is now increased to seventy-seven lacs.

The Delhi Gazette understands that Kerowlie is whispered about, in military circles at Agra, as likely to become the scene of some decisive operations ere long, and that guns had been recently despatched from Agra to Kerowlie.

"The state of affairs is, as we are informed, this:—The revenues of the state are only about four lacs, and are collected for the Rajah by us,—all the expenses of the tahseel being of course made good to us. From time to time jagheers and allowances have been assigned to different members of the Rajah's family; and these have at length become so burdensome that the Rajah positively cannot make both ends meet, and is as hard up as his brother potentate, Otho of Greece. There is no remedy for this but resumption; it is easier, however, as well as better, to give than to receive, and in consequence this proves a matter of some difficulty.

"A great deal has been effected though, last cold weather, in the way of compromise and arrangement; but one thakoor, we understand, who has got a good strong gurbhe of his own, declines coming to terms, or assisting the state emergencies by any self-sacrifice. This gentleman, it is said, will have to be done something at, when it gets a little cooler; and unless, when he finds we are in earnest, he knocks under, additional troops will be required to co-operate with the Kotah contingent, in dispossessing him. There has been an émeute this year too, in Kerowlie, between Hindoo and Mussulman; so altogether the statelet has had a troubled time of it lately."

The opium clipper Ariel was burnt in the Bay of Bengal on the 13th May, being the fourth vessel belonging to Calcutta that has been within these two months destroyed by fire. There is reason to believe it is the work of incendiaries.

There is still talk of sending troops from India to the Cape, and it is said that three steamers have been got ready at Bombay to convey them to their destination. H.M.'s 8th and 86th regiments have been named as likely to proceed from Bombay, and there was a rumour that a native corps from each presidency was to go; but this is unlikely. H.M.'s 18th Royal Irish, now in Fort William, was some time ago ordered to be in readiness for foreign service; but this order has since been withdrawn. The Madras Spectator reports that H.M.'s 51st regiment had received orders to proceed to the Cape.

Cholera had been somewhat prevalent at Bombay: it broke out on board the H.C. steamer Ajdaha, when nearly all the cases proved fatal, one midshipman and seven seamen having been cut off. It vanished, almost as suddenly as it appeared, the moment the ship was sent to sea for change of air. She afterwards returned to harbour, all on board being healthy.

CASUALTIES BY DEATH IN THE ARMIES OF INDIA REPORTED SINCE OUR LAST PUBLICATION.

H.M.'s TROOPS.—Capt. Wm. J. James, 64th, at Hyderabad, aged 42, May 8.

BOMBAY.—Maj. Charles Shirt, 20th N.I. on board the ship Earl of Hardwicke, on his passage home, aged 47, April 4; Capt. W. Topham, 7th N.I. at Ahmedabad, May 18.

BENGAL.

THE SALT TAX.

During the year 1850, the revenue derived from the article of salt in the Bengal Provinces exhibits little difference from that of the preceding year; the receipts were Rs. 1,35,28,000, and the expense of manufacturing it Rs. 32,73,000, leaving a net profit on the salt manufactured by Government of Rs. 1,02,55,000, or about one million sterling. Since the year 1846-47, the manufacture of salt in Bengal has been materially reduced, and with it the revenue derived from this source. The following statement will exhibit the difference:—

	Outlay.	Return.	Profit.
1846-47	41,58,000	1,64,40,000	1,22,82,000 Ra.
1849-50	32,73,000	1,35,28,000	1,02,55,000 "

But this has been in some measure compensated by the increase of imports, more especially from England, and the consequent increase of the import duties. The excise duty on salt manufactured for Government in Bengal is fixed at two rupees eight annas the maund; and this sum, added to the expense of manufacturing it, constitutes the price at which it is sold to the community. In order to afford a fair competition to the merchant, and to place his imported salt on terms of equality with the Government salt, a corresponding amount of customs duty is imposed on salt imported into Calcutta, from whatever port, and under whatever flag. Under this arrangement, foreign salt,—that is, salt imported by sea,—has to compete only with the actual cost of salt manufactured in the country. The following table will show the quantity of salt imported from all countries, and also from England, in the last six years and a half:—

	Imported from all Countries.	From England.
1844-45 ...	9,70,595 Maunds.	791 Maunds.
1845-46 ...	15,81,986 "	5,02,616 "
1846-47 ...	14,66,744 "	3,52,835 "
1847-48 ...	16,15,084 "	7,52,998 "
1848-49 ...	16,26,706 "	4,59,803 "
1849-50 ...	21,26,848 "	6,24,673 "
Six months of 1850-51 ...	14,55,007 "	6,72,092 "

It will thus be seen that the importation of English salt in the first six months of 1850-51,—that is, from May to October, 1850,—exceeded the imports of the entire preceding year.

This increase of imports has not only supplied the market with a superior article at a cheaper rate, but it has silenced the clamours of those who were interested in the salt-works in England. They had been led to suppose that it was the monopoly of the manufacture of domestic salt, retained by Government in its own hands, which extinguished their prospect of obtaining a market for their salt in India, and were thus led to place themselves in direct hostility to the East-India Company, and to prepare for a vigorous campaign against the monopoly at the close of the present Charter. They have now discovered their mistake. They have found that whatever obstacle existed to the freedom and extension of their salt imports, really lay in their inability to land their own salt in Calcutta as cheap as it could be manufactured in this country. They have now succeeded in sending salt which is able to compete in price with the indigenous salt; and, in proportion as the import of salt from England has increased, the outcry against the monopoly has died out. The question of an excise duty on manufactured salt, and of customs duty on that which is imported,—both being equal,—is now felt to be a financial, and not a commercial, question. The retention of the monopoly of manufacture in the hands of Government, moreover, is rather beneficial than the reverse to the interests of the importers. The salt thus made is chargeable with all the expensive machinery which the State maintains, and which serves to enhance the cost of the article with which they have to compete. If the manufacture of salt on behalf of the State was abolished, and every man was at liberty to manufacture whatever quantity he chose for sale, throughout a line of sea-coast extending many hundred miles along the Bay of Bengal, the indigenous salt would be sold at a price far lower than that at which it would be profitable to introduce salt from England. At the same time, it is proper to mention that the natives will not use Liverpool salt, if they know it to be such; nor will they eat any white, clean-looking salt, lest it should be from Liverpool. Strange to say, salt has to undergo a certain process of adulteration, by mixture with mud and black solar evaporation salt, before it becomes fit for the Bengal market.—Calcutta Review.

College of Fort William, 23rd April, 1851.

THE NORTH-WESTERN BANK.

The directors of the North-Western Bank have published a long and elaborate statement of the affairs of that unlucky concern, embracing the report of Messrs. Smith and Parry, the special auditors. The losses lately suffered are set down at Rs. 7,88,083. Of this Rs. 1,40,520 is attributed to Major Angelo, as "defalcations;" Rs. 18,381 was lost on dealings in Agra and Oriental Bank scrip; the agencies at Calcutta, Mussoorie, and Lahore have sunk Rs. 3,46,660; and Rs. 2,82,520 is involved in bad and doubtful accounts at Meerut. The plan recommended for wiping off this loss is to reduce the value of the shares in name, as has already been done in reality, from Rs. 500 to Rs. 400 each. The losses of the Calcutta agency were chiefly on the bills of insolvent firms, the auditors being of opinion that not more than Rs. 4,000 will be forthcoming to meet very nearly three lacs due. Mr. Joseph Smith, however, who has in this and other items given a more favourable estimate than that of Messrs. Libery and Campbell, looks for as much as Rs. 14,000 from the "bills suspense account." The loan account of the same agency is described by the Calcutta auditors as in a very so-so condition,—securities vague, improper, or insufficient; money advanced on "produce in course of shipment," on "cases of goods," on packages which could not be counted, and on such articles as "wines, brandy, gin, haberdashery, soap, stationery, preserve, provisions, assorted woollens, tweeds, and such like shop stuffs." The report is in one respect a very satisfactory one,—it discloses the worst, and thus enables the shareholders to judge correctly of their position, and to secure the best means of escaping from it.

One small fact, briefly alluded to in the report, is worthy of special notice. Directors and shareholders seem to concur in opinion that a change of air should be tried. The commercial atmosphere of Calcutta, purified by the devastating storms of 1847-8, is believed likely to agree with their poor patient better than the cloudy skies of the Mofussil. Times are changed since all within the Ditch was deemed redolent of roguery and corruption—all beyond it pure as the breezes of Paradise. "The majority of votes as yet received from the Indian proprietors shows a decided preference to Calcutta being the Bank's future headquarters, and in that view the Directors must fully concur."—Hurkaru, May 14.

MISCELLANEOUS.

STEAM TO CHINA.—The Peninsular and Oriental Company's steamer Erin started hence for Penang, Singapore, and Hong-Kong on the morning of the 10th May, thus opening the direct line of steam communication betwixt this port and China. She carried a full cargo of valuable goods, including 1,070 chests of opium. The steamer Pacha, coming round from Bombay, where she went for orders, is expected here in time to continue the communication next month.—Hurkaru, May 15.

BENGAL MILITARY FUND.—Major Payne, late of the Bengal army, has addressed a letter to his former comrades, in which he tells them that he does not intend to canvass again for the appointment of Home Agent to the Military Fund, and gives a little advice in favour of entrusting the business to a house of agency. There is hardly a doubt that Major Henderson will be elected, and no better choice could be made.—Delhi Gaz. The following is an extract of the proceedings of a meeting of directors of the fund, February 22, 1851:—"That, as a mark of the high esteem of the directors, and of their appreciation of his services to the fund, and of his very long and beneficial connection with its interests as director and secretary, Major Henderson be requested to favour the directors by joining them as an honorary member of their body."

REFUND OF BATTÀ.—The Delhi Gazette mentions, as a widely circulated rumour, that the officers of the Punjab moveable brigade are to be called upon to refund the batta they have received for the campaign. The men, however, will be allowed to retain their share. The reason assigned for the order is, that the moveable brigade, though always in readiness, was never actually employed during the second Punjab war.

NATIVE LIBRARY.—A native paper informs us, that the native deputy magistrate of Beerbhoom, Baboo Gopal Lall Mittra, with the assistance of the judge, has succeeded in establishing a public vernacular library. It is intended to raise a subscription to erect a house for the accommodation of the books, and a nucleus for the library, in the shape of vernacular works, is already forthcoming. The reading-room is supported by native subscribers, of whom there are 64 paying 4 annas each per mensem. They take in all the best Bengalee papers, and are able to provide themselves with a fair supply of Bengalee books. The room is said to be always well attended.

RETURNED COOLIES.—The Hurkaru notices that the Lucknow, just arrived from Demerara, has brought back a considerable number of Indian emigrants from Guiana. They are reported to have improved alike in property, appearance, and intellect, and to have been as well cared for as they are in the Mauritius. We know of nothing which has so great a tendency to improve the Bengal coolie as emigration. They come back, bolder, more independent, and even physically stronger, and there is no class so dreaded by the zemindars as these returned emigrants.—Friend of India, May 8.

TORTURE.—A letter from Rajeshye mentions a case of horrible torture that was perpetrated at that place, on the person of one Kistodhur Sha, a servant of Mr. Jennings. His face was held over a pot of heated chillies till the blood spouted from his mouth and nose, to extort a confession regarding a dacoity that had recently occurred. The act was committed under the direct authority of the Deputy Magistrate's darogahs.—Englishman.

APPOINTMENTS OF CIVIL SERVANTS TO CERTAIN OFFICES.—The Governor-General has strongly objected to the election of Mr. Grey to the Secretaryship of the Bank of Bengal. He says in his minute, that he will not cancel an appointment which the Bengal Government has approved, but that, had he been upon the spot, he would not have consented to the office being held by a Civil servant. In the same minute, his lordship mentions two other Calcutta appointments, which he thinks ought not to be held by members of the Civil service. These are the Postmaster-Generalship and Chief-Magistrateship.—Ibid.

CHURCH AT LAHORE.—The arrangements for converting the great tomb of Anarkullee into a place of Christian worship are all but complete, and the inhabitants of that portion of Lahore may consider themselves fortunate in having such comfortable church accommodation, after recent flittings from pillar to post.—Lahore Chron. May 7.

CONNECTION WITH TEMPLES.—The legislative council has issued a draft Act, which, when made law, will have the effect of severing the last links of the Company's connection with the idol worship of India. It cancels the Act which placed the temple of Juggernath under the care of the rajah of Khoordah, and of course the allowance granted to the custodian will be withheld. It was announced some time ago, that the authorities in Leadenhall-street had sent out instructions to stop the rajah's stipend, should it appear on investigation that the Government was not pledged to continue it. The Act prohibits the taking of any tax or fee from pilgrims.—Hurkaru, May 15.

PUBLIC WORKS BY NATIVES.—A long list of works of public utility constructed in the Lower Provinces of Bengal by private individuals during 1849-50, which appears in the Hurkaru, contains the names of 107 gentlemen, only two of whom are Europeans. These native gentlemen have built seventy-four wells, seventeen tanks, two caravanserais, four bridges, one public school, three temples of Siva, and other religious edifices! The English school was built at Moorshedabad by several English gentlemen and Ranees Soornamoyie.

A DACOITY was perpetrated at a village near Gurulgocha, within the jurisdiction of the Howrah Police, on the 2nd May. The thieves, before plundering the house of Hurrochunder Chatterjee, pinioned all the household, put them to great torture, and then deliberately helped themselves to money and jewels. The screams of the pinioned and plundered people reached the ears of an honest but cowardly body of their countrymen, to the number of 200, who remained mute spectators of the outrage.

NEWSPAPER IN ASAM.—It appears from the Citizen, that the missionaries located in this part of the country have established a paper in the native character, containing illustrations. "It would," says the journal, "do honour in every respect to the native press of the metropolis; but, got up as it is at the very outskirts of civilization, the conductors deserve peculiar credit for their success."

MR. FORTUNE has arrived at Saharunpore, with a small body of Chinamen, and an ample supply of the tea-plant. Both men and plants are said to be in excellent order, and the experiment of an extensive growth of tea on the Himalayas is of domestic interest to us all, as well as of higher importance to those who make a study of the resources of India.—Delhi Gaz., May 10.

PROFESSOR STAKER, who died at Bishop's College, after a short illness, of liver complaint, could not have been above six or seven-and-thirty years of age. But for the opposition of Bishop Wilson, there is little doubt he would have been appointed principal of the college on the last vacancy. It was believed that Mr. Street's religious views savoured of Puseyism, and this was the obstacle to his promotion. He was an accomplished scholar, and one of the most earnest and conscientious of ministers; not eloquent, but full of action; ever alive to the solemn obligations of his sacred office, and sacrificing himself to the great mission to which he had been called.—Ibid.

CHANGES IN FIRMS.—The commencement of the commercial year has brought its usual budget of changes in the constitution of the mercantile firms of Calcutta. The firm of Leach, Kettlewell and Co. has been dissolved, and Mr. Robert Diggles is authorized to liquidate the outstanding claims on the house. Mr. J. P. Thomas has been admitted a partner in the house of Thomas, Marten and Co., and Mr. John Watson in that of Mackenzie, Lyall and Co. Two gentlemen, Greeks we believe, Messrs. Ralli and Mavrojani, have established themselves as merchants and agents, and Mr. Charles Jones Richards has made way for Mr. James Scott Elliott, in the house of Messrs. Gisborne and Co.

CONVICTION OF A BULLOCK.—The Delhi Gazette publishes a curious story of an affair at Mirzapore, which might have had a most serious termination. A bullock was accused by a local police officer, of having killed a man, and the magistrate ordered it to be arrested and brought into his own presence. He then condemned the bullock to death, and sent for his rifle to execute the sentence. Some Hindoos, however, prevailed on the Sessions Judge to interfere, and the sentence was respite.

THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL reached Simla on the evening of the 9th May, three days earlier than was expected. The result of his lordship's extensive journeyings in the Punjab, during the past six months and a half, will perhaps be slow, but not the less sure, in ultimately developing themselves in the shape of canals, roads, sanitary institutions, the opening of the communication with Bombay, &c., during the next four or five years; and though considerable expense had probably been incurred, in the trip to and from Peshawur, we entertain no doubt that it will ultimately be found to have been money well laid out in every respect. The people have, during the past and previous cold season, had practical proofs that there is a considerable difference between the march of a Sikh monarch and the progress of a Governor-General; they have become acquainted with the machinery of our government; they know that, if justice is denied them by the local authorities, it may be sought at the fountain head; they have found that, instead of marching, like the chief of the Khalsa government, at the head of devastating armies, destroying the land wherever he put his foot, the British ruler has been followed by engineers, ready to suggest modes of adding to the convenience of the people, to their comfort, and to their health, and prepared to carry them out as soon as sanctioned. The consideration of these questions might be greatly enlarged upon, and we may take an early opportunity of doing so.—Lahore Chron.

ON DUTY.—The Englishman hears that it is intended to relieve Lieut.-col. Sage from his duties as superintending-engineer of the S. E. Provinces, and that Capt. Fraser will act as superintending engineer, and Capt. Sharpe will officiate as garrison engineer and civil architect. Major Edwards, c.b. has returned from furlough to Calcutta, and will succeed Mr. Vansittart as deputy commissioner of Jullundur.

GENERAL JUNG BAHADUR has issued orders to destroy all the dogs in the city of Kutmandoo. In two days no less than 1,100 were killed. The general shows that he appreciates English society; he is a constant visitor at the Residency, although he is compelled to make his visits private. His trip to England has made a great alteration upon him.—Delhi Gaz.

VESSELS BURNED.—On the 13th May the clipper Ariel was burnt off the mouths of the Hooghly; cargo to the value of about 100,000*l.* has been destroyed—no lives were lost. The Buckinghamshire, Kurramany, and Ardaser, have all been burnt in these seas within the past two months—all save the last, which is doubtful, by incendiaries, at a loss of probably little short of a quarter of a million sterling. The native seamen are paid in advance, and the object seems to be to relieve themselves from labour by the destruction of the vessel. The Calcutta lascar begin to attain the bad eminence, as incendiaries, which those of Bombay have hitherto mainly enjoyed.

A BRAHMIN, who murdered his uncle in the act of sacrificing a kid on the night of the last Kali Pooja, has been condemned by the Nizamut Adawlut to suffer the extreme penalty of the law.

OUDE.—We have received the following letter from Lucknow.—“The minister has in some way displeased the king, but his temporary disgrace is no proof of his coming downfall; it is probably only a whim of his master. Uily Nucky forced one of the moonshees to send in his resignation, but the king refused to accept it. The minister has tact, but he wants energy and firmness; his disposition is obliging and affable, his influence in the harem, and the complicated state of the revenue affairs of Oude, secure his position. The king has among other things been shutting up all the dogs of Lucknow.—Englishman.”

BABOO PRUSSONATH ROY, a wealthy native, has agreed to give 50,000 rupees towards the construction of a public road between Bauleah and Degapoteah viâ Nagpore.

CAPT. CLOSE.—The Calcutta papers mentioned a short time ago that a court of inquiry was sitting at Gwalior to investigate certain charges brought against Capt. Close, of the 65th N.I. We now learn from Gwalior that the inquiry has been going on for six weeks, and the Court is still sitting. It appears that a jemadar of the 2nd contingent cavalry, commanded by Capt. Close, was tried about ten months ago for insubordinate conduct towards a rissaldar, his superior officer, when on command at Boorhanpoor, and dismissed the service. This jemadar had accompanied Sir R. Shakespear through Khiva to Russia, and from thence to England; he looking upon Sir R. Shakespear as his patron, laid his complaints of ill-treatment and injustice before him. Sir R. Shakespear took the part of his follower, and handed the matter up to the Governor-General, making strong representations in the right quarter. A court of inquiry was in consequence ordered, and is now sitting. The Court is a closed one, and has been instructed to give an opinion on the charges. This much, however, has oozed out, that Sir R. Shakespear has charged Capt. Close with falsehood, and withholding evidence at the court-martial on the jemadar, that might have saved the man's commission.—Delhi Gaz. May 17.

DISTURBANCE ON THE SOUTHERN FRONTIER.—Since the disturbances consequent upon the attempt to abolish the Meriah sacrifices, we have heard little as to the half-savage tribes on our southern frontier. A letter from Cuttack gives the following account of a recent petty rebellion:—“The rebel Kumalooc-themi Pykarow, who was at the head of the late severe disturbances in the tributary mehal of Nyaghur, about sixty miles from Cuttack, has surrendered himself up to the authorities, but at the same time he has left his two sons, with the greater number of the rebels, in the hills, who are on the qui vive to break out again, and doubtless commit worse ravages than hitherto, in the event of nothing being done to harm their father. Four companies of the 30th M.N.I., and a company of the Khoordah Paiks, were in the disturbed country, stationed at different places to quiet it, but with little success, until about the beginning of March, at which time upwards of 200 villages had been burnt. The commissioner was on the spot until this time, when Mr. Ainslie, his assistant, arrived and took charge, and the commissioner returned to Cuttack. From this time things seem to take a much more satisfactory turn, and on the 20th March, Mr. Ainslie thought it advisable to concentrate the troops at Illamuttee, near the residence of the rajah, and, a few days after, sent all the companies of the 30th M.N.I. back to Cuttack, though he had not succeeded in catching the ringleaders of the rebellion. However, about the 31st of March, Pykarow gave himself up to a havidar of the Khoordah Paiks, and proceeded with him to Pooree, where the commissioner is at present. The rajah has been deposed, and his estate made over to Government, as there is no doubt the whole of the row has been caused by his tyranny towards his subjects, and bad management in every way. Upwards of 1,000,—some say 2,000,—have accompanied Pykarow to make known their grievances, which, by all accounts, are not imaginary ones. Capt. Findley, of the 30th M.N.I., had a very narrow escape; he was riding through the jungles, looking after the rebels in advance of his men, when a most villanous-looking wretch, armed with a sword and axe, rushed out, and was in the act of making a cut at the captain, when he luckily caught sight of him, and slipped off the opposite side of his horse, and thus avoided the blow. Capt. Findley then drew his sword, and had a regular running fight with him for some little time, when the rebel dropped his axe, which Capt. Findley picked up, and threw at him, just as he approached a small nullah, and was going to bolt; this seemed to cause him to stumble; in the mean time, the sepoys arrived and secured him. He is now, with some few others who were caught some time ago, in the Cuttack jail.—Englishman, May 5.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE MONSOON.—On the 5th May a furious hurricane visited Madras, and swept across the Peninsula of India;—about eleven inches of rain fell on the Coromandel coast within twenty-four hours, and nearly a similar amount in the Ceded districts. The appearance of the tempest became manifest on the 28th, and from this date the weather continued threatening and squally:

betwixt the 2nd and 5th 18½ inches of rain fell, so as to relieve the suffering from drought that had for some time prevailed. One brig was driven on shore at the outset of the gale, and dashed to pieces almost immediately, as she struck; nine brigs or native craft, of smaller size, were soon afterwards wrecked, twelve were missing,—eleven men were drowned, while heavy losses, the extent of which cannot as yet be ascertained, occurred all along the coast to the north and south. The mischief occasioned by the torrents on shore seems to have been very great indeed: foundations were undermined, tanks burst, and roads cut up. At Bellary, in the Ceded districts, in the interior, the weather had been threatening from the beginning of the month; early on the 5th the rain set in,—the gale commenced late at night, and blew till noon next day. The destruction of houses and of cattle seems to have been very great indeed—no human lives were lost.

LIEUT. JOHNSTONE.—The murder of Lieut. Johnstone, of the 3rd Madras Cavalry, had not been discovered. The officers of his regiment had advertised in the Indian papers a reward of Rs. 1,000 for the apprehension and conviction of the assassin. The following additional particulars of the deed are given in a letter from Jaulnah:—"Lieut. Johnstone was at dinner shortly after seven o'clock. The entrance of the perpetrator of the foul deed into the room was so sudden, that Mrs. Johnstone, who was sitting at table, did not see him; his flight having been also as sudden. The villain had placed the muzzle of the pistol so close to the person of his victim, that the jacket was burnt by the flame that had issued from it. The ball entered the back of the unfortunate sufferer, and passed into his intestines. No servant appears to have been in the room at the time, which is extraordinary; and the murderer must have been well acquainted with the locality, and with the habits of the inmates. Soon after the occurrence, the officer commanding the cavalry paraded his men; the pistol on one of them was found dirty, and on him some suspicion rests. It appears that it is customary at this station, for a certain number of pistols to be discharged by the cavalry every evening in their lines, and it has yet to be ascertained if the man whose pistol was found foul, was one of those who had been detailed for this duty. Of course, every inquiry will be instituted, and of the strictest kind. The poor young fellow, when questioned if he had any suspicion as to who might have had any imaginable grounds of enmity against him, said that he supposed the person might be some unfortunate man that he might have had occasion to punish."

It appeared, on an examination of the body, that the ball had taken an upward direction, instead of penetrating the intestines, as was originally thought; from which circumstance it is very reasonably inferred that the assassin had crawled into the room on his knees.

The latest accounts mention an evident disinclination—on the part of the men of his corps, we imagine—to give information to the Court of Inquiry.

MR. FORSYTH.—From Calicut we learn that a most cold-blooded attempt was made a few days ago to poison Mr. Forsyth, the civil and sessions judge of Tellicherry, and the officer commanding that station, who was dining with him. It seems that the officer was invited to dine with Mr. F., but hardly did they partake of the soup, when both the gentlemen were attacked with severe retching, and were otherwise so unwell that, had it not been for the timely arrival of the surgeon, the consequences might have been fatal. Two bearers of Mr. Forsyth suffered from the same symptoms, and a dog died; hence it is presumed that some poisonous drug must have been introduced into the soup previously to its being brought to table. Suspicion rests on two or three individuals.—Bangalore Herald, May 13.

SHIPBUILDING AT MAULMAIN.—From a private letter from Maulmain we learn that the ship-building business is at present in great activity there, and that Maulmain is becoming an extensive building port. There were at the date of the letter (April 20th), twelve large vessels on the stocks, while there were orders for about as many more. Some of the vessels in course of being built, and which promised to be very fine, belong to Danbar, shipowner in London, and are intended for the passenger line to Calcutta.—Athenæum, May 13.

MISCELLANEOUS.

GEOLOGICAL DATA.—We take the following, in reference to the great Deccan Lake, from a note of a valued correspondent: we perfectly concur in the soundness of his views. We greatly marvel that the evidence of lakes of comparatively recent date should have escaped the notice of observers so keen, penetrating, and exact as Sykes, Newbold, and Malcolmson, who have all written to such admirable purpose on the geology of the Deccan: "I send you one of each of three kinds of shells taken out of the compound of the house alluded to by Col. Grant at Aurungabad: they are shells which exist in the present rivers of the Deccan, and are in comparatively very recent alluvium, the uppermost of all the fluviatile strata which have for ages been spread layer upon layer over the fossil eleppers of the Godavery to a depth (in the Godavery) of forty feet under the strata of these shells. They are taken out of a tract of low ground near the river Kaum, in the cantonment of Aurungabad, which must formerly have been covered by the river, consequent perhaps on a bund, or from the river having (some hundred years ago) been higher than at present. Stupendous lakes no doubt existed in the Deccan in former ages, both before and after the upheavement of the trap rocks: some of the fossil shells of Ellichpoor and Gwalior would appear to have been buried under molten rocks, and their matrix converted into cherts, the shells being silicified. Then again the black alluvium on the top of trap rocks (whenver a flat plateau exists) shows that more recent locustrine waters must have overtopped them, subsequent to their upheavement."—Bombay Times.

THE WHEEL TAX COMMISSIONERS have given in their report; there is said to be no sufficient ground for criminal action against any of the suspected parties, but one of the culprits will, it is said, be allowed to turn Queen's evidence, and strange disclosures may then be looked for. None of the Europeans are said to be suspected of dishonesty, but the extreme negligence in some things exhibited by them, and derangement of their own pecuniary affairs, are said to be represented as greatly tending to impair the efficiency of the police establishment. It is not imagined that any step beyond the administration of some salutary counsel will be adopted by Government. Financial entanglement is too common a thing amongst us to be noticed, however widely it may tend to spread amongst the natives the belief of pervading corruption.—Bombay Times, May 26.

THE ORIENTAL BANK ROBBERY.—The examinations of the prisoners in this matter were proceeding. Dorabjee, the principal ledger keeper of the bank, has been found guilty of some forgeries, full particulars of which have not as yet become known. One of these is a check for 2,000*l.* drawn by him in the name of Nicol and Co., and desired by him to be cashed, which it was accordingly for his own benefit. The total amount of the frauds will, it is understood, be fully covered by the securities of those who committed them, so that the bank will lose nothing.

LOSS OF THE "FALKLAND" STEAMER.—Intelligence has been received of the foundering of the Falkland steamer, on the 6th instant. She broke her back just behind the paddle-boxes, and sunk immediately. The Falkland left Bombay on the 1st of May, in charge of the Berenice steamer. Though of extremely shallow draft of water, she was so beautifully bound together, that no danger was apprehended. For the first three days she behaved beautifully, when the swell became heavy, and she began to work so dreadfully that all on board expected she would part in two. The swell of the Madras hurricane was now coming up, and the vessel, when within fifty miles of the Indus, broke across, and sunk in deep water almost instantaneously. The sight from on board the Berenice was one of the most extraordinary ever witnessed. So suddenly did she disappear, that not an atom of kit could be saved by any one—the crew had barely time to escape; the only life lost was that of the quartermaster. Captain Fenner, of the Berenice, had his kit on board the Falkland, which of course perished with the vessel. We mentioned how heavily the Falkland worked in her trial trip, but had no apprehension of any danger from her despatch: although the winds were southerly, and the sky somewhat troubled, it was not till the 3rd that the signs of the approach of the Madras hurricane began to make their appearance, too late to afford warning. The Falkland must have cost between 15,000*l.* and 20,000*l.*, as no expense had been spared upon her: her engines were beautiful specimens of mechanism, with all the latest improvements.—Bombay Times, May 17.

THE SOUTH-WEST MONSOON.—A series of most destructive hurricanes have just occurred to the south of us, in the beginning of May; the first near Ceylon, in which no fewer than fifteen vessels and eighteen human lives have been lost. On the 25th April the first symptoms of the setting in of the S.W. monsoon made their appearance, a violent thunderstorm, a severe fall of rain, and heavy gale of wind, having then occurred. The ships Colombo and Aboukir were prevented by it from sailing, though ready to put to sea. For five days the storm continued to rage, and on the 1st May the country brigs Alerine and Sidatorre Carolina broke from their moorings, ran ashore, and soon became total wrecks: the brig Zoe soon afterwards followed, and the Colombo, after dragging her anchors for some distance, took the ground, beached over, and was speedily dashed to pieces, with the loss of seven of her crew. These are all the particulars that have yet reached us—our dates extending only to the 8th, at which date the gale seems to have moderated: we shall yet, we fear, have many accounts of disaster to relate not yet known to us.—Bombay Times, May 26.

CAPT. S. V. W. HART, who died on the 11th inst., at the Neilgherry Hills, whither he had gone for the benefit of his health, was distinguished as a man of general ability and accomplishments, especially as an oriental scholar. In 1839, while at Kurrachee with his regiment, he made a journey to the celebrated mud volcanoes of Hinglaj, near Sonmear, and gave the first and by far the fullest account ever published of this most interesting region. When in Scinde he collected a large amount of information in reference to the manners, customs, manufactures, and natural productions of the country, but little of which unfortunately has ever appeared in print. He was still more conspicuously and honourably distinguished for his moral than his intellectual excellences: with heart and hand open as day to melting charity, no appeal from suffering was ever made to him in vain. He was one of the earliest supporters of the School of Industry, now flourishing amongst us, and one of the most eager advocates for the permanent establishment of a museum for general public resort; and with this view he used his utmost endeavours in promoting an exhibition in the Town Hall eighteen months since, when the railway model and electric telegraph of the Guicowar furnished him with a nucleus. He expected by this means to make the world aware of the sort of thing intended, and hoped that at the outset the Town Hall might be allowed to become a place of permanent exhibition for pictures and statues, at all events till the more enlarged establishment was brought into existence. He was one of the most active and efficient members of the Deccan Vernacular Society, and, indeed, in the cause of general popular enlightenment of every description. He was in 1849 appointed a member of the Education Board, on the retirement of Dr. McLennan to Europe, and here, as in every other quarter, devoted himself with the utmost zeal to the task entrusted to him. He was so modest and retiring in all these things that it was at all times most difficult to get him to assume the position, or accept the commendations, to which he was entitled—literally doing good by stealth, and blushing to find it fame.—Bombay Times, May 24.

ALLEGED OPPRESSION.—Mr. Frere has been appointed to inquire into the affairs of the Settance Joetabhaie, widow of a banker at Baroda, who enjoyed the protection of the British Government, and left a heritage of nearly a million sterling to two sons. The Settance having complained of the mismanagement of her affairs by her man of business, Baba Nafday, was at once robbed by the wretch of her child, on the plea of its being spurious, and she herself placed under constraint, and stated to have been an adulteress, but never a mother. Having got possession of the baby, he managed to delude his own government and the British resident at the Court into the belief that the Settance was what he termed her. Colonel Outram, on his return from Egypt, a twelvemonth since, determined to institute a searching scrutiny into the matter. He first discovered the enormous corruption that had been resorted to, then convicted Baba Nafday of fraud—established the theft, and afterwards the genuineness of the child, and finally cleared the character of the widow of every imputation that had been brought against her. Ultimately he instituted a minute search into the records of the residency, through means of which such fearful disclosures are said to have been made that the only mode of clearing the British character of the suspicion now attaching to it will be the publication of the whole of the papers, which will, we trust, be called for before the vacation of Parliament. The widow, meanwhile, is permitted a pittance of 100*l.* a year, out of an income of 10,000*l.* at least, and her claims to the right of a Hindoo widow to adopt an heir have not hitherto been complied with.—Bombay Times, May 26.

DHERA ISMAEL KHAN, 8th May:—"Brigadier Hodgson is expected here daily, and it is reported that he will make Dhera Ismael Khan his head-quarters. The appearance of the country around the town is singularly wild and uninviting: so little rain falls that the stiff alluvial soil cannot sustain a blade of grass, and no vegetation is met with except a few straggling bushes, and a succulent plant called llana by the natives; nothing else here seems capable of bidding defiance to drought. Cultivation is carried on along the banks of the Indus by irrigation from wells, the water being raised by the Persian wheel,—wheat and gram abundant and cheap. Lient Paget was a few days ago severely kicked in the groin by a horse at Esakhyle, when in charge of a treasure party: he will be brought down immediately in Capt. FitzGerald's steamer. The nature of the accident has not yet been correctly ascertained, the native doctor not having furnished any report of the circumstance. The fort on the N.W. side of the town is named Aklgurh, and is being put in thorough repair under the direction of Capt. FitzGerald. The fort has a broad ditch and four bastions, on each of which is mounted a long 18-pounder, en barbette. The marauding tribes in the hills in the mean time are quiet. The Shoranees occupy the neighbourhood of the Tukht-i-Suliman, which is situated due west from this: its place is incorrectly set down on the maps."

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

GUNNERY OFFICERS.

Bombay Castle, May 10, 1851.—The subjoined rules regarding the appointment of gunnery officers, having been approved by the Honourable the Court of Directors, in supercession of those laid down in Separate General Order, No. 16, of 1848, paras. 124 to 127, are published for general information.

The allowance to officers holding first class certificates is fixed at rupees (40) forty per mensem, and to officers holding second class certificates at rupees (20) twenty per mensem.

The above allowances are to be drawn by all officers of the rank of midshipman, mate, or lieutenant, who may obtain the requisite certificates of qualification, in addition to the personal pay of their rank, and without reference to their holding the appointment of gunnery officer on board any of the ships or vessels.

The above order is to have effect from the first of March last.

CHINA.

A private letter from Canton gives the following news from the interior of China:—"It is stated that the two parties, at present contending for the mastery, had a pitched battle in the adjoining province of Kwang-sai. The result was unfavourable to the imperialists, which sufficiently accounts for the difficulty in obtaining any correct information regarding the engagement. The following particulars are all that can be obtained:—Commissioner Lin arrived some time ago from Peking. The imperialists shortly after advanced to attack the rebels. The latter allowed them to come on until sufficiently near to suit their purpose. They then cooled the courage of the imperialists by drawing up a number of sluices, and so inundated them unexpectedly, and causing them to retreat. This, however, was not allowed to take place quietly or without interruption. Whilst making their escape from the sudden influx of waters, they were thrown into complete confusion by the explosion of a quantity of powder which had previously been deposited for that purpose near their expected line of retreat. Instead of following up their advantage, the rebels have seized on an island near the place of the engagement, and are there lying in supine inaction."

CEYLON.
COURT-MARTIAL.

CAPTAIN WATSON, OF THE CEYLON RIFLES.

Sentence.—The Court having maturely weighed and considered the evidence in support of the charge against the prisoner, Captain Albert Watson, of the Ceylon rifle regiment, and what he said in his defence, and the evidence adduced in support of it, is of opinion that he, the prisoner, Captain Albert Watson, Ceylon rifle regiment, is not "guilty" of the first instance of the charge preferred against him; that he is "not guilty" of the second instance of the charge against him; that he is "not guilty" of the third instance of the charge preferred against him; that he is "not guilty" of the fourth instance of the charge preferred against him; and do most fully and most honourably acquit him, Captain Albert Watson, Ceylon rifle regiment, of the said charge and the four instances contained in it.

The Court is further of opinion that the signatures attached to the four proclamations before the Court are not genuine, but are mere forgeries, as asserted by him, the said Captain Albert Watson, Ceylon rifle regiment, before the said committee of the House of Commons at Westminster, on the 14th of February, 1850; and that the statements then and there made by him, the said Captain Watson, Ceylon rifle regiment, before the said committee, with regard to the said signatures, were "true" and not false.

MAURITIUS.

Earl Grey has forwarded his opinion on capital punishment, approving the decision that was come to on the question of private executions brought before the Council by Sir G. Anderson last year. His Excellency (Governor Higginson) presented the following minute on this subject:—

"I beg leave to apprise the Honourable the Legislative Council, that, on the question of the comparative advantages of publicity and qualified privacy in the execution of criminals, which was some short time back under their consideration, her Majesty's Secretary of State concurs in opinion with those who advocate the established practice of publicity. In making this communication, Earl Grey notices the recent frequency of the crime of murder in the colony, and observes that it is highly important that capital punishment should be made either a more certain consequence of murder, or by some means more efficacious. He adds that, if there be reason to suppose, as has been stated, that death by hanging inspires more terror in the minds of the Indians than death by beheading, he would be prepared to approve of the former method being substituted for the latter.

"I have consulted the judges of the superior court upon this subject, and they consider that the cord is preferable to the axe. In this opinion I concur; although it appears to me to be very doubtful whether the change will produce much effect in the suppression of the crime.

"I conceive that our attention ought to be directed more to the removal of the causes which lead to the commission of sanguinary crime amongst the Indian population than to the manner of their punishment: of these the chief, as I have elsewhere stated, is the disproportion of the sexes; for this the remedy is obvious; but serious difficulty is opposed to the application of it, from the deep-rooted prejudice that prevails in India against the emigration of respectable married or single women. The sedulous efforts of the Government continue to be directed to the encouragement of female immigration, and I have lately addressed the Governments of Bengal and Madras upon the subject.

"The barbarous notion also held by the Indian males, that they possess an absolute right over the lives of the female members of their households, and which has been strikingly exemplified in some recent trials, induces them to view the mere taking of life more as an act of retributive justice, which they consider themselves bound to perform, when they believe that the caste or honour of the individual herself, or of the family to which she belongs, is compromised by her conduct, than as an infraction of the law human or divine. The extreme difficulty of dealing with a doctrine so outrageous as this, is obvious; and it is no less manifest that the evil can only be overcome by means of education and the elevation of the very low moral and social standard which at present prevails amongst this ignorant and less civilized section of our community.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

The Hindu theory of caste may be viewed in three different aspects. The first is that which the Smṛiti or the Vedas present; the second is exhibited in the Smṛiti, the Purāṇas, and other Shāstras; the third is observed in the practice of the day. In other words, the three primary rules of the Hindu faith are equally decisive in their doctrine of caste, though they exhibit it under different phases. The Vedas give the simplest outlines; the Smṛiti and the Purāṇas fill up the rude touches, and present a body to the system; the practice of the age has improved on the Shāstras with a vengeance, and presents a monstrous picture, at which Menu himself might stare with amazement.

The most learned pandit in Bengal has need to talk with diffidence of what he may consider to be the teaching of the Vedas on any point, especially when negative propositions are concerned. It may be doubted whether a copy of the entire Vedas is procurable in any part of Hindustan; it is more than probable that such a copy does not exist in Bengal. It would scarcely be modest or safe, under such circumstances, to say that such and such doctrines are not contained in the Vedas. We wish it, therefore, to be understood, once for all, that when we speak of the Vedas, we mean such portions of them as have issued in portable shapes from the European or the Indian press. We do not pretend to have seen, much less read, all the Vedas, nor are we acquainted with occult passages lurking in their inaccessible parts.

The Vedas are divided into Sanhitas and Brāhmanas; the former being devotional, the latter didactic. The Sanhitas appear to pre-suppose a state of society in which an order of priests was held in the highest reverence. They were considered as the repositories of learning, and favourites of the superior powers. Their enemies were denounced as spiritual outlaws, whose destruction might be piously prayed for.

The Brāhmanas, or didactic parts, inculcate expressly the idea of a four-fold division of caste, of which the first three are separated by a broad line from the fourth. The Brahmin, the Kshetriya, and the Vaisya, are considered races of peculiar excellency. Birth, in any of these races, is held as a reward of virtue and piety. The Sūdra, on the contrary, is a low and ignoble race, destitute of the privilege of studying the Vedas.

Of the three exalted races, the Vedas of course look upon the Brahmins as the most dignified and honourable. A few passages there are which show that the Kshetriyas sometimes contested the palm of superiority with the Brahmins; but the Brahmin is nevertheless the hero of the Vedas.

The theory of caste contained in the Smṛiti, and other Shāstras, inferior to the Vedas, is distinguished principally by its greater development. The caste of the Smṛiti is to the caste of the Vedas as the full-grown tree is to the tender plant; but the full-grown tree often presents an appearance very different from its first germ. Without noticing the gradual development of the stems, it would be difficult to identify the stately banian with the diminutive plant. Some general features are, however, unmistakable. The system of caste upheld by the Smṛiti appears gigantic in comparison with that of the Vedas, but contains nothing which may not be traced to the original institution. The Smṛiti speaks more dogmatically and boldly of sacerdotal dignity, and looks down with greater haughtiness on the degradation of the Sūdra. When the Vedas were composed, Brahminical ascendancy had not reached its climax. The priests were, indeed, honoured as the guardians of literature and religion; the respect due to intellectual eminence was cheerfully tendered; they were venerated as men whose occupations were peaceful, who toiled in solitude for the improvement of literature, who chanted the Vedas, and offered sacrifices for the well-being of the state. The indignation of the whole community would be excited against the sacrilegious individual who would dare to injure or insult such a fraternity. All this was natural, and in some respects reasonable; but there was something in the principle of caste which was pregnant with corruption,—something so invidious in the exaltation of race above race,—that it must, sooner or later, have broken through the restraints of reason and moderation. The Brahmins did not rest contented with the dignity due to priests. They began to arrogate to themselves divine honours. Nothing less than the title of earthly gods, or equal honours with Vishnu and other celestials, would satisfy their ambition. The pretensions of Hildebrand were trifling in comparison with those of the Brahmins. He laboured to magnify the dignity of a pontiff already invested with sovereign power, and to exalt the honour of a throne already revered as the holy see. He personated a royal priest, who held the keys of heaven, but whose pretensions were owing to promotion or election, not race. The Brahminical theory invests every offspring of Brahma's mouth with the privileges of a pope by virtue of his birth. His person and property are declared sacred, his word immutable, his wisdom unrivalled, his powers unlimited. The monopoly of learning by the Brahmins was the cause of such lofty pretensions. There were few readers or writers beyond the sacerdotal college. There was no public opinion to control the Brahmins; no fear of criticism to restrain their vagrancies; no community of independent readers to keep their imaginations at bay. They fancied what they pleased, and they wrote what they fancied.

The system of caste, as it is upheld in the present day, is very different. The Vaisyas and Sūdras, as pure orders, are extinct, at least in Bengal. Kshetriyas are scarce. The dignity of the twice-born is almost monopolized by Brahmins. The degradation of the Sūdras is shared by the Varna Sankaras, or mixed classes, whose name is legion. The Vaidyas stand at the top of the mixed classes, and lay claim to the privileges of the twice-born. The Kayasthas rank next to them, and are the leaders of the classes accounted Sūdras. They are otherwise called the writer class, and are, both in profession and practice, pen-men.

The political ascendancy of the Muhammadan and other foreign powers in India has, in some measure, led to the diminution of Brahminical influence. The "earthly gods" do not now meet with the unequalled reverence which they once claimed and received, except when they have succeeded in enforcing their divine pretensions by means of worldly possessions. The fire, which they are said to have emitted from their mouths at one time for the destruction of their enemies, as plentifully as a volcano, has long since been extinguished. The Kayasthas, and some other servile castes, have acquired great influence over them. In many cases they are masters and leaders, instead of being (agreeably to Menu's ordinances) obedient slaves, of the Brahmins. They still assume the title of Dasses, or slaves of the twice-born. But their yoke must be particularly easy, since their servility does not incapacitate them from presiding over religious corporations, whereof Brahmins are mere members. The president of the Dharma Sabha of Calcutta is a Kayastha and Sūdra, while the secretary is a Brahmin. There are some Brahmins still who exhibit the pride and affect the purity of their ancestors, and refuse to look upon Sūdras as others than slaves, or to perform spiritual offices for them. The number of such proud purists is very small: the majority are glad to recognize the slaves as their patrons and supporters.

The Brahmins no longer pass through the four stages prescribed by Menu, nor do they abstain from those employments which, however inconsistent with their vows, are sufficiently lucrative. They accept service under any one; sell their learning, though that is reckoned a heinous crime in the Shāstras; live by their pens, and condescend to the most un priestly avocations for the sake of gain. But, however humbled and shorn of their powers, they are still very highly respected.

The prominent features of caste, as it exists at present, are,—1, the spiritual supremacy of the Brahmins; 2, the improved positions of some of the mixed races; 3, the total prohibition of intermarriage and interchange of hospitality; and, 4, the numerous ramifications of the same castes introduced by the creation of Kulins.

1. The spiritual supremacy of the Brahmins remains unaltered, at least in theory. They are still venerated by the other castes. The Kshetriyas have long lost their importance; the Vaisyas are perhaps extinct; but the Brahmin continues the same in matters spiritual as he was in the age of the Vedas. Buddhist, Muhammadan, and British ascendancy, have contributed successively to diminish his influence; but wherever there is faith in Hinduism, respect is paid to Brahmins. The fact is another instance of the superiority of the mind over the body. The Brahmins, who represented the intellect of the country, have preserved their credit long after the diminution of Kshetriya influence, which symbolized physical power.

2. The improved position of some of the mixed races appears from the importance which is attached to the Kayasthas and the Vaidyas; the former as writers, and the latter as physicians, are undoubtedly reckoned as gentlemen. They occupy in Bengal a rank second only to Brahmins. The priests look up to them, as the Rishis of yore looked up to the Kshetriyas. The other mixed classes are less respected. Nine of them, usually called the Nobosakh, are treated with greater regard than the rest. The Brahmin will condescend to drink water from their hands, i.e. he will have no objection to employ them as water-bearers,—an honour which he will not confer on others! The remaining castes are held in utter contempt, as mechanics and artificers. The Brahmin will consider himself defiled by their very touch. They actually represent the humble Sūdras of Menu's age.

3. The total prohibition of intermarriage and of the interchange of hospitalities is another characteristic of caste as it now prevails. Intermarriages between the several castes were always discouraged, but never so strictly prohibited as in the present age. In fact, there is now no degradation in caste, other than that which is caused by forming a matrimonial connection, or joining in a convivial party with a person of a different caste. In former times, no Brahmin was excommunicated for marrying a Sudra; the offspring of such a union would, indeed, be lowered in rank, but the parents would not suffer. In the present age, no Brahmin dares contract such a marriage, on pain of excommunication.

4. The numerous ramifications of the same castes, introduced by the creation of Kulins, though never intended by the original law-givers, have, nevertheless, served to extend the distinction of caste to a fearful length. Not only are Brahmins, Kayasthas, &c., prohibited to intermarry or interchange hospitalities with other castes, but they are also forbidden to do so with many families of their own orders. In marriage, the question of Kulism requires to be considered before the contract can be formed.

We shall illustrate this sub-division of caste by a simple example. The Brahmins in Bengal are divided into several Srenies, such as Rauries, Barenders, Vaidiks, and Saptasatias. The Srenies, again, are sub-divided into Kulins, Srotriyas, and Vangsajias. Kulins, Srotriyas, and Vangsajias, will interchange hospitalities, but not freely intermarry. The different Srenies will neither intermarry nor interchange hospitalities.

Such is the gigantic system of Hindu caste in its several stages of development.—Calcutta Review.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

MONDAY, June 30, 1851.

NOTHING is easier, says an ethical writer, than to give advice. There is scarcely a family, or a club, or a tavern-parlour, that would not present at least one individual, who could tell how this great empire might be much better governed than it is; how its affairs, foreign and domestic, might be more skilfully managed; how its finances might be more economically administered; how its trade might be enlarged, and its people rendered infinitely happier. Government, in the opinion of many, is so facile a function, that it calls for no qualifications besides common sense and common honesty.

To this species of self-deception we owe a multitude of theories of government and schemes of administration, which practical men discover at once to be not merely impossible, but absurd. Some bear the impress of impracticability upon their very aspect; others require a little consideration, like a mock syllogism, before we can detect the fallacies that lie beneath the surface of the proposition.

We have, in our time, met with various projects for the amelioration of India,—well-intentioned in design, plausible in terms, and highly promising, which, though specious as the glistening speech of Belial, were equally hollow. In truth, closet-reformers have seldom done much service to society: they may lay down principles, but the more difficult task, of embodying those principles in practicable measures, demands the union of experience with knowledge,—a combination of qualities which form that rare character, the wise and accomplished statesman.

We have been led into these reflections by the strange project gravely propounded by Colonel Dickinson, in the Court of Proprietors of East-India stock, a few days back, by which he proposed to improve and extend the public ways in the province of Guzerat by expending annually thereon a fixed per-centage on the revenue of each collectorate. The project experienced the singular infelicity of being pronounced impracticable by the members of the Court who supported it—even the seconder said he did not agree with it. How these gentlemen could have brought their understandings under such a severe state of discipline, that they could advocate a scheme from which they dissented, it would be worth knowing. But no matter; our business is with the proposition itself.

Why it should be necessary to set apart annually a fixed proportion of a particular part of the revenue for an object like this, is not apparent. If money is wanted for the improvement or extension of the ways in any part of the presidency of Bombay, why not take it, when required, from the aggregate revenue? If it be not wanted, why should it be reserved at all? To bind the government, under all circumstances, whether an outlay is required or not, and should any extraordinary demand happen to be made upon a fluctuating revenue for other purposes, rigidly to expend a certain per-centage of the receipts upon roads, does appear an almost puerile scheme. The object of the proposer was no doubt a benevolent one; but we should be disposed to think he had imparted his plan to no one before he announced it to the Court of Proprietors.

It is gratifying, however, to find, from the statements made by members of the Court of Directors upon the occasion, that an impulse has at length been given to road-making in the cotton districts in the West of India.

UPON a former occasion, we spoke of the Ceylon inquiry as bearing the characteristics of a drama, passing from tragedy to comedy, and from comedy to farce. The later stages of this extraordinary investigation supply further features of analogy, adding another to the former phases, and exhibiting, in the case of Captain Watson, the magical changes of a pantomime.

This officer, one of the most prominent agents in suppressing the insurrection, was charged by Mr. Baillie, the Chairman of the Ceylon Committee, in the House of Commons, in February, 1850, with having issued certain "savage" proclamations in the island. Captain Watson, being then in England, declared those documents to be forgeries. The Ceylon Committee took up the question, and their inquiries afforded reason to believe that the documents were really fabricated, and that the forger was one Tickery Banda, a native employé of the Government. It was, however, determined to institute an inquiry upon the spot into their authenticity, and two Commissioners, Messrs. Morehead and Rhode, of the Madras Civil Service, were appointed for that purpose by the Governor of Ceylon, and they reported, after a most searching investigation, that the documents were undoubtedly genuine. "The direct evidence given," said these gentlemen, "is, in our opinion, accurate and complete, and strongly corroborated by the probabilities of the case; unless, therefore, perjury be imputed to the numerous witnesses examined,—but for the commission of which on the part of any one of them we have been unable to discover that any sufficient object existed,—we are satisfied that no other conclusion than that we have recorded could by any possibility have been arrived at.” Strong as are the terms in which this opinion is expressed, the details furnished in the report of the Commissioners appear fully to justify them.

Captain Watson was thereupon ordered to Ceylon, there to undergo a trial by court-martial, the result of which is, that he has been “most fully and most honourably” acquitted, the Court declaring their opinion “that the signatures attached to the proclamations in question are not genuine, but forgeries, as asserted by Captain Watson!”

Where these unprecedented contradictions will end, and when the mystery in which the whole affair is shrouded will be dispelled, it would pose an Œdipus to tell.

It argues favourably for the administration of our Indian territories, that whereas we have, besides sundry hunters-out of abuses in the House of Commons, a sharp-sighted ex-Governor-General in the House of Peers, ever upon the alert to discover anything wrong in the working of the machinery he once directed, the session has nearly closed, and nothing worse has been discovered than the alleged misappropriation of certain booty, and the “persecution” of Lala Jotee Persaud. Having taken nothing by his motion in the matter of the Punjab booty, the Earl of Ellenborough has deemed the case of the Indian contractor, crude as the information confessedly is, worthy of being solemnly debated in the Upper House of the British Parliament. Had he been content with simply moving for all the official papers that could be furnished upon the subject, no one would, under the circumstances, have found fault with the proceeding; but to make such a motion the occasion of promulgating a mass of details necessarily partial and imperfect, is a course which we should have thought the noble Earl would have been the first to condemn.

After reading the speech of Lord Ellenborough, although he dealt out censure in no sparing terms, we cannot discern any substantial ground for it. Assume that the Lala is perfectly innocent, he was accused; avowed parties to fraud charged him with being not merely a participator, but the chief offender. What was the Government to do? Was it not their duty, after a preliminary inquiry had disclosed the existence of “most extensive frauds,” to place Jotee Persaud upon his trial? Was it not a course due to the character of the Lala himself? He was tried, and he has been acquitted, because the jury distrusted the witnesses against him, who, if believed, would have established his guilt. Jotee Persaud is entitled, unquestionably, to the full effect of this verdict of acquittal; but is the Government of India therefore to be arraigned for affording the accused an opportunity of establishing his innocence before an impartial tribunal?

We direct attention to an important document given in another page,—the minute of Lord Dalhousie, read by Lord Broughton in his reply to the Earl. It would thence appear that, amongst other expedients, Jotee Persaud offered, upon condition of immunity to himself, to impeach the integrity of certain high departmental officers. It is hard, perhaps, to judge the conduct of a Hindu by the rules we apply to our own countrymen; but it is impossible not to observe that there are incidents in the proceedings of the Lala, which, though not inconsistent with innocence, are generally regarded by us as indications of conscious guilt.

INDIA AT THE GREAT EXHIBITION.

We purposely delayed the commencement of our notice of the rich contributions of India to the Crystal Palace, because we knew that the collection was not complete—and for the same reason, after the stores had been for some time opened to the public, we hesitated to come to a conclusion. It was our hope and belief that, in the present number, we should have been enabled to bring our catalogue raisonnée to a termination; but the wealth of Bengal and Java has continued to pour in, in such remarkable and satisfactory profusion, that to this hour the Indian compartments are not free from carpenters, curators, jurors, &c., with whom rests the business of classification. We therefore, propose to postpone the final notice of the Indian Collection until our next issue, when we shall have had the advantage of minutely inspecting the rare cadeaux from the Nawab, Nizam of Bengal, and the magnificent island of Java.

As we appear to have been in some degree misunderstood regarding the East-India House Museum, we gladly take this opportunity of saying that we by no means meant to have it inferred that that museum is totally barren of curiosities, but that it bears no proportion to the beautiful and varied collection which it is now evident India can produce, and might have yielded long ere this, if the East-India Company had taken a just and proper pride in their enormous empire. It is a consolation to reflect that, even at this late date, the museum stands a chance of being enriched by the remnants of the Exhibition, after the shawls, scarves, dresses, &c., shall have been disposed of.

The following extraordinary statement appears in the last Annales de la Propagation de la Foi:—“The young emperor of China, who succeeded his father, at his death in February, 1850, having, at his accession, rejected the demands addressed to him by the mandarins for permission to persecute the Christians within his dominions, published a decree in the month of June in the same year, permitting the free exercise of the Christian religion throughout his dominions. The emperor at the same time invited four missionaries to wait upon him, who are to be lodged in his palace. Monsignor Perronneau, Bishop of China, has informed us, in a letter, dated the 5th of September, 1850, that the emperor was educated by a Christian lady, in whom the late emperor placed unbounded confidence. A similar education had been formerly given to some of the Roman emperors during the three centuries of persecution, and the Christians had thereby obtained an occasional respite, so valuable for the propagation of the faith among those naturally timid souls, who in all times and countries have been the most numerous.”

Southey, in one of his letters, observes: “The number of good stories of all kinds which are common to the Orientals and Europeans, are more likely to have been brought home by peaceable travellers, than by the crusaders. I suspect the Jew pedlars were the great go-betweens. They always went everywhere.”

At the last sitting of the Academy of Medicine, at Paris, M. Orfila's report on nicotine was read. This substance, which was discovered in 1809 by Vauquelin, is found in different kinds of tobacco, in various proportions. Smokers, by inhaling the fumes of tobacco, introduce into their system a certain quantity of this poisonous matter, which has very active power. In ten minutes M. Orfila killed many dogs, on the tongues of which he had applied five drops of this alkali; with twelve drops death ensued in two minutes.

It is remarkable that Mahomedan literature, abundant as it is in almost every other department, has never had a drama.

HENRY ST. GEORGE TUCKER, ESQ.

In our last issue we announced the decease of this distinguished ornament of the Civil Service of India,—a nursery of public men, as recently acknowledged by Mr. Gladstone, “rarely equalled, certainly unsurpassed.”

Mr. Tucker was born at Bermuda, in 1771, his father being President of the Council of that island. He appears to have proceeded to India, in what capacity we do not know, at a very early age. He stated that he was in South Behar in 1787, and resided in the district of Rajeshahye in the two following years. His appointment as writer in the Company's Civil Service bears date (according to Messrs. Dodwell and Miles's List) June 24th, 1791, and in December of the following year we find him Commissioner of the Court of Requests. In 1793, he was Register of the Dewanny Adawlut of Rajeshahye; in 1794, he was assistant to the register, and afterwards deputy register, of the Sudder Dewanny and Nizamut Adawlut, and assistant secretary in the Judicial and Revenue department, and, in 1796, he was appointed sub-secretary. In 1799, when only twenty-eight years of age, his eminent talents recommended him to the important post of secretary in that department, and a year and a half later, we find him appointed accountant-general,—an office much less profitable, but more arduous. In 1804, he quitted the Company's employment, bearing a high testimony to the value of his services from the Governor-General (the Earl of Mornington) in Council, and joined as partner the house of Cockerell and Co. He soon, however, abandoned this mercantile connection, returned to the service, and re-occupied his post of accountant-general in 1805, his re-appointment being recorded by the then Governor-General (Sir George Barlow) in eulogistic terms. In the succeeding year, he united to his functions of accountant-general those of member of the Board of Revenue. In 1807, he was appointed one of the Commissioners for introducing the Permanent Settlement into the Ceded and Conquered Provinces. His opinion, as to the inexpediency of this measure, in the then condition of the country, though at variance with those of other Commissioners, has since been confirmed. In 1809 he became secretary to the Government in the public department.

In 1811, Mr. Tucker's state of health, after nearly twenty-five years' uninterrupted residence in India, obliged him to proceed to Europe, the Bengal Government recommending him in strong terms to the Court of Directors, who presented him with Rs. 50,000, as a mark of the estimation in which they held his talents and services. In the following year he returned to India, and was appointed secretary in the colonial and financial department,—an office which he retained until 1815, when he finally quitted India.

His leisure was now dedicated to occupations which fitted him for the distinguished part he subsequently took in the home affairs of the Company. In 1824, he published a masterly pamphlet on the Financial Situation of the Company,—refuting certain errors and misapprehensions of M. Say and other opponents of the Company, and presenting a luminous view of the Company's affairs. In 1826, he was elected a member of the Court of Directors, and continued so (with the usual rotatory exclusions) until his death. In 1834, and again in 1847, he was chosen Chairman of the Court. During these twenty-five years, Mr. Tucker took an active and a prominent share in the important transactions of that eventful period, especially in the discussions concerning the Charter, his minutes being remarkable for the extent and accuracy of his knowledge of Indian subjects, the solidity of his views, the force of his arguments, and the precision and elegance of his diction. The vigour of his faculties remained unimpaired down to a late period, in spite of the decay of his physical powers consequent upon his great age, for when he closed his laborious and highly useful career, on the 14th June, he was in his eightieth year.

The talents which Mr. Tucker displayed in public life were enhanced by the virtues of his private character. With an animation, and even fervour, of manner, which betokened a tropical temperament, he was candid, kind, and benevolent. “Nullius in verba” was his rule; but, though strenuous in maintaining his own opinions, he was not intolerant towards others. If we add to these qualities a strong relish for literature, nourished by an early intimacy with Sir Wm. Jones, and an elegant and cultivated taste, few will deny that the space left by Mr. Henry St. George Tucker amongst his contemporaries will not soon be adequately filled.

SIR JAMES BROOKE.

The following letter from the Bishop of Calcutta to a Norfolk clergyman, which is published in the Bury Post, furnishes very strong testimony to the services rendered by the Rajah of Sarawak, and to the prospects of civilization in Borneo:—

“Semiramis war steamer, on way from Sarawak to Singapore, Jan. 24, 1851.

“My dear friend,—I have spent four days at Sarawak. I have consecrated the church, according to the request of the diocesan, the Lord Bishop of London. I have inspected the state of the infant mission, and conferred fully with the indefatigable and zealous chaplain and missionary, the Rev. T. M'Dougal. I have conversed also with the gentry, and have read the several works published on the events which have occurred in the last few years. It is my full persuasion that there is no mission on the face of the earth to be compared with that of Borneo. It has been thrown open to Christian enterprise almost by miracle. One of the darkest recesses of heathen ignorance, cruelty, and desolation, where piracy, and murder, and conflagration, and head-hunting stalked abroad in open day, and the aboriginal inhabitants were in the sure way of being exterminated utterly, is now, so to speak, like the paradise of God. Deliverance has been proclaimed—security of person and property, equal rights, an enlightened and paternal distributive justice, the arts of life, an extending commerce, are already established at Sarawak, and spreading along the whole western coast of Borneo. The Chinese Sea is free from marauders, and all Europe and America may pursue their peaceful occupations from Singapore to Labuan, 700 miles. The Christian mission is begun, to sanctify and adorn all these secular blessings. Two things, quite unexampled, favour the design:—1st. Englishmen have become first known to the oppressed Dyaks by a single English gentleman of benevolence, talent, and singular wisdom and tact for government, who has received, as a token of gratitude from the native princes, a tract of land about 70 miles by 50, as his own territory. To the benefit of the inhabitants of it, this gentleman, who is now recognized as the Rajah of Sarawak, is devoting his time, his fortune, his zeal, his health, his body, and soul. The noble Government of our honoured and beloved Queen Victoria at home has come forward with her admirals and brave captains to assist in reducing the pirates which infested the coast to silence and tranquillity, by deeds of almost unexampled heroism. The last engagement with the pirates, about a year and a half since, when 120 war boats, with 2,000 bandits, were intercepted in the very act of plundering and setting fire to villages, sinking native vessels, and murdering their crews, has humbled and alarmed the whole tribe, and the chiefs are sending messages to Sarawak, promising to turn themselves to honest occupations. In the mean time, the population of the town has increased, in nine years, from 1,500 to 12,000 souls, and including the whole territory, to 30,000. The peace thus established, like that of the Roman empire at the incarnation of our Lord, prepares for the gospel, renders the diffusion of it practicable, and calls imperatively on the Christian Church at home to seize with eagerness the occasion to which, perhaps, nothing parallel has ever occurred. The second peculiarly favourable circumstance is, that the millions of poor Dyaks have no religion of their own,—scarcely a notion of a deity;—no Mahomedan obstinacy—no Hindu castes—no priesthood—no written books—no Koran; and are led by a strong feeling of gratitude for a deliverance from a worse than Egyptian bondage, to place unbounded confidence in the truth and disinterestedness of the Rajah, and to solicit instruction in his religion, and to follow the habits of the ‘white people.’ In truth, when I stood on the hill on which the church is erected, and viewed the subjacent town, stretched on the river's bank, and viewed the mission-house and school on the college-hill, which commands the opposite shore, I could not but break out into thanksgiving to the God of all grace for His wonderful works; and during the very solemn service of consecration, I looked with amazement at the neat wooden edifice, with its Early English arches; its nave, 70 feet by 22, and 35 high; its side aisles, and its handsome communion-plate placed on the holy table, and its Christian congregation,—forty-three, of whom eleven were Dyak and Chinese—school children seated in the aisle; and when I assisted in administering the blessed Supper to nineteen communicants, besides the clergy, my heart was almost too full to proceed. Will England, then, fail to support the work thus prosperously begun? Impossible; it is not in the manners of our Christian Britain to forget that she was herself, 1,400 years ago, in as low a state of barbarism as the Dyaks, infested with European pirates, as they with Asiatic now. No; she is well aware that what the Gospel has done for England it can do for Borneo.”

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS, JUNE 24.

LALA JOTEE PERSAUD.—The Earl of Ellenborough, in moving for copies of the charges against Jotee Persaud, entered into a long detail of the case, stating, however, no facts not already known through the medium of the Indian journals. He dwelt upon the gentlemanlike manners of the Lala, upon the services he had rendered in the Gwalior and Punjab campaigns, and blamed the Indian Government for putting him upon trial, especially since he had commenced a civil suit in the Supreme Court, where the frauds, if true, would have come out: though the noble Earl thought this proceeding ill advised on the part of the Lala. In conclusion, he condemned the severe treatment to which that individual had been subjected.

Lord Broughton defended the proceedings of the Indian Government in this matter. He was most happy, he said, to find that the charges which had been first brought against the Government of India had not been repeated by the noble Earl, but that, on the contrary, he had declared, in the most fair and handsome manner, that the charge preferred against the local Government, of having instituted criminal proceedings against Jotee Persaud in order to stop his civil suit, had no foundation whatever. That charge, however, had made a great sensation, not only in India, but also in this country. The civil suit of Jotee Persaud against the Company, it was now clear, had not been instituted until the criminal proceedings had been previously instituted against him. He would show their lordships that there was good ground for supposing that the civil suit was instituted in consequence of the criminal proceedings, and, in order to do so, he went over the facts which were necessary to justify the Government of India in instituting criminal proceedings against Jotee Persaud, in the course of which he read the following minute of Council, drawn up by Mr. Lewis, and dated the 16th of October, 1850:—"From what transpired at the Council-table on Saturday last, it was apparent, not only that an offer had been made by Lala Jotee Persaud to stay proceedings in the Supreme Court if the Government would consent to drop their prosecution against him in the Mofussil Foudarry Courts, but that a strong disposition was evinced in certain quarters to meet his views and compromise the whole affair. This suggestion we held to be altogether improper, and it was unanimously repudiated. The Government has no wish either to pay a great debt, or get rid of an unjust claim by compounding felony, and we determined, as I understood the matter, to contest the case in the Supreme Court to the utmost, and to proceed simultaneously, but as expeditiously as possible, with the adjustment of the outstanding commissariat accounts, paying, of course, or tendering payment, of what is found to be due, just as if no case in the Supreme Court had been instituted." Minutes of a similar nature were recorded by the two other members of the Council, and the whole of the proceedings were submitted to the Governor-General, who, having reviewed the whole transaction, in order to decide whether the prosecution should go on or not, recorded his opinion in a minute, dated the 4th of November, 1851, as follows:—"I fully share the indignation with which my hon. colleagues in the council have condemned the overtures which, from the minutes, appear to have been made for a compromise of the claims advanced against the Government by Lala Jotee Persaud, the commissariat contractor, on condition of its relinquishing the proceedings against that person which have been commenced in the Mofussil. I heartily approve of the determination of the council to persevere in the just and necessary measures which have been adopted, and of their resolution to reject all proposals to hush up any thing which these measures have elicited or may expose. If it be true, as has been insinuated, that the prosecution of Jotee Persaud's suit, 'would affect the character of high departmental officers,' it is the interest of the Government to aid the suit, in order that alleged misdeeds may be the sooner exposed. If these insinuations are, as I trust and believe they are, without any good foundation, then it is the duty of the Government to aid this suit, in order that the character of its officers of trust, passing uninjured through this ordeal, may be the sooner vindicated publicly before the world. If the claims of the Lala against the Government are unsound we are bound by every consideration to dispute them, whatever may be the trouble and expense to which the resistance of a false claim may expose us. If, on the other hand, the demand of Jotee Persaud is good, it will be for those who are charged with the immediate direction of this portion of public affairs to show how it has come to pass that the payment of a just debt has been so unconscionably delayed. And if, in this investigation, the departments under the Government of India should have discredit thrown, as well on their mode of administration as on the system they administer, it will be the duty of the Government to meet it fairly, and to extract good out of the evil which may come to light, so as to amend its departmental administration, and to remedy the proved errors of a faulty system.' The accused was unanimously acquitted. What, then, did the noble Earl complain of? It was said that Sir J. Littler committed an error of judgment in ordering the prosecution at all. But what would have been said if the prosecution had not been instituted? Would it not have been attributed to complicity between Jotee Persaud and some departmental officers, whose irregular proceedings the Government was afraid of having brought to light? Magistrates who had no interest in the matter had given an opinion that the man was guilty, and that opinion was shared by those members of the council who had looked into the case. The question was, whether there was a prima facie case for putting the man on his trial. The Government, believing that there was, would have betrayed its duty by neglecting to institute a prosecution. Under the circumstances, the Government was obliged to prosecute; it could not help itself. Surely it was unreasonable to condemn the Government because the prosecution happened to fail. It sometimes was not easy to obtain a verdict for the Crown in this country. Jotee Persaud was entitled to the full benefit of his acquittal, but at the same time the Indian Government must be absolved from all blame for instituting the prosecution.

The formal motion was agreed to.

DEBATE AT THE EAST-INDIA HOUSE.

A Quarterly General Court of Proprietors was held June 18, at the East-India House; John Shepherd, Esq., chairman of the Court of Directors, in the chair.

DIVIDENDS.

The Chairman announced that the warrants for the payment of the half-yearly dividends would be ready for delivery on the 7th July next.

BY-LAWS.

The report of the committee of by-laws was brought up and read. It stated that the by-laws had been duly observed during the past year. The following gentlemen were re-elected members of the committee:—R. Twining, J. Hodgson, W. W. Roberts, W. G. Paxton, E. Goldsmid, T. Weeding, Esqrs.; Sir R. P. Glyn, Bart.; T. Fielder, Esq.; Sir C. Hopkinson, C.B.; H. F. Sandyman, W. Fox, J. Ewing, M. Clark, W. S. Jones, and G. R. Smith, Esqrs. Daniel Weeding, Esq. was elected in place of H. S. Græme, Esq., deceased.

PUBLIC WAYS IN GUZERAT.

Colonel Dickinson then brought forward the motion of which he had given notice—

"That a fixed per-centage on the revenue of each collectorate in Guzerat be annually expended for the improvement and extension of the public ways throughout that province."

The honourable proprietor said his motion was directed to the improved condition, not of our native subjects in India generally, but of those residing in a single province—the agricultural classes of the maritime collectorates of Surat, Broach, Kaira, and Ahmedabad. The position, at one time, of these people was that of prosperity; it had by degrees become one of decadence from that state. Bearing testimony to the highly prosperous state of Surat in the year 1801, and to the excellence of its fabrics, supplying, as it then did, Eastern Africa and many of the West India islands with its unrivalled piece goods, it was impossible, he said, to view with indifference those events, which led, fourteen years afterwards, with such fearful rapidity, to the decadence of that once flourishing city, commencing with the opening of the trade to India, in 1813, the effect of which soon was to shut out many of the fabrics of Surat, not only from foreign, but from the Asiatic markets. After alluding to the diminution of the cotton trade, and to the effects of inundations and floods at Surat, he observed that, with regard to Broach, the adjoining province, the state of that province formed a remarkable instance of the perfection to which good government could carry a country. Broach had at one time reached a high state of prosperity under our own rule. One great cause of the diminished prosperity of the Surat and Broach collectorates is, that, though our oldest possessions under the Bombay presidency, they have been the last to receive the boon of a systematically revised assessment. To show that the condition neither of the ryots nor the landlords had been much ameliorated since 1830, he quoted from Judge Giborne's evidence, as given before the parliamentary committee of 1847. That Mr. Giborne was fully borne out in his evidence as to the disadvantages under which the agricultural classes still laboured, is evident from the report of the Bombay committee appointed for such investigations in 1846, by which it appears, that out of the value of a candy of cotton, which may be as low as Rs. 75, the Government had been in the habit of taking Rs. 48; that is, out of a maximum price of 2½d. the pound, the Government received 1½d. The committee urgently recommended, "as among the only means by which the supersession of the cotton of India in the English and China markets could be obviated, a revision of the land assessment in the collectorates of Surat, Broach, and Candeish." Guzerat is the garden of India; as New Orleans is to America, so is Guzerat to India. It is the finest portion, and which renders the revenue of that country enormous. Half the cotton received into the English market from India comes from Guzerat. He then came to the main point of his subject, namely, the state of the roads for conveying the produce of Guzerat from the interior to Bombay, for shipment there. Not even a share of those facilities for transport which, with such an opening, have been afforded in every other collectorate, has been vouchsafed to the inhabitants of this province, for whose relief it may almost be literally said Government has not, in nearly half a century, expended a rupee. To show the condition of that main artery between Tankaria Bunder and the extremity of our most productive cotton-growing pergunna, a distance of only seventeen miles, and what are the resources upon the spot for its improvement, the honourable proprietor read extracts from papers recently published relating to the proposed Boderar railway, showing the almost impassable state for many months after the rainy season of that portion of the road from Tankaria Bunder to Jumbooseer; also from the accounts of other professional men, showing that this and other main arteries to and through the more productive cotton-growing districts on the eastern side of the Gulf, were oftentimes in the fair season in a most inefficient state, and in many places so narrow as not to admit of a return cart passing a laden one; also, that none of the piers where the cotton is shipped are in an efficient state. He could from like authentic sources take upon himself to affirm that, for want of timely repairs to the roads in the Ahmedabad collectorate, the carts could with difficulty be got through the mud; that besides making considerable detours, they were last year subjected to transit duties and bund fees by the Limree Raja, in addition to the other pecuniary losses attendant on such delay, &c. He assured the Court that the roads, especially in the vicinity of Dhollera, along which 91,000 bales of cotton, much of it of a superior quality, weighing 20,000 tons, besides 30,000 tons of other merchandize, passed last season, were in many places all but impassable. The distances from which the cotton produced in our districts is brought is more than 70 miles; and much of what is shipped from Dhollera comes from double that distance; but to this hour there is not a single appliance at the Bunder in the shape of a pier or crane for the shipment of the twelve crores' worth of merchandize which passed last year along this the main artery to our most productive cotton districts on the western side of the Gulf. Another great hardship entailed on those engaged in trade is, that for want of a due supply of water at Dhollera, the boatmen are oftentimes obliged to travel four miles to supply their wants. With regard to the plea that there are no materials in the locality for making roads, had he on a former occasion showed that there were ample materials. It appears from a report of an officer employed to survey the country, and who is well acquainted with the geology of that part of India, that Guzerat abounded in material for making such roads as are required, though I will not say they would be stone roads. Notwithstanding the warm recommendation of the committee of 1846, for the last twenty years, although they had derived from that country a much larger amount of revenue than from Ceylon or from Australia, there had not been anything like so large a sum expended in the formation of roads in Guzerat as in either of the two other dependencies. The great and fundamental step necessary to be taken for recruiting our resources in that province is the construction of roads. Another ground which might be urged on behalf of these people is, that we had already, to a certain extent, given to Poonah the benefit of constructing public works. In every collectorate the people have been benefited by an outlay on public works except this most devoted country. In consequence of the ryots having to contend with these evils, America is at this moment very nearly supplanting us in our trade with China. It is very possible a railway may enable America to send cotton to New Orleans, and then export it to China, and thereby deprive us of the Chinese market. A great loss of time is occasioned by the want of good roads in the collection of the assessment; and this gives rise to delay in taking the cotton to the market at Bombay. His proposition was, to grant to the people a portion of their revenue for the promotion of the welfare of the province which they cultivate. It might be said, that such a proposition is against the abstract principle of government. But let it be remembered, that the China trade once lost, our revenue is lost. It may be said, that it is not the duty of a government to do such things; that they ought to be done by public speculation; but in India such principles will not apply. An American merchant, on a late occasion, when walking over the grounds of one of the estates at Ahmedabad, the capital of Guzerat, where the cotton crops were growing, was quite startled at what he saw, and declared that he had never seen such cotton. He was not advocating the extension of railways, but tramways may be laid down at a very moderate expense; and he pledged himself to show that those tramways may be laid down at an expense of not more than 700*l.* or 800*l.* a mile. He left it to this Court to decide upon the expediency or otherwise of the measure he proposed. His object would be gained if the Court would join him in a recommendation to the directors to take the subject into their consideration.

Mr. Lewin seconded the motion, although he did not entirely agree with the terms of it, or think the motion entirely practicable, inasmuch as it bound the Government to an annual expenditure of a certain portion of the revenues. When we consider the uncertainty of the revenues of India, it is impossible for the Government to bind itself permanently to expend any fixed sum. The country is often devastated by floods, so that the Government may not be in a position to do what the motion pledges them to do. It would be very easy for the hon. proprietor to make a more practicable suggestion, which should insure a certain expenditure for the increase of the crops, and the improvement of the country generally. He would advise the Court of Directors to appoint to each collectorate an engineer assistant; much more could be done by such appointments than by the adoption of an abstract proposition of this nature. He never saw any reluctance on the part of the Government to give assistance when a sufficient reason was assigned for it; neither had the Court of Proprietors shown any indisposition to sanction such appointments. He therefore hoped the hon. mover would amend his motion.

The Chairman.—With reference to the motion itself, I think I might almost leave it with the answer which has been given to it by the seconder. Even the hon. and gallant colonel has admitted that the motion is contrary to the usual rule; but he thinks that he has been able to show a special case, on the present occasion, which will lead the court to be of opinion that what he proposes ought to be adopted. Now, without entering into a lengthened reply, I cannot allow the statement of the gallant officer, as to the neglected condition of the Province of Guzerat, to pass without declaring, that, in my opinion, that statement does not at all approach the truth. On the contrary, I hold in my hand an extract from a letter from Mr. Davie, the collector of Broach, which gives the very contrast to what has been described by the gallant colonel. This letter was written so lately as last year. The writer says that, "the means of carriage in Broach is confined entirely to carts; that 30 miles may be taken as the extreme distance to be travelled in the cotton district of Broach; and that the communications throughout are perfect and are always open, except the three months of the monsoon." I must really imagine that the extracts read by the gallant colonel were written during those three months. Why, every hon. gentleman, no doubt, who knows anything of India, knows that during the greatest portion of the season the road is a good road, and that the means of communication are such that there is no difficulty in that peculiar locality in getting cotton. But during the three months of the monsoon I suppose no roads could be constructed unless they were made above the level grounds. The hon. and gallant gentleman alluded to an American having gone over a cotton estate in India. I must say the gentleman alluded to is Mr. Haigh. Now, that gentleman has just arrived in England, and he has stated to the Directors that the internal communications from the cotton district to the coast are in a condition the very reverse of what the hon. and gallant colonel has stated. Mr. Haigh states distinctly, that the facilities for communication with the coast are admirable; and that a very little expenditure would make them excellent. My hon. and gallant friend will be glad to hear that that expenditure has been recommended to the Indian Government. One would really imagine, from the statement of the hon. and gallant colonel, that the Court of Directors and the Government of India systematically neglected the western side of India entirely. The Court will be surprised to hear that there are no less than 830 miles of road making at the present time, for the purpose of facilitating communications from the interior to the western coast. The Indian Government has always been ready to expend money for that purpose, and yet the gallant colonel has been talking for an hour and more, as if the Government were not alive to the importance of keeping up communication by means of good roads in India. I was very sorry to hear my gallant friend make this charge of general neglect. Mr. Haigh has distinctly assured the Court, the day before yesterday, that the assessment in Guzerat was exceedingly light, and that no complaint could be justly made on that score. The assessment, no doubt, was at one period high, but it has been reduced by the system of assessing, not according to the crop grown, but according to the nature of the soil. This has afforded great relief to the people. My hon. friend himself knows that the assessment is now very low. My hon. friend has asserted that nothing has been done by the Indian Government for the last fifty years to facilitate communication in that district. Is it possible, he having himself been in that country, that he can seriously intend to impress the Court with such an opinion? I don't think it is necessary for me to detain the Court any longer. I repeat, that the Government of India are alive to the necessity of promoting public works. It was only the other day that a sum of fifty lacs of rupees was granted to the Government of India for reconstructing works in Madras and Bengal. Everything is, in fact, being done that is practicable for improving communication by means of roads, canals, and railways, in India. The Government are perfectly aware of the importance of the subject, —I therefore hope the Court will see the propriety of rejecting this motion, which goes to dictate to the Government a certain amount of expenditure for the construction of roads. It would be very injurious to countenance such a principle even for a moment.

An Honourable Proprietor thought, after the explanation which the chairman had given, it would be becoming on the part of the gallant colonel to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Sullivan said the chairman had the means entirely in his own hands to put his gallant friend out of court by producing the accounts of the money expended on internal communications. Non constat, because there had been a great expenditure, that good roads had been made in Guzerat. He would, however, suggest to his gallant friend to modify his motion, and content himself with calling the attention of the local government to the roads in Guzerat.

After a few explanatory remarks from Sir J. Hogg,

Mr. Grant said, the question with regard to the want of means of travelling during the monsoon is a very important one. The prosperity of the country may depend upon the means of communication, and if three months are allowed to interfere with that communication, that prosperity might be seriously imperilled. You admit that a section of India is not traversable during three months in every year. That is a most important circumstance, and one which requires attention. It deserves serious consideration whether you cannot make that road a road of transit during those three months. As regards the motion itself, it is impossible it can be carried. At the same time the question of fact is a very strong one, and certainly the gallant colonel in having brought the motion forward in that gentlemanly spirit which he uniformly displays ought to be sheltered from any severe remarks from the chairman. As to whether the hon. and gallant member has been indiscreet in his mode of obtaining information, that is quite another matter. I think this discussion cannot produce any harm, but on the contrary may produce great benefit. It may attract the attention of the Court to an object which might otherwise have been overlooked.

The Chairman.—I am not aware that my remarks were severe. The hon. and gallant mover represented that the roads in Guzerat had been neglected for the last fifty years. When such a statement is made, I feel it my duty to take notice of it. It is, I have always understood, impossible during the three months of the monsoon for any cart to pass through the road; but cotton may still be got in sufficient time to reach the coast during the other portion of the season. I beg leave to state that as much cotton as can be grown is now grown in Broach. The cultivation of cotton requires rotation crops. Only one-third of the land can be under one crop at a time, therefore it is impossible, consistently with good cultivation, that the crops can be extended in that district. It is an important subject I admit, but I object to the terms of the motion.

Sir James Hogg.—I am quite sure my hon. friend, the chairman, did not intend to use terms of severity or censure toward the hon. and gallant colonel. It has been very truly stated that during nine months in the year, that is during the dry weather, the country in every direction is perfectly passable. It is so much so, that when great droves of merchandize find their way there, they positively select a road which is not the most accessible with regard to travelling, but which will take them through the states where the dues levied by the native chiefs are the least onerous. But the whole traffic of merchandize, or almost the whole traffic, is during the dry season. During the time of the monsoon, I admit, a great many roads are impassable; and I think they must remain so, because where the country is low it is under water during the monsoon. Every gentleman will understand the enormous expense of raising a road above the influx of the water. It becomes, therefore, a question of expense, whether it is discreet to incur that expense, or whether the money may not be better and more profitably spent. No one knows better than the hon. and gallant colonel, that even if they had railroads, nature supplied better and cheaper means of communication by the use of the native boats during the monsoon. If ever any railway should exist in that district, it would still be cheaper to send the cotton by boats to Bombay. I am aware of the praiseworthy motive of the hon. member in bringing this subject before the Court, in which we all agree, and in which we are all deeply interested. We feel that not so much has been done as it is desirable should be done. There have been vast expenses and charges connected with wars, but I do hope that a better time as regards the improved means of communication is opening upon us. Enormous expense has already been incurred, particularly in the Punjab. I hope the hon. proprietor, after the spirit in which his motion has been received, will consent to withdraw it.

Major Oliphant.—It may seem very odd that, during three months of the year when the roads are required to be made, they are not made. But during the monsoon the natives do not travel, for this reason; if they did travel with goods during the rains, they would have to leave them exposed to the wet. That is not the time the natives send their goods; this so far explains why it is that the Government have not insisted upon having that done which under other circumstances might be necessary.

Mr. Sullivan.—My hon. friend forgets that the monsoon sets in at a period when the people would only perhaps have to travel some 30 or 40 miles further before they reached Bombay, but which they cannot now do for want of roads. With regard to the motion itself, of course, as it is now worded, it is quite impracticable; and I would repeat the suggestion, that the hon. mover should be satisfied with having called the attention of the Court to the subject.

Colonel Dickinson said, before acting on the suggestion of his hon. friend, Mr. Sullivan, and those gentlemen who did not approve of the scope of his present motion, he begged to remind the hon. chairman that the evidence of Mr. Davies so triumphantly quoted in this house and in parliament in proof of the efficiency of the Guzerat roads, widely differing as the testimony of this distinguished functionary did from the professional statements of such officers as Colonel Grant of the engineers, applied only to the road in one out of the four collectorates in that province, it not so clearly appearing to which of the main arteries through our cotton districts the observations of Mr. Haigh applied.

The motion was then withdrawn.

Colonel Dickinson then gave notice of the following motion:—

"That annual statements be laid before the Court of Proprietors of the sums expended since the renewal of the present charter, for the repairs and formation of the roads, with exception of those at the Chief Civil and Military Stations, throughout Guzerat."

CASE OF MR. J. S. BUCKINGHAM.

In reply to Mr. Lewin,

The Chairman said, the Bill introduced into Parliament for compensating Mr. J. S. Buckingham, had been withdrawn.

TREATIES WITH NATIVE PRINCES.

Colonel Dickinson then brought forward his motion—

"That a list be prepared, with as little delay as possible, and laid before the Court of Proprietors, of those native states with which treaties have been entered into by the British Government, the chiefs of which are thereby deprived of any of the rights or privileges of adoption without the consent of the paramount power."

He made this motion in order that the public might be made aware of the consequences of the very sweeping doctrine which had been laid down by Lord Dalhousie with regard to the native princes of India. It was in evidence that the system of deposition which that doctrine sanctioned must lead to the most demoralizing consequences, and finally to the ruin of the native princes. He could not do better, in order to illustrate the case he had to lay before the Court, than to cite the case of the Nawab of Surat, with whom the Company entered into a treaty after his dethronement in 1800. If we had taken possession of his country after a protracted war, the expenses and sacrifices that war occasioned would have afforded some ground for exacting severe terms; but it was done in perfectly peaceable times, and therefore this could not be said to be an ordinary case. Twenty years ago this was considered an exceedingly harsh measure; and the family of the nabob had the sympathies of everybody. The nabob died in 1812, and there now remained his widow, his daughters, and his son-in-law. It was the desire of the nabob that his daughters should be allied to some native princes; that was overruled, but they were married to men of great respectability. In support of the claims soured in behalf of the native princes, their families and nearer relatives, to such a boon on the part of the British Government, he read part of a letter which was put into his hands three years ago, addressed to a female friend of the accomplished writer, who had, after the refusal of the Indian Government to sanction an alliance with the imperial family at Delhi, been selected for his son-in-law by the late Nawab of Surat, wherein he states—"At present Government has been pleased to make a small advance of money to me, to be accounted for at the final settlement of my affairs—it is one lac and fifty-three thousand rupees. I call it small, because it is so in proportion to the debts I have been obliged to contract for the maintenance of the family. As soon as the money was brought to the palace, it was distributed amongst the creditors. There is, however, one comfort, that these sums being paid will both relieve them from their anxiety and me from further accumulation of their heavy interest—the interest alone at this time due to the creditors is Rs. 40,637." In order to justify these proceedings, an act of the legislature was passed, which put it out of the power of the parties to obtain redress. This was the greatest part of the grievance; for by that act of the legislature the writer was deprived of all legal redress. It was held out to this family that a settlement of their affairs should be equitably affected; but the Government were by the act exempted from the jurisdiction of the courts of justice, for no action could be brought by these parties without the consent of the Government. His only object in bringing forward this motion was, that these families might be able to know what it was that awaited them, so that they might be able to adopt measures which might bring credit on them, and preserve them from utter ruin. He wished, at all events, that timely notice should be given to these families, whether they were to be devoted to poverty, or whether their independence would be secured to them, according to the meaning of treaties.

Mr. Lewin seconded the motion, in which he entirely concurred, so far as he comprehended its object; but he did not altogether understand it. (Laughter.)

The Chairman felt it impossible to divine the object of the motion. It was, however, rather remarkable that the hon. and gallant colonel should have quoted a case in illustration of his object which could not by possibility apply, for Surat was a Mahomedan state, where adoption was impossible. The Nawab died without heirs, leaving daughters, one of whom married, and the property of the deceased Nawab was given to the son-in-law, with the exception of that portion of it which was necessary for keeping up the dignity of the Nawab, that title having ceased to exist. There was one thing, however, of which he must take notice, and if he spoke warmly, he did not do so in the spirit of rebuke. But the hon. gentleman had stated that an act of the legislature had been passed for the express purpose of justifying an act of aggression on the part of the Indian Government. He (the chairman) could not shut his ears to that statement. He did not believe that his hon. friend himself thought that to be the truth. It was impossible to imagine that the legislature would pass an act for the purpose of depriving a native prince of India of his legal rights. (Hear, hear.) With reference to the motion, he begged to say that there were no new treaties of the nature mentioned in it. Adoption, it was true, required the sanction of the paramount power, and that was occasionally withheld; but it was not by virtue of any treaty that such a power existed. The Chairman, in reference to the recent occurrences in the Punjab, said that the public were aware that the procedure of the Indian Government in the Punjab was one of necessity. The chiefs of that country having first attacked the British power, Lord Hardinge, in subduing them, displayed great moderation in maintaining Lahore as an independent state, taking the young raja under British protection. The chiefs again rebelled, and then it was found necessary to take possession of the country; but there was no one who knew the character of Lord Dalhousie but would acquit him of any intention to adopt violent or unjust measures under any circumstances whatever. He was very sorry that this subject should have been alluded to on the present occasion.

Mr. Sullivan said he did not entertain the same opinion of the motion as had been expressed by the chairman, nor did he think the public would. The motion appeared to him to have a very intelligible and sensible object. His friend, Col. Dickinson, had said the Governor-General had passed a sentence on every native prince in India, he having proclaimed that henceforward all the possessions of native princes who died without natural heirs should be confiscated to the British Government, and that principle had been recognized by the chairman. It appeared to him (Mr. Sullivan) that the least they could do to the parties who were so deeply interested in this matter, was to apprise them of the fate now hanging over them. Up to the present moment they had been spending all their revenues, under the confident belief that treaties made would be observed, and therefore the least they could do was to tell these native princes that they had only a life-interest in their estates and possessions, and ought to begin at once to make adequate provision for their families. So long as the Governor-General was limited to the Company's territories he was a constitutional monarch, but when he went beyond that he became an autocrat, and seized the property and possessions of native princes, and nobody could call him to account. He would say again, therefore, that they were bound to make the people over whom the sentence was impending to lay by some adequate provision for their families, and more-over bound in all equity and justice to point out to them that their fate would be the same as that which overtook the rajah of Sattara. The chairman had said the Company had no treaties with these princes, but what was the fact? There were no less than 150 native princes with whom they had treaties, and his gallant friend's motion only amounted to a request that they might be warned that they had only a life-interest in their estates. In the 150 treaties with these native princes and chiefs they had guaranteed to them and their heirs in perpetuity all their estates and possessions; but the construction now sought to be placed on them was, that they were to have only a life-interest. He believed that Lord Dalhousie's government would be principally remembered for two measures,—in the first place, for the confiscation of the principality of Sattara against all right and treaty; and in the next, for the confiscation of the dominions and lives of princes with whom we had made war. Though the principle on which the Directors now proceeded was, that no native prince would be allowed to adopt children without the sanction of the paramount power, it had been determined by Lord Amherst, Lord Auckland, Lord W. Bentinck, and other Governors-General of India, that every Hindoo prince had a right to adopt a successor, whom we were bound to acknowledge.

Sir James Hogg.—It seems to me, from the tone adopted by the hon. gentleman to the chairman, that he has taken upon himself to chide the Court, and that he has been betrayed into invective as severe and generally unfounded as I ever heard in this Court or elsewhere. The cause, however, soon appeared. He has only been betrayed into that old Sattara question, which ever haunts him. It does not signify what the question is that may be brought forward. Let the question on the paper once be mooted, and up gets the hon. gentleman his imagination haunted by Sattara; and, be it relevant or irrelevant, he will inflict upon this unhappy Court that subject which for the last ten or twelve years he has been agitating. Does it not just occur to the hon. gentleman that other people may form an opinion upon the subject?—that he does not concentrate in himself all the wisdom, all the honour, or all the integrity of the world? But whenever the subject of the Government of India is mooted, Sattara rises up in the mind of the hon. gentleman, and then come the outpourings of his indignation. I really am rather glad of this, because that strong feeling upon that one subject affords some excuse for the extraordinary attack which he has made upon the whole administration of Lord Dalhousie. The hon. gentleman has said that he was sorry the Lahore question should have been introduced; but if anything could be more inappropriately introduced than the Sattara question, it certainly was that of the case of Surat. An hon. proprietor gives notice of a question which has reference to the right of adoption by Indian princes; and he says, "I will give you an instance of the grievance." And what does he do? He selects the case of a Mahomedan state, where the subject-matter of his motion cannot by any possibility arise. He selects, as an instance of the injustice which may be perpetrated, a state to which the principle of which he complains cannot be applied. Mr. Sullivan has said that the motion is not intelligible. I agree with him; but the speech of the hon. gentleman is intelligible. What is the nature of his speech? He says, "Give me a list." And he then tells you of all the horrors, all the iniquities, and acts of injustice which may be perpetrated in India upon the native princes. He says, "Do give me a list of those states which, in anticipation, are to be sacrificed, and of those which are not; do tell me who those people are who some ten, fifteen, twenty, or fifty years hence may by some infamous governor-general be sacrificed, and who they are who may not, in order that I may send those lists to India to apprise the respective parties of their several fates. Is it not quite monstrous that such a proposition should be made in a rational assembly? A proposition which anticipates and foresees who the parties are who are to be reduced by the government of India, and who not? I do not think my hon. friend Mr. Sullivan would have sanctioned such a proposition, if he had not been betrayed into a degree of indignation on the Sattara question. With regard to the attack on the government of Lord Dalhousie, the hon. gentleman has gone the length of asserting that the conquest of the Punjab will be a black spot in the history of India. I tell him that my belief is the opinion of the world and of posterity is and will be that the transactions in the Punjab would be a glorious and bright spot in the history of India. I do not believe there was ever an occasion where less aggression was committed, or where the public have been more anxious to scrutinize the conduct of the local government. My hon. friend has said that Lord Dalhousie had taken advantage of the results of the rebellion which he himself had fomented. Now, I do say, that no man that ever ruled in India was more anxious to preserve peace in the Punjab than Lord Dalhousie, and no man ever adopted measures which were more likely to accomplish that most desirable object. The measures which he ultimately adopted were forced upon him by the exigency of the public service; measures necessary, not for British interests, but for the interests of those people committed to British rule, for the interest of that rule, and for the tranquillity and well-being of those inhabitants of India for whose welfare the British authority was responsible. That treaty was entered into by Lord Dalhousie; that treaty was conformable to the law of nations as well as to the rights of war; that treaty cannot be impugned, and I confess I heard with great regret the opinions that fell from my hon. friend, and still more the observations he made use of when urging those opinions. (Cheers.)

Mr. Sullivan said he had charged Lord Dalhousie with fomenting the rebellion in the Punjab by his agents.

Colonel Dickinson, in reply, said, in reference to a somewhat disparaging observation of the chairman: I wish it to be understood that my object in quoting the case of the descendants of the late nabob of Surat was to show by a forcible illustration the disastrous consequences which had resulted from even less ambiguous phraseology than that made use of in those treaties, upon which the chiefs of so many principalities now rely for the avoidance of like ruin and degradation to their families, in consequence of its having been recently and for the first time declared by Lord Dalhousie, "that the words heirs and successors mean only heirs natural, and à fortiori so, when, as in the case of the Sattara territory, the British Government had been the grantee." My object, I repeat, was to show that the late nabob of Surat, foreseeing such a contingency, exacted and obtained, the day before his signature of the treaty so compulsively entered into, an explicit admission from the late Governor Duncan of the import of the word "heirs" as made use of in the treaty, which he was then negotiating, as appears from his printed diary, wherein he observes, "I took the opportunity of this private conference to impress on Kerparam's attention how much he might benefit his own concerns by proving serviceable in the present instance to Government, in pointing out to the nabab the expediency of his cheerful acquiescence in and quickly signing the new treaty, which would, I told him, give a security for an honourable provision to his master and his family and descendants, from generation to generation, greater than they had ever yet had, since the former articles of agreement, in 1759, were evidently only of a temporary nature, whereas the Company, who never failed in a strict adherence to their engagements, would now become bound in perpetuity to the support of the nabob and his family." In the face of which it is now maintained, that the full annual payments so guaranteed to the descendants of the late nabob are no longer due in consequence of the less expenditure necessary for keeping up the dignity of such title—and as, after so solemn and simple a contract, the nabob's child and grand-child and their natural protector were for six years after his death left in a state of most painful uncertainty and comparative destitution, what, it may be asked, may be the measure of woe in store for the widows and female descendants, or collateral heirs, as the case may be, of those chiefs who are unable to produce like evidence of the import of corresponding phraseology in the existing treaties—and who, to use the words of the late Lord Auckland, "have a right to expect that the British Government look only to the terms and spirit of the treaties or engagements which we have formed with the several states of India, and bring forward no other demand than such as, in reference to those engagements, may be indisputably consistent with good faith?"

The motion was then put and negatived.

THE MADRAS LIGHT CAVALRY.

Mr. Lewin, after referring to the refusal of the Marquess of Tweeddale, while holding the office of Commander-in-Chief of the Madras army, to furnish to the attorney and relations respectively of the prisoners of the 6th Regiment of Madras Light Cavalry copies of the record of the trial held on them by general court-martial, 'moved,—“That the Court of Directors be requested to take such measures as may be necessary to instruct the local Governments of India to insert in the articles of war for the native army a clause conveying the same privilege to the native army of demanding copies of the record of trial as is now enjoyed by the European soldier, under the articles of war framed by the British Legislature.”

The motion, not being seconded, fell to the ground.

The Court then adjourned.

EAST-INDIA COLLEGE, HAILEYBURY.

CLOSE OF THE TERM.

Friday last, being the day appointed for closing the first Term of the year, a deputation from the Court of Directors of the East-India Company visited the College, for the purpose of receiving the Report of the Principal, and of distributing the medals and prizes awarded to the successful competitors in the various branches of Oriental, Classical, and European literature.

On the arrival of the Directors and the visitors at Haileybury, the distinguished party proceeded to the lodge to pay their respects to the Principal (the Rev. H. Melvill). The Directors then repaired to the Council-room, where they received the following highly satisfactory Report from the Rev. the Principal:—

"The Principal has great satisfaction in reporting to the Honourable the Finance and Home Committee, that, of twenty-one students constituting the Fourth Term, twenty have been found duly qualified for the finally quitting College. The remaining student lost his term during the course of the examination, on account of his resorting to unfair means to insure his success.

"Of the twenty who are about to leave College, fifteen have attained the rank of 'highly distinguished,' and three have passed with 'great credit.' Of eighty-one students who presented themselves for examination, one lost his term in the way already mentioned; another was withdrawn by his friends before the examination was completed; and a third was compelled, by serious illness, to defer the passing the Oriental part of the examination. It cannot but be highly gratifying to the Committee to know that, of the remaining seventy-eight, not one has failed to exhibit the proficiency required by the statutes for the keeping the term.

"This is an unusual circumstance, and must be attributed to the increased industry of the students, stimulated, probably, by the penalty which fell upon many at Christmas. But the industry is not to be judged only by the absence of failures. There has been remarkable competition in various departments. Of the seventy-eight students, fifty-five have taken honours, forty-one being returned as 'highly distinguished,' and fourteen as having passed with 'great credit.' And so nearly have merits, in many cases, been balanced, and so various have been the subjects on which industry has been employed, that no fewer than seventeen have obtained the rank of 'prizemen,' and several of these gain the distinction in several departments.

"The important subject of English composition still continues to receive great attention. Forty-nine essays were sent in by competitors for the prize; and a large proportion of these were more than ordinarily creditable to the intelligence and information of the writers.

"With regard more especially to the Oriental department, the Visitor remarks that the results of the examination have been more than usually satisfactory, not so much from a display of extraordinary talent and uncommon attainment, as from a very uniform exhibition of creditable acquirement and profitable application. He states that, during the fifteen years of his connection with the College, he remembers no occasion on which the students have so universally endeavoured, according to their ability, to qualify themselves for the examination. And whilst the characteristic feature of the term is application, there is also a fair proportion of more than ordinary ability. Two or three of the students at the head of the third and fourth terms have acquired great proficiency in more than one of the languages prescribed by the statutes, and have voluntarily added to their labours by acquiring a useful knowledge of others, as Bengali, Hindi, Canarese, and Marathi. A larger proportion than usual of the students in the second term have maintained the credit which they earned at their first examination, and continue to be distinguished for both ability and application. Several of these also have extended their voluntary studies to other languages than those which they are required to cultivate. The junior term presents a less favourable aspect than either of the senior. There is no want of right feeling, or of an inclination to work; but, with one or two exceptions, the abilities of the students do not seem to place distinction within their reach. It is to be hoped that a continuance in their industrious habits will eventually compensate for any disadvantages under which they may labour, either from imperfect previous preparation, or inferiority of natural talent.

"The Principal trusts that these statements will satisfy the Committee that the term has been passed in a careful and praiseworthy application to the studies of the place. And where there has been so much of studiousness to commend, it may safely be inferred that there has not been much to find fault with in conduct. The Principal has, indeed, to regret the having found himself under the painful necessity of temporarily removing two students for offences which exceeded the reach of the ordinary punishments. He has also had to complain of some few students as not conforming themselves, with due regularity, to the observances of the place. But he can confidently state, in regard to the great majority of the students, that they have passed through the term in a highly satisfactory manner, and have so conducted themselves as to deserve and secure the approval of those to whom the discipline of the College is committed."

The chair was occupied by John Shepherd, Esq., Chairman of the Court of Directors, who, together with the following directors, formed the deputation:—Sir James Weir Hogg, Bart., M.P., deputy-chairman; William Wigram, Esq.; John Cotton, Esq.; Sir Henry Willock, K.L.S.; William H. C. Plowden, Esq., M.P.; J. C. Whiteman, Esq.; Hon. W. H. L. Melville; Major-General J. Caulfield, C.B.; W. J. Eastwick, Esq.; William Dent, Esq.; William B. Bayley, Esq.; Russell Ellice, Esq.; Sir Richard Jenkins, G.C.B.; Ross D. Mangles, Esq., M.P.; Major J. A. Moore.

Amongst the visitors were the following:—James Wilson, Esq., M.P.; Hon. J. E. Elliot, M.P.; T. N. Waterfield, Esq.; Lord Ashburton; Peer Ibraheem Khan; Syed Abdallah; Jevanjee Pestonjee and Rustomjee Viccagee, Parsee merchants from Bombay; F. Millett, Esq.; L. R. Reid, Esq.; J. P. Willoughby, Esq.; Sir John Herschel, Bart.; Sir Robert K. Arbuthnot, Bart.; General Lodwick; Rev. G. Lewis; A. Mackintosh, Esq.; W. H. Arbuthnot, Esq.; Wm. Donne Davies, Esq.; T. E. J. Boileau, Esq.; David Waddington, Esq.; C. P. Roney, Esq.; Lieut.-col. Abbott; Admiral Johnston; Capt. Keane; J. F. N. Daniell, Esq.; Robert Davidson, Esq.; Thomas Davidson, Esq.; Capt. Mangles; Col. Sim; C. A. Saunders, Esq.; N. Alexander, Esq.; T. Weeding, Esq.; W. Paynter, Esq.; Rev. R. N. Master; Rev. T. Huntington; Gen. Barr; Col. Cunningham; Col. Finnis; Capt. Lawrence; H. E. Dalrymple, Esq.; R. H. Ames, Esq.; George Palmer, Esq.; T. Brandreth, Esq. The following civilians at home were also present:—A. Mellor, Esq.; R. N. Cust, Esq.; G. Campbell, Esq.; A. F. Bellasis, Esq.; C. T. Le Bas, Esq.; H. P. Egerton, Esq.; G. D. Wilkins, Esq.; D. Cunliffe, Esq.

Peer Ibraheem Khan, whose name appears in the foregoing list of visitors, is Minister to the Nawab of Bhawalpore. Syed Abdallah—a young and highly intellectual-looking man—is his interpreter, and sat next to him, on the right of the Chairman, during the proceedings in the Hall. The wise and kindly advice given by the Chairman to the students about to leave for India, relative to their conduct towards the natives, appeared to rivet the attention of Syed Abdallah, who immediately explained their purport to Peer Ibraheem Khan. These distinguished Oriental strangers, as also the Parsee merchants—who are fine, intelligent-looking men—attracted much attention.

The Chairman having taken his seat, Mr. Hoorra read the following List of the Medals, Prizes, and other Honourable Distinctions obtained by the students:—

Medals, Prizes, and other honourable Distinctions of Students leaving College, June, 1851.

The Chairman then addressed the assembled students as follows:—

Gentlemen Students.—It is highly gratifying to my colleagues and myself that the reports we have received on this occasion, with reference to the general progress made by you in your studies, and as regards the regularity and good order which have been observed generally during the late term, are such as reflect not only credit but honour on yourselves and this College. I am happy to find that so many of you have obtained honours and distinctions—that a great majority, sixty-nine out of seventy-eight of you, have passed your terms with great credit, and that not one student has failed from deficiency on his examination. We have also great reason to be satisfied with the whole proceedings of this day. I have listened with great pleasure to the able essay of Mr. Mangles, exhibiting not only elegance of composition but a degree of talent, research, and discrimination in handling the interesting subject, which would do credit to a much more experienced author. I am happy to learn, also, that many other essays, sent in by other Students, are entitled to high commendation, more particularly those of Messrs. Chapman, Lushington, and Waterfield. I am informed also that the several translations which we have heard from Oriental languages are highly creditable to the several gentlemen who have just read them. Gentlemen, for these highly satisfactory results, so honourable to yourselves, we are in a great degree indebted to the exertions of the Rev. Principal and Professors of this College, and in the name of the Court of Directors, I beg to tender them our sincere acknowledgments. Gentlemen, you have been frequently exhorted from this chair, on the great importance of steady and continued exertion in endeavouring to qualify yourselves for the public service in India, and I am persuaded that the more you reflect upon the nature of the very responsible duties that await you, the less you will be surprised at the continued anxiety manifested by the Court of Directors on the subject. You will all be called, at an early period of life, to undertake duties, on the faithful and efficient discharge of which the best interests and the happiness of thousands of your fellow subjects may depend. The limited number of our Civil Service, as compared with the vast extent of our territories and population, renders it necessary to intrust to individuals in India an extent of power much greater than falls to the lot of men in any other portion of the globe, and therefore it ought to be our anxious desire that those whom we appoint to exercise that power should be endowed with talents and acquirements commensurate with the extent and importance of their duties. And I pray you to observe that these duties are exclusively of an intellectual character, requiring not only that peculiar knowledge of the native languages and other information in which we endeavour to instruct you here, but the exercise of a clear, comprehensive, intelligent, and highly cultivated mind. The power of sound, close, logical reasoning is constantly called into action in the exercise of the civilian's duty. Every act in his official capacity ought to be the result of grave and mature deliberation. In his position there ought to be no action on the impulse of the feelings of the moment; all subsidiary circumstances must be well weighed and maturely considered; conflicting statements must be carefully analysed; and before decisions are given, the party deciding must not only be able to convince himself that he is right, but to prove to superior authority that he is so, by the elucidation of the principles upon which he has acted. Thus, a civilian's reputation must be gained by the exercise and steady application of his intellectual faculties. He has no opportunity of gaining a name, as the military officer, by dashing exploits in the field; nor of distinguishing himself, like the statesman of this country, by efforts of eloquence in the Senate; his fame must be the work of careful, patient, and continued study, followed up by diligent application to business, and an uncompromising determination to allow no object to interfere between him and the faithful discharge of his duty. Now, gentlemen, if this is, in any degree, a fair representation of your position, does it not furnish a strong argument in favour of a steady and diligent preparation on your part for your future duties. I know that gentlemen in your position are too apt to think lightly of the advantages of academical attainments; you flatter yourselves that if you can only pass out of College without positive discredit, that all will go well with you when you join the service in India. But, believe me, that this is by no means a safe conclusion; my conviction is, that the student sows the seed of his future harvest at this College. If he carries with him to India an indifferent reputation as a scholar and a man, there is little hope, I fear, of his retrieving his character in that country. In many respects, the circumstances he will have to contend with will be more unfavourable than the present. He will not have the same advantage of instruction. He will be surrounded with novelties and temptations more calculated to distract his attention. If he has proved himself deficient in energy and application in this climate, what may we expect from him under that of India, which is proverbially more enervating? A man who dislikes study at this College, is not likely to be fond of his official duties on the Kutcherry; nor is the student who takes no pleasure in the study of law, political economy, and history, under such eminent professors and interesting and eloquent lecturers as are established at this College, likely to enlarge his knowledge of these subjects by private reading and study in his closet. No, gentlemen, there is no evading the obvious and just inference, that the student's career at this College may be considered the index to his future reputation and usefulness in the public service. I repeat, then, that you need not be surprised at our great anxiety to stimulate you to renewed and vigorous exertion in the prosecution of your studies. Do not imagine, however, that we expect you to be all men of very brilliant genius—certainly not; but we do expect you all to be well-educated men, well-informed on the subjects, a knowledge of which is necessary for the due performance of your future duties; and above all, we expect you to be men of high and honourable principles, who will be anxious to maintain the honour of your country and the credit of that distinguished service to which you will belong. I might dwell at much length on the great advantages which must accrue to those of high attainments. I might show you that necessity compels those in authority to reward the ablest men with the highest appointments. I might quote examples of distinguished members of your service who have been rewarded with the high appointment of governors of presidencies. I might call your attention to several who are now present who owed their high appointments to Council to their own distinguished talents, and I might advert to those who, on retiring from our service, have been selected by Her Majesty's Government to administer the affairs of several of our most important colonies. But these circumstances are ever before you, and I think I noticed them particularly when I addressed you on a former occasion. I would beg you, however, to reflect, frequently, upon the humiliation you must incur should you find yourselves hereafter in situations, the duties of which may be above your capacity. Should you unhappily be placed in such a position, you are aware that our Governments in India could not permit important offices to be filled by inefficient men, and there are few or no appointments held by civilians that do not come under that denomination. I would entreat you, therefore, to avail yourselves zealously of your present opportunities. Let me recommend you to observe regularity and method in pursuing your studies; much more will be accomplished by a steady and persevering application during a certain number of hours per day, than by fits and starts of hard reading, which are generally followed by a corresponding reaction. Moreover, the training which a regular system of study induces, will be most useful in forming and maturing regular habits of business, without which, in India, the most brilliant talents will be ineffectual for the due discharge of the civilian's duty. In aid of this object the regular attendance at chapel, hall, and lectures, ought to be strictly enforced, and by no means considered as mere forms, to be dispensed with according to the convenience or feeling of the moment. Gentlemen, I have not touched on the vices which, when indulged in, are so antagonistic to the course of conduct which I have been so anxiously recommending, trusting that the danger arising from them must be too obvious to require exposition. All men will allow that the intemperate and dissipated man, or the gambler, is an object of contempt in every respectable society. In the civil service of India he would be an intolerable nuisance—a spectacle disgraceful to his country and degrading to the service. I sincerely hope that such a character may never enter within these walls, or at all events, should he gain admission, I am confident that, with such a reputation, he could never pass the ordeal of this College, and be permitted to enter our service. The least that England can do for India is to be careful, to the utmost of our power, to select good men as our instruments of government, and to exclude those who, in addition to being the worst enemies of themselves, must be also the enemies of others. Gentlemen of the Fourth Term, let me address a few words specially to you. You have now completed your term of study at this College, and you will shortly proceed to India, there to perfect yourselves in the native langauges, and thus qualify for the public service. On your arrival there, remember that it will be most important to your own interests that you pass your final examination as soon as possible. You may easily imagine that the period of time which you may require for that purpose, may materially influence our future prospects. Those who are first prepared will be first provided for; and the heads of our Government will naturally select those who have most distinguished themselves for the most important departments of the public service. I am happy to inform you that many of your predecessors have done themselves honour, and this College credit, by the praiseworthy manner in which they have passed all their examinations, within a very brief period. I may mention a few of those who were lately your fellow-students, viz., Chapman, Smyth, Colvin, Egerton, Lowe, Currie, Morris, Hammond, Dampier, and Forbes. They have all qualified themselves for the public service by passing the necessary examinations, within a few months of their arrival at the Presidency, and I trust you will follow their footsteps, and thus furnish us with additional honourable examples, worthy of imitation. Having entered the public service, let it be your great aim to make yourselves thoroughly masters of all the duties that are expected from you; endeavour to perform them with correctness and punctuality; avoid, above all things, procrastination, even in small matters. Nothing will tend so much to your comfort and success as method and punctuality—it will be the only mode of insuring you leisure throughout every day for recreation and the more elegant studies of literature and taste. In your demeanour towards the natives, be courteous and kind, patient and forbearing, and always easy of access. Rudeness or violence of temper, whilst it would be unbecoming your position—will defeat your object. You may command submission for the time, but you will lose the respect of men, and your reputation and usefulness will be proportionably damaged. On all questions involving the religious feelings of the natives you must be particularly careful to avoid giving offence. Rigid non-interference is the maxim to be followed on such occasions. Do not forget that the example you may exhibit in your own walk in life, both public and private, will materially influence the opinions of those around you. The character of our religion and of our country frequently suffers in India by the carelessness of our countrymen in this respect. The poor Hindoo, whose every movement, almost, is more or less connected with his religion, and who labours from morning till night in the observance of the most minute details of its ceremonies, views with astonishment the latitude which Christian men frequently allow themselves, and I am persuaded that such anomalies have hitherto been the greatest obstacles to the extension of our Faith. Let it be your study, my young friends, to recommend your religion to others by a strict observance of its duties in your own persons. Exercise prudence, also, in all the various arrangements of your domestic establishment. Be economical, but not mean, in your expenditure, remembering that many who have gone before you have made shipwreck of their bright prospects and happiness through extravagance; great caution at the commencement of your career, and punctual payments at stated short periods will be your best safeguards from this evil; remember that debt will be as complete a bar to your employment in responsible duties as incapacity, and that the invariable result of such incumbrance is misery and wretchedness to yourselves and those dependent on you. Gentlemen,—I have told you that your reputation and fame must, under Divine Providence, be the work of your own talents and attention. I have told you that they must be the work of time and perseverance: but let me, nevertheless, assure you that slow as may be the process, the progress may be as certain, and the completion of the work as perfect, as in the case of the many brilliant examples that have preceded you in the service. There are not wanting such examples among those who have favoured us with their presence on this occasion; and, happily, there are many such on our records, of men who have not only done great honour to the civil service, but to their country. Remember the examples of Metcalfe, Elphinstone, Edmonstone, and many others. I will not mention the names of those present, but let me add that of a dear friend and beloved colleague, whose voice, alas! we shall hear no more. I allude to my lamented friend, Mr. Tucker. His splendid talents and vigorous intellect; his unremitting zeal and untiring application to his duty, were ever conspicuous among his fellows; and his upright, honourable, and spotless integrity is well worthy of the imitation of us all. May there be among you, my young friends, those who may live to emulate such example! May there be among you, whom I now address, those who (when we are all gathered to our fathers) will shine in this hall, as living proofs of the excellence of the education and training of this College, and thus uphold, to the latest posterity, the honour and reputation of the civil service of India.

The address was listened to with great attention, and frequently applauded.

The deputation and visitors, having perambulated the College grounds for a short time, repaired to the library, where an elegant luncheon was prepared.

At the close of the repast,

The Chairman proposed the health of the principal and professors of the College.

The Rev. H. Melvill, the principal, responded in a short and appropriate speech.

The deputation and visitors then retired from the library, and shortly afterwards returned to town.

The next Term commences on the 10th of September.

MISCELLANEOUS.

OPIMUM V. SPIRITS.—A correspondent, advertising to the large revenue derived by the Indian Government from opium, endeavours to show that the traffic in this article is not objectionable, and that gin does more mischief than opium, eaten or smoked. "As to the morality of the trade," he says, "let John Bull look at our gin-palaces, and recollect that the Celestials, by drinking shamshoo (made from rice, &c.), can ruin their health without opium,—too expensive an article for the bulk of the people. A writer in the Lancet, 21st June, 1851 (p. 694), says: 'That opium-taking is on the increase, any one may convince himself by making inquiries of the druggists. In the country in which I reside, it is well known their chief profit consists in the retail sale of opium.' As Lord Grey said to the bishops, regarding their objection to the Catholic Emancipation Bill, 'Let them put their own houses in order.' Many persons, it is said, who are water-drinkers, take opium; it is added that barristers, public speakers, and some ladies do so when they go to a ball, 'as it makes the eyes look bright.' Many natives in India eat opium. It is said the late Emperor of China was fond of it, as well as his courtiers. The Scotch drink whiskey more than the Irish. It matters little; too much Edinburgh, Burton, or Taunton ale, is just as much excess as taking too much spirits. If any one will take 50,000 chests of opium, at about 125 or 130 lbs. each, and divide this amount among about 200,000,000 of people, he will not find it much. That there are some who destroy themselves by smoking opium, is admitted; but those who have resided at Singapore, &c., state that the cases are very rare. Compare this with the numbers who die from drinking spirits in Great Britain. Recollect our Government collects several millions of taxes (more than the East-India Company) on spirits. We raise these millions from about 29,000,000 of people. The Chinese are eight times as numerous! The tax on spirits is a very convenient one, so is that on opium; but the former yields three or four times the sum of the latter!"

VESSELS FOR THE INDIAN VOYAGE.—The question regarding the skill of our ship-builders, and the union of capacity and speed in our merchant-vessels, promises to receive some satisfactory illustrations from a new line of ships intended for the Indian voyage, and constructed for Mr. W. S. Lindsay. Four of them, named the Alipore, the Barrackpore, the Cossipore, and the Dinapore, are already launched, and two others are in an advanced state. They are all on the same model, measuring from 670 to 720 tons old measurement, and from 800 to 850 tons of the new measurement for registry, and have been constructed with the especial object of combining large stowage capacity with the best sailing properties, so as to realize a merchant ship of the highest character. The two first of the line have already been tried by a voyage recently completed to the Mediterranean, in the service of the Admiralty. As an instance of rapid sailing, it is mentioned that the Barrackpore sighted Corfu on the 16th day after leaving Queenstown, although a dead calm prevented her entering into the port until the 19th day. Both vessels departed last month on their first voyage to the East, and the Cossipore, now in the London Docks, is appointed to sail on the 1st of July. — Times.

THE SHIPMENTS OF SPECIE by the Ganges, which left for India on June 20th, amounted to 83,000*l*. With the exception of 18,000*l*. for Alexandria, and 1,600*l*. in gold for Ceylon, the whole was silver, 55,400*l*. being in bars and dollars for Bombay, 5,600*l*. for Calcutta, and 2,100*l*. for China.

ENGAGEMENT OF SHIPS.—The Hotspur, Bucephalus, Agincourt, Sea Park, and Monarch, have been engaged for the conveyance of troops to Calcutta.

The first consignment of wine, 250 dozen, the produce of our Australian colonies, has been lately received. The qualities are described as "Australian white wine," and "Australian red Hermitage." The cultivation of the vine is steadily increasing in the colonies.

EMBARKATION OF TROOPS FOR INDIA.

Per Lord George Bentinck, for Bengal, from Gravesend June 20; 200 Queen's troops:—Capt. F. C. Fleming, H. M.'s 87th, Lieut. D. R. Croandaile, H. M.'s 61st; Lieut. A. Butler, H. M.'s 87th; Ens. C. R. Ricketts, H. M.'s 32nd; Surg. C. Gordon.

IMPOTENCE OF PERSECUTION.—It is worthy of note, that whilst our James I. was levelling proclamations, prohibitory duties, and pamphlets written with his royal hand, against tobacco, the emperor Jehangir forbade the use of it in India, Amurath IV. interdicted it in Turkey under severe penalties, the Czar of Muscovy threatened punishment to any foreign merchant who should bring it into his dominions, and Shah Abbas, of Persia, issued a proclamation declaring that if any tobacco was found upon a soldier, he and the tobacco should be burnt together.

Annual Premium for assuring 1,000 rupees:—

CIVIL.			MILITARY AND NAVAL.
Age.	With Profits.	Without Profits.	Age.	With Profits.	Without Profits.
20	Rs. 33	Rs. 31	20	Rs. 38	Rs. 35

60	82	77	60	84	79

All holders of Policies in India on the Profit scale, who may have paid five annual premiums, will be entitled, at the expiration of the fifth year, to a year's profit, calculated on the average of the preceding five years; such profit to be paid in cash, or to go in diminution of the future premiums payable, or to be added to the sum assured by the policy, at the option of the holder, after the calculation of the profits shall have been made in London.

After the expiration of 1851, the profits will be declared annually, and the payers of five complete annual premiums be regularly entitled to a participation therein, with a like option as to the mode of application.

Parties assured in India for Life shall, on their return to England for a permanent, and on the first half-yearly premium becoming due, be entitled to come upon the English rates of premium, and be placed under the rules and conditions of the Society there obtaining.

All parties assured for Life, or for terms other than for Life, whatever the number of payments, or the permanency or otherwise of their residence in Europe, shall, after completing a full year from the date of their quitting India, and on the first half-yearly premium thereafter becoming due, be entitled to a reduction of their premium to the English rates, such reduced rates being continued during their further residence in Europe.

Notices of Assignments of Policies will be duly registered at the Office of the Secretaries.

The Society also grants ENDOWMENTS and DEFERRED ANNUITIES for India, the Tables for which, with full information, may be had at the Office of the Family Endowment Society, No. 12, Chatham Place; or at the Office of the Secretaries in Calcutta, Messrs. GORDON, STUART, and Co.

HOWARD ON THE LOSS OF TEETH, and on a new method of FASTENING LOOSE TEETH.—A very curious invention connected with Dental Surgery has been introduced by Mr. H. ward, consisting of an entirely new description of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, fixed by SELF-ADHESION, without springs, wires, or ligatures. They will never change colour or decay. This method does not require the extraction of any teeth or roots, or any painful operation. The invention is of importance to many persons, and those interested in it should read this Treatise.

THE CELEBRATED WHARFEDALE HYDRO-PATHIC ESTABLISHMENT is now only 7 hours' distance from London, is 2 hours' distance from Harrogate, and 21 from Fountains Abbey and Studley Park, 14 from Leeds and Bradford, 21 from Manchester and York, 31 from Liverpool, and 7 miles' drive from Bolton Abbey, the beautiful seat of the Duke of Devonshire.

Physician to the establishment, Dr. WM. MACLEOD, Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians, Edinburgh; Member of the Edinburgh Medico-Chirurgical Society; Honorary Member of the Royal Medical Society; formerly Lecturer on the Institutes of Medicine in the Argyle Square School of Medicine, Edinburgh; and Physician to the Royal Public Dispensary, &c. &c.

On a high eminence near the banks of the Wharfe stands this noble edifice; the extensive and varied scenery of the locality, with its salubrious springs and bracing air, have for centuries back rendered it a favourite place of resort for invalids. The Establishment, for its situation and completeness, is unrivalled in England. It was built expressly for the Water Cure treatment, at an expense of £26,000, and is provided with every convenience, comfort, and even luxury. The Estate, which has been elegantly laid out, consists of 65 acres of hilly and wooded pleasure-grounds. The Hotel, for the accommodation of friends of the patients, is complete in every department. Terms: Board, Lodging, Medical Attendance, &c. (including all servants), per week, £3. 6s.; Board and Lodging in the Hotel department (including all servants), per week, £2. 2s. Further particulars respecting coaches, &c., may be obtained of the House Steward, by letter addressed to him, Ben Rhydding, near Otley, Yorkshire. Dr. Macleod begs to refer those resident in India for further particulars of his establishment and method of treatment to his friend, Robert Browne, Esq., M.D., Superintending-Surgeon of the Honourable East-India Company's Service, Dinapore, Bengal Presidency.

A SEARCH AFTER HEALTH, AND WHERE IT IS TO BE FOUND. A LETTER by a LIVERPOOL MERCHANT to his Brother Merchants, and to all who are labouring under the Great English Malady, the wear and tear of the system, or an over-wrought brain.

"The letter is written in a high tone of elation, because of a complete return to health. . . . He had consulted most of the eminent physicians at home and abroad; visited Harrogate, Buxton, &c., and the German spas. All of no avail. At last he places himself under Dr. Macleod, at his palatial establishment of Ben Rhydding, from which, at the end of three months, he emerges completely cured."—Glasgow Citizen.

LADIES Travelling, or during the Drive, the Aquatic

Excursion, or while otherwise exposed to the scorching rays of the Sun and heated particles of Dust, will find ROWLAND'S KALYDOR a most refreshing preparation for the Complexion, dispelling the cloud of languor and relaxation, allaying all heat and irritability, and immediately affording the pleasing sensation attending restored elasticity and healthful state of the Skin. It tends to neutralize the action of the atmosphere upon the Skin, and to promote that healthy action of the microscopic vessels, by which its general well-being and the beauty of its appearance are so essentially promoted. Freckles, Tan, Spots, Pimples, Flushes, and Discolorations, fly before its application, and give place to delicate smoothness, and the glow of beauty and of bloom. In cases of Sunburn, or Stings of Insects, its virtues have long been acknowledged. Price 3s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle.

ROWLAND'S AQUA D'ORO. This is the most fragrant and refreshing perfume ever yielded by the "Souls of Flowers." It retains its fresh and delightful odourousness for days. It is invigorating, gently stimulating, yet sedative; and is an unrivalled quintessential spirituous product. For Fainting Fits, lassitude or fatigue, oppression from over-crowded rooms, or intense summer heat, it will be found most cordial and restorative in its effects.

Travellers and residents in warm climates will fully appreciate its invigorating and refreshing properties; and gentlemen after smoking would do well to rinse the mouth with a small quantity, and thus restore the breath to sweetness and purity. Price 3s. 6d. per bottle.

Sold by A. ROWLAND and SONS, 20, Hatton-garden, London, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS A CERTAIN SPECIFIC for NERVOUSNESS, LOWNESS OF SPIRITS, and DISORDERED STOMACHS.—The wonderfully regenerating effects produced by these invaluable Pills are truly astonishing. This fine Medicine acts in so peculiar a manner on the system, that by following the directions affixed to each box, as to the mode of using it, nervous irritability is allayed, the tone of the stomach strengthened, the digestion improved, freedom of circulation given to the blood, and a robust state of health attained. Persons of studious and sedentary habits, being more especially liable to the class of disorders alluded to, should take Holloway's Pills to insure a good state of health.

Sold by all Druggists, and at Professor Holloway's establishment, 244, Strand, London; and by all European and Native vendors of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE intelligence from India by this mail is again scanty, and the penury is increased by the want of Bombay journals, owing to the monsoon. We can, however, repeat the satisfactory announcement that the whole of our Eastern territory is tranquil.

The arrangements for the frontier between Bunoo and Kohat seem still unsettled. It is not known what force will be permanently cantoned at Kohat. Two regiments of Punjab infantry, and one of Punjab cavalry, with a light field battery, were there; but it is thought that the greater part of the cavalry will be removed after the hot season to Murwut, and stationed at Lukee, and that a wing of infantry will be posted at Nuree, to keep open the communication between Bunoo and Kohat. A predatory party of Wuzerees had attempted to carry off a number of camels at graze in the hills near the Nuree Salt-mine. Chase was immediately given, the camels were recovered, and two prisoners taken. A letter from the Bunoo frontier states that the marauders who had assembled in front of Ismael Khan, had all dispersed to their homes.

Advices from Peshawur state that a severe shock of an earthquake was felt there on the morning of the 11th of May. A bridge of boats had been constructed over the river Loonda, between Peshawur and Shubsqudr. A company of the 23rd N.I. has been ordered to guard this bridge.

It was reported that another battle had taken place at Balkh, in which the troops of Dost Mohamed were victorious. The Dost's sons have divided the conquered country into four parts, of which each has taken possession of one. It is reported that Dost Mohamed is sick, and, on a difference arising between him and Peer Mohamed Khan and Sooltan Mohamed, the former was obliged to pacify them by complying with all their wishes.

From Oude we learn that disturbances had broken out in the Sultanpore district. Several regiments attacked a very large and strong fort, called Kapradee, belonging to a Hindoo zemindar, who makes some difficulty about settling the revenue with the chucklidar. In the attack, one regiment alone lost sixteen men in killed and wounded. The zemindar at length evacuated that fort, but fled into another stronghold. Captains Magness and Bunbury cannonaded it for nine days, and at last shelled him out. "The country round about, which belongs to the same owner," says a letter from Lucknow, "abounds with these forts. The zemindar himself is but a boy; his Karindas are the people who refuse to pay the revenues demanded by the chucklidar."

Lucknow itself had been the scene of a riotous proceeding, causing the loss of more than twenty men killed and wounded. The scene of action was Hosseinabad, and it originated thus: a syce of the minister's was walking off with a pot of oil in charge of a sepoy, who, on the syce's showing resistance, cut him with his sword; the spear-bearers and the syces of the minister came to his assistance; the king's soldiers, seeing this, immediately marched up to aid their fellow-soldiers. A very serious disturbance took place, the king's troops came to quell it, and succeeded, after the minister's men had lost eleven men wounded and three killed, and the king's five men wounded and two killed. Some even mention thirty-five men killed and wounded. One of the king's guns was made to bear on the rioters.

From Hydrabad we continue to be entertained with narratives of misrule and revolt. The Englishman's correspondent says:—

"The every-day topic, we have nothing besides, is the rapacity of the Arabs, their oppression of the Nizam's subjects, and their complete domination over his highness and his government. The Nizam must be conscious of his total want of authority over them, for his mandate is never issued directly to the party whom he desires to control, but through the medium of the two leading Arab chiefs. These men have the good sense to see that the Nizam's right of control should not be quite thrown over, and frequently, when no common interest is involved, or any powerful party among themselves likely to be provoked by their conduct, they yield a prompt obedience. But in almost all the instances where money is the ground of contention, they are found leaning towards their own people, and thwarting the Nizam by indirect means. I have reverted only to the conduct of the Nizam as necessarily indicating in itself that of his courts of justice and police. These last dare not make a single movement offensive to the body of the Arabs. The apprehension of a murderer in a small way is occasionally permitted to the police, but not his punishment."

The Nyaghur business is said to be in a fair way of being very soon and quietly settled, and in a way much more satisfactory than Pykarow had any reason to hope for. He has written to his sons to join him at Pooree, and go before the burra sahib, and that they are all to be forgiven their little offences of murder and arson, and he is to have all his lands and villages, which were confiscated by the late rajah, restored to him.

All the great officials were skreening themselves from the heat in the coolest retreats they could find. The Governor-General and suite, the Commander-in-Chief and staff, the Lieutenant-Governor of the north-western provinces, the magnates of the Punjab, with an exceeding great army of collectors, magistrates, majors, and captains, have all sought shelter on the bracing heights of Simla from the lassitude of an Indian summer. The governor of Bombay is recruiting his energies on the breezy hills of Mahabuleshwar; while Sir Henry Pottinger seeks rest from the dust and excitement of Madras, on the quiet banks of the Ennore lake. The Governor-General is said to have relinquished his design of keeping the hot season at Cheenec.

The heat of the weather is described as almost insupportable. The Englishman says, "Such a hot and dry season is scarcely remembered in Bengal, and the people are suffering much from sickness and the want of wholesome water. It has, of course, been unfavourable to the prospects of our indigo-planters, and the prevalent opinion now is that the crop will be extremely short. In this country 'fire performs the effect of frost' in others, and all business is put off which admits of delay." The Hurkaru states that the thermometer, in the coolest rooms, stood at 92 deg. to 94 deg. and the breeze, which should have brought refreshment at the close of the sultry day, had often been as the breath of a furnace.

At Calcutta, public attention has been directed to a movement among the orthodox Hindus, designed to counteract the efforts of the Christian missionaries. Some recent cases of conversion led to a public meeting, attended by about three hundred persons, including a body of learned pundits, whose office was to direct the opinions of the assembly. Under the guidance of these spiritual leaders, the meeting came to the conclusion that, contrary to common belief and immemorial usage, an outcast—and a convert is one of course—may, under the law of the Shasters, be received back within the pale of the Hindu communion, on the performance of certain penitential ceremonies. The object of establishing this new doctrine is to afford an opportunity of tempting converts back to the faith of their fathers by offering to reinstate them in all their forfeited privileges. It is generally believed, however, that the agitation will, as a matter of course, die away without effecting any result of importance.

The Government, in conjunction with the Chamber of Commerce, has appointed a committee to investigate the subject of ship-burning.

The Ceylon journals are engrossed with the subject of the result of Captain Watson's trial, which has filled every one with astonishment, and his enemies with indignation. In spite of the sentence of the court-martial, the editor of the Ceylon Observer says, "We have no more doubt that Capt. Albert Watson signed and sent forth those proclamations than we have of our own existence. This is a declaration of our sentiments which we are ready to make good, if we have the opportunity given us, in any civil court of the island, in which the truth shall be fully brought out, and in which both parties, not merely one, shall be properly and efficiently represented." Mr. Elliott has explained the circumstances under which he became possessed of the proclamations; his explanation will be found in another page.

The Hong-Kong papers continue to speak of the insurrection in the two Kwang provinces as a very serious matter. Three commissioners, one of them the Prime Minister, have been despatched from Peking to the capital of Kwang-se, in order to superintend the operations against the rebels, who were in possession of the greatest portion of that province. Large bodies of imperial troops had marched from Canton, but as the direct communication with Kwei-lin had been cut off, they were forced to enter Kwang-se by the circuitous route of Honan. Meanwhile a serious rising had taken place in the western districts of the Kwang-tung province, and measures had been adopted for blocking up the river in the San-shwuy district, so as to protect Canton on its water side. The leader of the rebels turns out to be, as we surmised, a descendant of the Ming dynasty; some reports allege that he is a Christian. There can be little doubt that the ruling dynasty is in some jeopardy. If the insurgents had been mere robbers, as native accounts represent them, they must have been put down long ago. The Chinese Repository for April, a well-informed publication, has the following notice of the subject:—

"The insurgents in Kwángsi have given rise to many rumours during the past month, but as usual, we are unable to draw the line between the real and the doubtful. It is a fact, however, that the impression of the danger to the stability of the imperial government by the proceedings of these banditti is constantly deepening among the people of Canton, and they regard the restoration of quiet and legitimate authority throughout Kwangsi as remote. It is said that about three-fifths of the entire province is under the control of the self-elevated chief Tienteh, and that his forces possess the three important stations on the Pearl River, which command the three great branches flowing through the province. The former imperial commissioners Li and Chau having failed, his majesty has appointed three Manchus to proceed at once to the scene of conflict, whose rank indicates that the affair is regarded as a serious one at the metropolis. Their names are Sai-hangah, the prime-minister, who has succeeded to the post held by Muhciangah; Tatuogah, known for his barbarous execution of shipwrecked sailors in Formosa, in 1842; and Hingteh. They will reach Kweilin through Hunan, taking troops and stores from that and other contiguous provinces. This province has also been drawn on for a large sum of money,—some say a million of taels,—and a number of large cannon have been cast. Troops have left Canton during the month, draughted from Hwuchan-fu, and there has been considerable bustle in the city caused by their presence. The interruption to the trade between the two provinces is increasing, and the traffic is now reduced to almost one-half of its usual amount."

The intelligence from the Cape of Good Hope affords little prospect of a speedy termination of the war in British Caffraria, which, according to the Cape Town papers, was gradually assuming an unfavourable aspect, and causing much anxiety. The Caffres avoid all encounters with our troops in the field, and although the patrolling system adopted by the latter must cause the enemy great annoyance and loss, they appear to evince no desire to treat for peace, but spread their marauding parties over the frontier districts. The arrival of the 74th Highlanders, in addition to the 300 men brought by the Singapore, was a seasonable reinforcement; but more troops are required for operations along so extended a line of frontier. A Cape Town journal says:—

"A couple more regiments of infantry, one of light dragoons, and, above all, some companies of the rifle brigade, with proportionate artillery, will probably be required before the half-barbarous tribes in our vicinity can be sufficiently impressed with the power of Great Britain for any lasting and satisfactory peace to be concluded. As we have before observed, the sooner a sufficient force can be brought into the field the better; the necessity is inevitable, and further delay may increase the disorder and bloodshed in our newly-acquired territory and the sovereignty, and augment the cost of this harassing warfare. Whatever conciliatory measures be adopted, and whatever alteration in our Caffre policy is contemplated, they should be preceded by a display of the power of Britain to subdue and crush any combination of the coloured tribes in the vicinity of the colony."

A very strong sensation was created at Cape Town, by a rumour that a despatch from Lord Grey had been brought by the Vulcan, directing the removal of the seat of Government to the frontier. Application was made by the mercantile community to Mr. Secretary Montague to ascertain whether there was any foundation for this rumour, which he confirmed to this extent,—that a "despatch had been recently received from Earl Grey, in which he states it appears to him that the time is come when the seat of Government can no longer be kept in a position so far from central as Cape Town, without extreme inconvenience." The Zuid Afrikaan asserts, "upon the most undoubted authority," that the seat of Government was to be removed, not to Graham's Town, but to any part of the eastern districts, on the ground that this will be more convenient for the administration of the affairs of British Caffraria and the north-eastern sovereignty; and that this order was to be carried into effect without delay, unless the Governor shall see reason to the contrary.

This announcement is strangely inconsistent with a declaration of Lord J. Russell, in the House of Commons, on the 3rd of April, in reply to a question by Mr. Adderley, that "no instructions had been sent out with respect to the removal of the seat of Government."

CASUALTIES BY DEATH IN THE ARMIES OF INDIA REPORTED SINCE OUR LAST PUBLICATION.

BENGAL.—Lieut. A. Beresford, 62nd N.I., at Calcutta, May 29; Lieut. F. Paynter, 31st N.I., on board the Earl of Balcarra, off the Western Isles, from Bombay, aged 31, May 21.

MADRAS.—Capt. C. Carter, 35th N.I., at Kamptee, May 28; Capt. J. Merritt, 2nd Eur. L.I., at Secunderabad, June 3; Capt. R. H. Richardson, 7th L. C., at Calcutta, May 18; Lieut. F. Edwardes, 35th N.I., at Kamptee, May 21; Ens. E. Carleton, 44th N.I., at Madura, May 23; Assist. apoth. J. Goldsmith, 23rd L.I., at Balasore, aged 21, May 22.

BENGAL.

GREAT ANTI-MISSIONARY MOVEMENT.

A great meeting of the orthodox Hindoos of Calcutta, called for the purpose of devising some expedient by which to resist the gradual encroachments of the missionaries, was held on Sunday, the 25th May, at the Oriental Seminary.

The meeting was attended by a very numerous body of Hindoo gentlemen, chiefly of the old and orthodox school, and among them were the recognized leaders of almost every party in Calcutta, except the extreme liberals, generally represented by Baboo Ram Gopal Ghose. Raja Radhakanta Deb was voted into the chair, and commenced the business of the meeting by an inquiry into the objects of the gentlemen of Bhowanipore who had summoned them together. The spokesman of the Bhowanipore party, a pleader in the Sudder Court, who took a prominent part in the meeting, explained that Bhowanipore had been seriously agitated by the recent conversions, and that it had become evident to the inhabitants of that quarter, that a great Hindoo movement must be organized to resist the progress of the missionaries. They considered that a form of purification, which should enable those who had embraced Christianity to return to their ancestral creed, was the most practical expedient for that purpose, and they were determined to bring the question to an immediate issue. The speaker interlarded his remarks with some abuse of the missionaries, which was promptly checked by the chairman, who observed that those gentlemen were only doing their duty. A desultory conversation followed, in which, however, it was agreed nem. con. that any attempt to prevent the rising generation of natives from paying particular attention to the study of English would be absurd in principle, and useless in practice. One individual suggested that it was better to abandon the pursuit of English knowledge than to endanger the orthodoxy of their families; but he was promptly told that "if English did not lead to heaven, it did to wealth." The question which it was necessary to submit to the pundits was then read aloud, and ran as follows:—"If a Hindu forfeits the privileges of his caste and religion, by partaking of forbidden food, and frequenting places and observing practices in contravention of the injunctions of the shasters knowingly and deliberately, and if he afterwards express his contrition and prays to be restored to his privileges, can he not be entitled to perform the ceremony of absolution, and thereby procure redemption?" The question was answered at once in the affirmative by an immense majority of the assembled pundits, but it will have to be submitted to the most learned men in different parts of the country. The chairman was enabled to state that the Maharajah of Nuddea, the religious oracle of Bengal, was favourable to the scheme. It was said that it would be necessary even to consult the pundits of the North-West; but no definite resolution was adopted on the subject. The chairman then read out the mode of purification which it was proposed to adopt, and alluded to the old mode of expiating offences by wandering for forty-eight years as an ascetic, the hardship of which, he said, "is more than human nature can bear." A milder form was therefore substituted, consisting "in the presentation of some hundred kine, and some kahuns of cowries," to the Brahmins. The gift of a hundred kine is, of course, commutable for a certain number of cowries. They are to be rated at their market value in the Golden Age. The beef-eating English conquered the country. After a few more observations, and a story about a convert, from the editor of the Bhaskur, the meeting broke up. Another will shortly be held in the same place.

JUGUNNATH.

The following draft of an Act will probably bring the long-discussed question of the connection of Government with the shrine of Jugunnath to a final, and we trust a satisfactory, issue:—

"Whereas, notwithstanding the prohibition to exact taxes and fees from pilgrims, by Act X. 1840, fees and offerings are taken of pilgrims resorting to the temple therein mentioned, for behoof of the priests and others belonging to the said temple, over which no effectual control can be had, or ought to be attempted to be had, by Government. It is declared and enacted as follows:—

I. Act X. 1840 is repealed; but not so as to revive any Regulation or part of any Regulation thereby repealed.

II. No tax, fee or payment of any kind shall be taken on behalf of the Government from any pilgrim resorting to the said temple, or other place of pilgrimage.

III. Nothing contained in Section XXX. Regulation XII. 1805, of the Bengal Code, or in any other Regulation or Act, binds or shall be construed to bind the Government to make or continue any donation for support of the said temple.

IV. Nothing contained in this Act shall be construed to forbid any person or persons, having the charge or superintendence of, or officiating at, the said temple, from taking their accustomed fees and offerings."

A short reference to the history of our interference with this temple appears necessary to put the reader in possession of the real merits of the case. In the first settlement of the newly acquired province of Cuttack, it was provided that all sayer duties should cease, with the exception of "the duties levied from pilgrims at Jugunnath;" and that all pensions should revert to Government after the decease of the present incumbent; but that "this was not to be construed as authorizing the resumption of the established donation for the support of the temple of Jugunnath." Regulation IV. of 1806 ordains that "a tax shall be levied on the part of Government (as was done before under the late Mahratta Government) on pilgrims resorting to this shrine." This tax was to be considered as including the usual fees of the officers of the temple, who were strictly prohibited from making any demands for money. It did not, however, include the fee to which the Pundahs, or pilgrim hunters, were entitled, in conformity with established usage, from the pilgrims. This enactment was subsequently repealed, and the superintendence of the temple was vested in the Rajah of Khoorda, while the collection of the tax was entrusted to an officer with the official designation of the "Collector of the tax on pilgrims."

The connection of Government with the shrine was from the very first mercenary, and was intended to increase the public revenues. It was calculated that, after paying the establishment of the temple of Jugunnath, a sum varying from half a lac to a lac of rupees would remain to the credit of the state. In process of time, however, this mode of increasing the public resources from the revenues of superstition, as well as the minute interference of the officers of the state in the internal economy of this idolatrous shrine, appeared to compromise the character of Government, and the most strenuous efforts were made to induce the Court of Directors to relinquish all connection with it. These efforts at length became successful, and Act X. of 1840, abolished the pilgrim tax, and transferred the conduct and management of the affairs of Jugunnath to the Rajah of Khoorda. Strange to say, Lord Auckland, who was at the time at Simla, rejected the advice of the council in Calcutta, and determined to continue the donation which had been paid out of the tax. At the same time the Act strictly forbade the Rajah of Khoorda to demand the "usual fees." It ordained that he should not receive or allow to be received, by any person connected with the temple, any payment other than such voluntary payment as may be freely offered from any person resorting to the temple for the performance of religious ceremonies. This arrangement presented the anomaly of saddling Government with the payment of a large monthly donation, while it cut off the source from which it had been derived for thirty-five years. It transferred the superintendence of the temple of Jugunnath and its internal economy to the Rajah of Khoorda, and at the same time deprived him of the power exercised by every other superintendent of every other temple in India, of fixing his own value on the religious privileges enjoyed by the pilgrims, and demanding whatever fee he thought fit. The Act, as might have been expected, failed to give any satisfaction, and it has been the subject of angry discussion from that time to the present. About five years ago, the question was brought before the Supreme Council, and the donation was cut down to about Rs. 26,000, but the restriction imposed on the rajah of exacting fees was not repealed. It is understood that the Court of Directors have now taken up the subject again, and forced it upon the consideration of the council, who have, at length, adopted the right course, after forty-five years of perverse policy. The Act before us is intended to restore to the Khoorda rajah the right, of which he had been deprived, of demanding fees from the pilgrims; and it leaves Government at liberty at any future time to stop the donation. The fees which the rajah and the officers of the temple are thus legally permitted to demand, cannot be less than three times the value of the donation. The Act affirms that the prohibition to exact taxes and fees from pilgrims had been evaded, and that no effectual control can be had, or ought to be attempted to be had, over the fees and offerings; it declares that no tax, fee or payment of any kind shall be taken on behalf of Government; but that the person or persons having the charge or superintendence of the temple, are not forbidden to take their accustomed fees and offerings. Thus a question which has agitated the Christian community of England, and the councils of Government for so many years, has been settled in a manner which appears, on the whole, equitable and satisfactory; and Government is left at liberty to relieve itself from the odium it has so long incurred by its connection with this shrine, while those fees and taxes, which were hitherto taken in contravention of the laws, are now legalized and confirmed.

But something more remains to be done to render the settlement of the question perfectly equitable. If, when the pilgrim tax was abolished, Lord Auckland had followed the advice of his council, and discontinued the donation from the state, and at the same time allowed the Rajah of Khoorda to fix his own scale of fees from pilgrims, as every other proprietor of every other shrine is at liberty to do throughout India, no one could have arraigned the justice of the proceeding; but the Governor-General publicly recognized the obligation of Government to make a monthly donation from the public revenues for the expenses of the state. We have always been of opinion that no such obligation could be made out from any previous treaty, or arrangement. The donation was paid from the pilgrim tax, and ought equitably to have ceased with the discontinuance of that tax; but the absolute and unreserved declaration of the highest authority in British India, constituted an obligation from that date, from which we cannot now be exonerated. Again, when the subject was brought under discussion five years after, and the members of council anew acknowledged this obligation, although they reduced the amount, they gave it all the validity of a formal compact, to which the faith of the British Government of India was pledged. Mr. Millett was one of the members of council at the time, and though he was among the most strenuous opponents of the British connection with Jugunnath, he considered Government bound to pay the reduced allowance, after a most careful and most impartial investigation of the subject. Under these circumstances, it appears to us necessary to the vindication of our own character for justice and honour, that, whenever Government may proceed to cut off the annual donation, an equitable compensation in money should be given to the proprietor of the temple. It is said, that the Rajah of Khoorda has been in the habit of exacting from the pilgrims every farthing that could be squeezed out of them, and that the cessation of the Government tax has brought them little, if any relief. We have the most perfect confidence in this statement; we believe that the priests have extorted the last courie from the unfortunate devotees, though they have done it illegally; but this fact was fully known to the Government of India in 1845, when the new arrangement was made, and the donation perpetuated.—Friend of India, May 22.

EXTRAORDINARY LIBEL CASE.

In an obscure court of that obscurest nook of the British Empire in India, called Cherra Poonjee, an important libel case has just been disposed of by a lieutenant of infantry, which, in our own land, would have called into exercise all the talent of Queen's counsel, and all the acumen of the ermined bench. The case, as we have been informed, stands thus: A coal company has been in existence for some time, with the object of developing the resources of the Cossyah hills, and Mr. Gibson, a civil engineer, was their local agent. Two Cossyahs brought a demand against the company in the Cherra Court for the ground-rent of a depôt. Mr. Gibson directed his mooktyar to draw up a reply, stating that there were no papers in the office to indicate that his predecessors had made any agreement with these men for ground-rent, that they had made no demand of Mr. Gibson for rent for four years, and that he did not believe they had any right to the land. The mooktyar toasted into the answer the words that "the defendant believed Mr. Harry Inglis had bribed these two men to bring this unfounded charge against him." Mr. Gibson was not aware of the existence of these expressions, and signed the document. More than one gentleman was present when the mooktyar read the reply, and they bear testimony that the name of Mr. Inglis was not mentioned in it. As soon as Mr. Gibson was made aware that these improper expressions had been used, he publicly retracted them in a document which was filed with the record of the suit; at the same time a letter certifying this retraction was delivered to Mr. Inglis. That gentleman, however, thought fit to bring an action for libel against Mr. Gibson, in the Assistant's Court at Cherra Poonjee, and laid his damages at Rs. 10,000. We have just received information that the Assistant has decided the case against Mr. Gibson, and condemned him in damages to the amount of Rs. 5,000! Such a decision is perfectly unparalleled in the annals of our Courts, and to suppose that it can be allowed to stand for a moment, would be a reflection on the Company's tribunals such as their bitterest enemy has not yet inflicted on them. Happily, the appeal from this case lies direct to the Sudder, and in their sense of justice and equity, we have the most perfect confidence.—Friend of India, May 15.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The London mail, of April 24, arrived at Calcutta on June 2.

THE INSTALLATION OF SIR JAMES THOMPSON, as K. C. B., took place on the evening of the 23rd May, at Government House, Calcutta, in the presence of about 100 military men, and a great number of civilians. The Deputy-governor of Bengal, Sir John Littler, performed the ceremony of investiture.

PUNJAB IRREGULAR FORCE.—We have heard on good authority, which is strengthened by the opinion of the up-country papers, that a committee will shortly assemble at Lahore, under the presidency of Sir Henry Lawrence, for the purpose of drawing up and promulgating articles and ordinances for the guidance and government of the Punjab Irregular Force, and that in addition to the wide experience of Sir Henry himself, the committee will either be composed of, or be assisted by, the energetic Brigadier Hodgson, and the well-known Chamberlain. Certainly these are good materials, and we should expect a code which even the Simla committee might study with advantage.—Englishman, June 2.

THE TIBET ROAD.—A letter from Simla, dated the 24th of May, says:—"The oft-mentioned tunnel on the Hindostan and Tibet road was opened this morning, the thirty-second anniversary of her Majesty's birth-day, when the Lieutenant-governor N. W. Provinces, attended by Mr. Edwards, C. S., superintendent of Hill States, Simla, walked through it. The grand obstacle to the advance of the great work being now overcome, there is no doubt the line will soon be completed.—Delhi Gaz. May 28.

FURLOUGHS.—A correspondent inquires from us if any better system of furlough may be expected on the renewal of the charter, and we are glad to be able to assure him, that there is no doubt new regulations, in accordance with the advanced and advancing state of steam navigation, will be brought forward and carried at the period he alludes to. We believe it is intended to propose a remodelling of the present system, something in accordance with that contained in the body of the "furlough memorial," not, however, acceding to the full prayer of that document, but taking it as the basis on which to frame the new regulations, which will, we understand, not only embrace the indulgence of a more frequent furlough, but will grant it on more favourable terms. We know not the precise nature of the intended alterations, but we do know that they are expected in some measure to meet the wants and wishes of those whom the present stringent rules have hitherto prevented visiting the auld countrie: and our columns will always be open, our pen ever at the service of those who may wish to offer or urge any proposition or argument in support of what we deem to be so vitally interesting to the Bengal army.—Englishman, June 3.

BEER FOR THE TROOPS.—The Governor-General, according to the Calcutta Morning Chronicle, has advised the Court of Directors to send out 1,000 hogsheds of ale, and 1,500 hogsheds of porter for the use of the European troops. One portion of the consignment is to be sent to Calcutta, and the remainder to the Punjab, via the Indus.

ROORKEE.—The contemplated depôt for mathematical instruments at Roorkee has been finally sanctioned by the Governor-General. There are to be shops for the manufacture and repair of instruments, the whole to be placed under the immediate superintendence of Lieut. Allen. It was only the other day, that we heard an engineer officer of distinction discounting with much truth on the general inferiority of the instruments furnished by Government, and the great difficulty of having any damage repaired. The Roorkee establishment will remove at least one of these objections.—Lahore Chronicle, May 17.

SHIP BURNING.—The following gentlemen have been nominated by Government to act as Commissioners of Inquiry into the causes of the late cases of ship-burning in the port of Calcutta. Captain J. E. Rogers, superintendent of marine, chairman; Messrs. John Cowie, W. F. Fergusson, J. J. Mackenzie, C. B. Skinner, J. Sutherland, J. Wells, and Captain Hill, with Mr. Sutherland, as secretary, and a clerk on Rs. 200 a month. They are, it is said, to inquire into every particular of the late calamities, and to ascertain whether there are any real grounds for believing the fires to be the work of incendiaries.

A SINGULAR AND FATAL DUEL with swords took place between two sepoy of the 38th N. I. at Lucknow, on the 21st May. One of them was killed by an awful cut from the shoulder right down into the chest. The victor then passed his sword through his own throat and fell dead by the side of his victim.

EASTERN LABOURERS.—The Hurkaru publishes an account of the different value of the labour of Bengalees, Dangurs (men from the hills south-east of Burdwan) and Chinese. The writer had occasion to clear some new land overrun with a thick, broad-leaved, grass, which it was absolutely necessary to remove. To this work he set Bengalees, Dangurs, Chamars, and Chinese, to whom he paid Rs. 2-12, Rs. 2, Rs. 4, and Rs. 8 a month respectively. After some time he found that each Dangur did as much as two Bengalees, and each Chamar as much as two Dangurs, and each Chinese as much as two Chamars.

MR. W. C. LOCHNER.—A private letter from Lahore, of the 19th inst., contains the melancholy intelligence of the death, by his own hand, of a young civilian recently appointed to the Punjab, Mr. W. Conrad Lochner. It appears that Mr. Lochner, whose station was a few miles from Umritser, had been lately suffering from fever, from which, however, he had nearly recovered. Two or three weeks ago, he went, on leave, to Lahore, for the purpose of medical advice; and it was at Lahore that the fatal event took place, on the night of the 18th instant. Only half an hour before, he had been conversing cheerfully with a friend; and there seems to be no doubt that the sad act was wholly unpremeditated, and apparently the result of temporary aberration of mind, suddenly supervening. Mr. Lochner, previous to his appointment to the Punjab, had been for some years stationed near the presidency—first at Kishnagar and afterwards at Burdwan. He was known to a large circle at and near Calcutta, to whom he was endeared by his kindly disposition and happy, blithesome spirit, and each and all of whom will now mourn over his untimely end.—Bengal Hurkaru, May 27.

MAJORS' BONUS FUND.—A correspondent writing to us from Mussoorie on the subject of the intended retirement of Lieut.-Col. Charles Griffiths, reported by the last Overland Mail, says, that Col. Griffiths has accepted a moderate sum from the Majors' Bonus Fund on retiring. This is the third Lieut.-Colonel purchased out by the persevering few who stand by the original agreement, and our correspondent hopes, that this additional proof of the vitality of the Fund will stimulate all those who are in arrears to pay up, and even incline them to make advances, to enable the managers to take advantage of any contingency which may occur. All who are desirous of promotion must now see that steps are always to be had if money is available. If all were unanimous in supporting the Majors' Bonus Fund, ten steps could be purchased in as many weeks. The tenth Major in the list would, in all probability, receive back in increased pay as much as he had advanced for the rank he obtains. Let senior captains and senior lieutenants, says our correspondent, take this matter into their serious consideration; and those who have already had the advantage of the promotion obtained by the purchase money being paid by others, should come forward and support the existing Retiring Fund in the Bengal Infantry.—Delhi Gazette, May 28.

JOTEE PERSAUD.—The Englishman, writing upon the case of Jotee Persaud, declared that:—"Bail to the extent of one lakh of rupees was demanded of him by Mr. M. Gubbins, and the Chief Justice, when called upon to indorse the warrant, reduced the amount to ten thousand rupees. This Rs. 10,000 which was in the first instance illegally taken from the Lalla by the magistrate of Agra, is now withheld. It is declared 'forfeit,' and kept in the coffers of the Company, under the denomination of a fine!" The Agra Messenger, however, which may be supposed, from geographical position, to be in possession of the best information, denies this story in toto. All demand on account of the bail-bond executed in Calcutta, has been relinquished, and the only estreat that has been made is that of the bond for Rs. 20,000 executed at Agra in July 1850, and which was knowingly forfeited by the Lalla, when he went to Calcutta. Even this, however, has been reduced to Rs. 10,000, and it is expected that Rs. 5,000 more will be remitted.

THE RANEE OF LAHORE AND MR. JOSEPH HUME.—The Citizen gives the following account of the failure of the endeavours to interest Mr. Joseph Hume in the cause of the Ex-Ranee of Lahore:—"The termination of the case is rather amusing. As the Ranees' future champion, Mr. Newmarch selected Mr. Joseph Hume; expecting him to do valiant battle in her cause against the Honourable John, as we still doubt not that he would have done, had not a little incident prevented his brief from ever reaching him. It was transmitted by the mail which leaves Calcutta overland via Bombay, the Indian postage being duly paid. But English postage became chargeable thereon by the time it reached Bryanstone-square: and this Old Joey refused to fork out. The package big with the fortunes of the Ranees, therefore, after a lapse of some months, came again to Mr. Newmarch's hands, marked "Dead letter office, returned letter."

RAILWAYS AND RATE OF EXCHANGE.—The rate of exchange in connection with our own rail has occasioned considerable dissatisfaction to the Indian shareholders. The exchange is now fixed at 1s. 10d. the rupee, though the rate originally proposed was 2s., and shares were taken with that expectation, if not with that understanding. But when the contract with the East-India Company was under discussion, the Court of Directors fixed the exchange at 1s. 10d. the rupee, as their ultimatum. The railway company had either to decline the contract altogether, or to accept it on that condition. Fortunately, shares rose in value after the completion of the contract, and those who were dissatisfied with the exchange were thus enabled to sell out without loss. Still, it is complained of as a hardship by existing shareholders, that they are obliged to pay up their shares at this rate, when the market value of exchange is nearer 2s. But a little consideration will reconcile them to the rule. A twelve month ago, when the ordinary exchange was below 1s. 10d., the Indian shareholders did not consider that they had any reason to complain of an arrangement which gave them more than the market rate; and it is only since the improvement of the exchange that they have had any reason for dissatisfaction. But they should bear in mind that it is optional for them to pay calls and to receive dividends in London or in Calcutta, either in pounds sterling or in rupees; that is to say, they may pay 20l. for each share in London, or Rs. 218-2-11 pie in Calcutta, and receive a dividend of 1l. at home, or Rs. 10-14-4 in India. The coming call is 3l. per share, or in India Rs. 32-11-8; but if the shareholder be desirous of paying the sum in London, he may give intimation of his wish to the railway office in Calcutta, and remit the amount of his call to London in a bill at an exchange of 2s. or whatever may be the current rate of the day.—Friend of India, May 15.

ON DITS.—We learn that Brigadier S. Shaw, at present commanding at Bareilly, is to be appointed brigadier commandant of artillery in the room of Brigadier W. H. L. Frith, proceeded to Europe.—We understand that the place chosen for the residence of the brigadier commanding the Punjab Irregular Force is Esaukhel, which is about twenty miles from Bunoo, central, though not so pleasant as the Murree Hills.—We hear that it has been resolved to abolish Kangra and the fort at Noorpoor as stations for troops, and that a cantonment is to be formed outside and under the hill. If this be true, the loss to many who have built themselves houses will be heavy: we say this, advertising to one of the causes of debt on which the "Bengal Subaltern" scarcely said enough.—Delhi Gaz.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

EXCHANGES IN REGIMENTS.

Instances having occurred of young officers, who have involved themselves in difficulties in the regiments to which they have been attached, applying time after time to be removed from regiment to regiment, the Most Noble the Governor-General of India is pleased, in continuation of G. O. P. C. of the 29th Dec. 1837, to direct that no cornet or ensign shall hereafter be permitted to exchange more than once, and that such exchange shall only be sanctioned when the reasons for desiring it are valid and proper, and it is shown that the application is not made from the young officer having involved himself in any difficulties, whether of a pecuniary or of any other nature.—May 22.

MURDER OF LIEUT. JOHNSTONE.

The murder of Lieut. Johnstone, of the 3rd Light Cavalry, has been made the theme of frequent remark in the public prints during the month. A committee sat for several days at Jaulnah to investigate the circumstances of the unfortunate officer's death, with a view to the discovery of the assassin, a reward of Rs. 1,000 having also been offered by the officers of the regiment for information, but to no purpose. Not the slightest clue to the bloody mystery has been obtained; on the other hand, threatening placards have been found, one professing to come from the man who shot Johnstone, which was attached to the gate of the house occupied by the commanding officer of the corps, Captain Waters, to the following purport:—"I murdered Johnstone, and I will murder Waters. I came to your house last Wednesday, but could not get an opportunity. The next time I come, it shall not be in vain. You had better guard your life, as you would a candle in the wind." It is well known also that considerable disinclination was evidenced by the Sepoys of the corps to answer the questions put to them by the committee of inquiry, the sympathy of the men clearly being rather with the murderer than with their officers. All this forces a conviction on the mind that there must be something rotten in the administration of the corps; the fidelity of the Sepoy to the Government, his unwavering attachment to his officers, are proverbial; all he asks for is fair and liberal treatment. The disaffection of an entire corps, therefore, cannot fail to awaken unpleasant suspicions in the public mind, which, in the case of the 3rd Madras cavalry, recent information has proved to be too well grounded. A well-informed local journal, the Spectator, remarks, that "there is unhappily ground enough of complaint in the regiment, to account for threatening notices to its officers. Into this last point, it behoves Government to institute a most stringent inquiry. The system at present carried on will be found, we fear, such as must tend to disgust all ranks, and to make them harbour in their breasts revengeful feelings toward those by whom they esteem themselves oppressed and wronged. It does not much surprise those aware of the state of the case, that the late catastrophe should have happened, nor are they disposed to think the subsequent threats destitute of meaning. Government, to judge by their apparent supineness, which has occasioned much surprise, are not at all aware of the nature of the danger existing. We have no wish to play the alarmist, but the causes of the Jaulnah tragedy need looking into. Sir Henry Pottinger and Sir George Berkeley will incur heavy responsibility, if they do not both investigate and correct them. It is not merely the life of one officer, but possibly of more, that stands involved in the affair. The fidelity of the regiment is also imperilled so long as the causes of their discontent continue."—Athenæum, June 9.

LAW.

SUPREME COURT, May 24.

In Re Alexander Maclean, Insolvent.—Mr. J. B. Norton, on behalf of the creditors, presented a petition in this case, wherein they stated that the sum of 250*l.* per annum set apart (by order of the Court) by this insolvent to meet the demands of his debts, amounting to 35,000*l.*, was not sufficient, considering the large income (1,000*l.* per annum) he derived from his retirement; having been a civil servant of the E. I. Company; besides which, he possessed property in Scotland to a large amount.

The Advocate-General, who appeared on the behalf of Mr. Maclean, considered the sum set apart was as much as a man, brought up in Mr. Maclean's station of life, could spare from a sum of 1,000*l.* per annum only. The Scotch property belonged to the eldest son, Mr. Maclean having forfeited his right to it by having become insolvent.

The Chief Justice delivered judgment. After reciting the conditions of the petition, he said the Court was clearly of opinion that the annuity enjoyed by the insolvent was the insolvent's own property, and in consequence came under the 26th Section of the Insolvent Act. Considering the circumstances of the insolvent, the expenses he had been put to since his return to England, and taking it that he had not any further means than the annuity of 1,000*l.* per annum from the Madras Civil Fund; the Court was of opinion that the 250*l.* per annum, a quarter of his income, was a just and proper amount to be set aside for the liquidation of his debts. The case was of course open to further litigation, as it was alleged that through his sons the insolvent had a contingent interest in large private property. The Court would not make any further order to meet this contingent benefit, as it would be making an order in the dark, it not being known what the benefit to accrue was. The decision of the Court below was therefore confirmed.

MISCELLANEOUS.

MAIL COACHES.—The Bangalore Herald reports, that the Government of Madras has given the contract for conveying the mails between the Presidency and Bangalore to Messrs. Doute and Co. The mails, which have hitherto been conveyed by runners, are now to be carried in coaches drawn by horses.

MR. FORSYTH.—Three prisoners have been committed for trial for the late attempt to poison Mr. Forsyth, the sessions judge of Tellicherry. One of these is the Nazir of the Zilla Court, and there are suspicions attaching to a native official of still higher rank.

MEDALS AND THE MAHRATTA WAR.—A correspondent of the Athenæum, referring to the G. O. G. of the Governor-General, of April 14, announcing the grant of medals for services therein mentioned, observes:—"To confine the grant of medals to those only who had served in the engagements particularised in the G. O. is unjust, as many of them could scarcely have been more obstinately contested than some that have been passed over unnoticed, perhaps solely from the circumstance of their having been so represented, by the modesty of the commanders, as to prevent their being so prominently noticed as they undoubtedly deserved, else how are we to account for the apparent contempt with which the taking of many formidable places during the campaign is treated? Instance Singhur, a fortress which underwent a stubborn siege of eleven days; then the taking by storm of Sholapore, the siege and storming of the formidable upper and lower Hill Forts of Copauldroog, the subduing the garrisons and the taking of the Hill Forts of Sattarah, Jaypoor, Vizierghur, Punendar, Woosatah, Chunden, and Wunden, and several other places in the Southern Mahratta country, which disabled many and cost not a few gallant lives. These places were obstinately defended and compelled to yield only by the untiring zeal and daring courage of the officers and men composing the besieging force; and again, when not actually engaged against particular places, their services were put in constant requisition by harassing forced marches and under the most trying circumstances, in pursuit of the hordes of Pindarees, whose ravages devastated the land, carrying misery, poverty and famine in their course, until their utter extermination, and to all this may be added the entire defeat and dispersion of the combined forces of Goklah and the Peishwah."

DESPERATE DACOITY.—The Crescent publishes a narrative of a serious dacoity which occurred near Bimlipatam, and which differs from those so common in Bengal, only in the desperate resistance made by the parties attacked. A treasure escort had put up for the night in a village about twenty miles from Bimlipatam, together with a Mussulman merchant, named Syud Moseen, who had taken advantage of the same shelter for the night. Here they were attacked by a party of dacoits, who, being unable to find the treasure, which had fortunately been secreted, robbed the unfortunate merchant of Rs. 2,000 in cash. The peons who formed the escort fought desperately, and so did the merchant with a sword he had picked up. Two of the dacoits were killed, and one of the peons, and several on both sides were severely wounded. So daring were the dacoits, that, after leaving the compound, they returned again to avenge the death of their comrades, but were driven back by the peons and their ally.

THE EXPERIMENTAL COTTON FARM, under the superintendence of Dr. Wight, at Coimbatore, is about to be broken up, the gins and other machinery having been purchased by Mr. Campbell, of Bombay. It must be allowed that the time has fully arrived for Government to leave the field of cotton culture in India open for private enterprise. The experiment has been fully made; the Court of Directors have discharged their duty; what remains to be done devolves upon private capital and mercantile industry.—Athenæum, June 9.

NEW FIXED LIGHT.—The following notice is published for general information:—"Madras, Marine Board Office, Feb. 15, 1851.—Notice is hereby given, that a fixed light, visible about twelve miles off, will be exhibited on and after the first of May next, from a column erected about two miles north-west of the low sandy extremity of Point Divi. The following notice is taken from Lieutenant Fell's sailing directions for the Coromandel coast; the spit therein alluded to having 1½ fathoms on its south eastern edge:—"Point Divi, in lat. 15° 57' 40" N., lon. 81° 15' 00" E., bears from Masulipatam flagstaff S. 6° E., distant 11½ miles. This point is very low with a narrow sandy spit extending from it about 2½ miles in a south-east direction. In rounding this point with a fair wind during the day vessels ought not to come under 6 fathoms till to the northward of it. Between Point Divi and False Point Divi the coast ought to be approached during the night with great caution, as the bank of soundings extends but a few miles to seaward, having soundings of 100 fathoms 7 miles to seaward of a line of 6 and 7 fathoms. From Point Divi to Masulipatam the coast runs nearly north, and is safe to approach to 4½ and 5 fathoms." After the above date the light at Masulipatam will be discontinued."

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDER.

REMUNERATION TO OFFICERS EMPLOYED ON PUBLIC WORKS.

May 27.—No. 103 of 1851. The Right Hon. the Governor in Council is pleased, with the sanction of the Government of India, to direct the establishment, as a general regulation, in this presidency, of the following rules, which correspond with those in force on the same subject in the presidency of Bombay, granting remuneration to officers, not engineer or executive officers in the receipt of specific pay, temporarily employed in superintending public works.

1. An allowance of Rs. 2 per day is granted to the staff or other officer nominated, by order of a station commanding officer or other competent authority, to superintend the execution of annual or special repairs, not requiring science, whether performed by contract or otherwise, the cost of which does not exceed Rs. 2,000.

2. The above allowance is payable for such period (not exceeding three months) as the works may be actually in progress.

3. For the superintendence of more considerable works than those above adverted to, an allowance of Rs. 4 a day may be drawn for such period (not exceeding six months) as the works may be actually carrying on.

4. For the superintendence of works of the above description exceeding Rs. 2,000 performed under contract, an allowance of Rs. 2 a day is granted for the period within which they are stipulated to be performed, not exceeding six months.

5. These allowances are not payable until after the works shall have been completed, and then only on its being certified by the commanding officer that they are so, and that the period charged for is correct.

6. Abstracts embracing a period of more than three months, however, are to be subjected to the further check of the superintending or civil engineer of the division, whose duty it will be to state his opinion as to whether or not he considers the work to have been unnecessarily protracted, or the period stipulated in the contract unnecessarily long; and all such claims are to be submitted for audit previous to being discharged; but in no instance is the allowance of either two or four rupees to be admitted beyond the period of three or six months respectively, without the special sanction of Government; the above specified period being in ordinary cases considered as sufficient with reference to the nature and extent of the works contemplated.

7. The appointments of regimental officers to the performance of the extra and temporary duties adverted to in the preceding paragraphs do not require the confirmation of Government, and Paymasters are authorized to discharge all abstracts duly certified and countersigned in the manner and for the periods above provided for.

PARSI FEMALE SCHOOL.

On the afternoon of the 7th inst. the Hon. the Governor, accompanied by Sir Erskine Perry, Major French, and Professor Green, honoured the Parsi Female School in the fort by a visit. The little Parsi girls were dressed apparently in their holiday clothes, and all the showy ornaments with which the affection and the not always harmless vanity of native parents delight to load their children. Two of the classes read to his lordship, and one or two of the little girls repeated stories to him from their lesson-books, the whole in Guzerati. His lordship appeared to take great interest in the scene before him, and asked a number of questions on various subjects connected with the attendance on the school, and the system of education adopted. One little lassie, struck with fright, sat crying in a corner, but the kind manners of the visitors appeared soon to re-assure the others, who read and recited with very little of alarm or of mauvaise honte, and answered all questions put to them with a cheerfulness and sprightliness of manner which spoke well for the confidence which must exist between them and their teachers, and for the kind and cheerful tone of instruction which must prevail in these institutions. On leaving the school, his Lordship and Sir E. Perry proceeded to examine a site on the ramparts for a school-house, and certainly we know of no better use to which the space wasted at present on these useless walls could be devoted. The sight of a governor walking along the streets of the fort, and climbing the fortifications, appeared to attract a great deal of attention on the part of the natives and Parsi ladies (who, by the way, certainly bear looking at remarkably well) crowded to their windows to see the unusual sight: and a finer specimen of an English gentleman in all that relates to physique and bearing they have not very often an opportunity of observing. This simple visit, which cost his Lordship perhaps an hour on his way home from council, is, by the éclat which it gives these schools, probably one of the greatest stimulants to the cause of female education in Bombay which it lay in the power of any one person to afford, and although we do not of course see any very transcendent merit in his Lordship's making it, yet we thank him in the name of the friends of native education for the countenance which he has thus afforded to the cause.—Bom. Telegraph, May 14.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ORIENTAL BANK ROBBERY.—In addition to the Rs. 28,000 already recovered of the notes stolen from the Oriental Bank, notes to the amount of Rs. 16,000 have been found by two Portuguese young men and delivered to the authorities. They were picked up on the high road near a house that had been searched. The Bombay papers begin to hint mysteriously, that the natives concerned in the robbery are connected with very influential persons.

THE WHEEL-TAX COMMISSION OF INQUIRY has brought its proceedings to a close. Fraud and neglect are charges brought home, the first to the native subordinates, and the second to the police officers.

THE PRODUCTION OF COTTON this year will exceed the outturn of the last by one-fourth. The quality of the cotton is also much improved.

THE REV. D. O. ALLEN, one of the oldest missionaries in Bombay, has commenced an entire revision of the Mahrathi scriptures, with a view to the preparation of an authorized version.

THE BOMBAY STEAMER.—The Bombay Steam Navigation Company's steamer Bombay, which left Bombay, on the morning of the 28th for Kurrachee, with a large number of passengers and a full cargo, experienced such heavy weather on the night of the 28th, the sea making a clean breach over her, that Capt. Haselwood felt it necessary to put back into this port, the pumps, from their having been choked with coals, being found insufficient to keep her clear of water, which made its way into the vessel in all directions. With the exception of the serious loss which the steamer's failure to perform the voyage will entail on the Steam Navigation Company and the passengers, little harm has been done. It was found necessary to ease the vessel by throwing overboard some of the heavy baggage and cargo, but the loss will not be great, as the goods consisted principally of some heavy lumberlike casks of Government porter.—Telegraph, May 31.

SUKKUR.—A letter from Sukkur of the 18th May says: "This is the season for siestas, morning, noon, and evening. The heat and river are both progressing—the former ranges from 80 deg. in the morning at 6 A.M. to 98 deg. at 3 P.M., and the latter has risen 9 inches during the past week. Good health, I am happy to say, predominates; not a case of individuals suffering from the climate, I can confidently state, is there in Sukkur; there may be a few cases, and those are indebted to temperate habits. The powerful heat at mid-day, 150 deg. out of the shade, is sufficient to lay prostrate the constitution of a Hercules, much less the diminutive animals of the present day. Cold water and a small portion of stimulants in the cool of the evening is the best antidote during this fearful season. A bazaar rumour prevails that an expedition will be fitted out in the coming cold season from the Bengal side to march into Afghanistan; surely they will allow the 'Ducks' to have a moiety of the business."—Ibid.

BROACH.—A girl was found drowned at Sookulterah, in the Broach Purgunna. It appears she had gone to bathe in the river, when the tide was coming in, and when she had got into the water about knee-deep, her feet stuck in the mud, which was deep, and there being no one near to extricate her, she remained entangled until the water rose above her height.—Ibid.

CAPTAIN WATSON'S PROCLAMATIONS.

In anticipation of the publication of the evidence it may be as well to state the circumstances under which Mr. Elliott obtained possession of these proclamations. The evidence upon the two investigations (before the commissioners and court-martial) show, that Mr. John Selby, brother of the Queen's advocate, when riding with Mr. Elliott and Mr. George Pereira, from Matelle to Dambool, received a message from his client, Golahella, who had been martially plundered during the "bloody assize," to the effect that he had waited for him at a place called Kowdahpalle, about six miles from Matelle, but being unwell had returned home, leaving, however, a paper in Singalese for Mr. Selby. This message and paper were left with a person named Oodoogame Punchirale, a native, who was educated in English by Mr. Murdoch of Kandy, and who delivered them to Mr. Selby. This paper was the first proclamation brought to light; it was on the spot translated by Mr. Pereira, and finally handed to Mr. Elliott. Golahella, who has been examined on both occasions, recognizes the paper, and avows having thus sent it; whilst Mr. Elliott, Mr. Selby, Mr. Pereira, and Oodoogame Punchirale, all testify as to the circumstances, thus making four witnesses, besides himself, as to the manner in which Mr. Elliott obtained the first of these documents. We may add that the headman, who removed part of Golahella's property during martial law, produced this very document as his authority for having done so, to Golahella, on his first visit after martial law was in force, to his house in that part of the country; and this same headman declares that he received it at Capt. Watson's office. Here, then, the first proclamation, whether genuine or a forgery, is satisfactorily accounted for by all the parties through whose hands it passed previously to its arrival in Mr. Elliott's.

Shortly afterwards, Mr. Selby and Mr. Pereira asked Koorooe Lecam (son of the Maha Nilleme, the wealthiest man in the Kandian country, and who had also been martially plundered) to procure them some more of the proclamations, when he went to the headmen of the district from whom he obtained a number of copies. There were in due course forwarded to Mr. Elliott after his return to Colombo, and by him sent to England in batches as he received them. Mr. Selby, Mr. Pereira, and Koorooe Lecam, as well as the headmen from whom the last-named person received them, all avowed the parts they had taken in the matter, so that, beyond the mere transmission of the documents, Mr. Elliott was in no way concerned in it. The first batch of four thus sent to England were those which Capt. Watson repudiated, and which formed the groundwork of the two inquiries; but another batch of five was subsequently sent and laid before the parliamentary committee; and there were several others produced to the Commissioners (one by Mr. Staples, Capt. Watson's father-in-law), although as evidence for the court-martial they were not produced. But not only so, the parties who translated, wrote, copied, circulated, posted, transmitted, and acted upon these proclamations, all avowed the parts they took respectively in the transaction—nay, after the documents were said by Capt. Watson to be forgeries, they produced others, and even the record book (not produced at the court-martial) in which they had entered these documents, and all this, be it remarked, by persons unknown to Mr. Elliott previous to the inquiry—excepting Mr. Staples, who produced one to the commissioners, though not asked about it at the court-martial. Strange conduct this—unprecedented in the annals of forgery; that a forgery without an object (for we have never yet heard any object for it assigned) should be perpetrated, and that a whole host of people, most of them wholly disconnected with each other, should, without any purpose, all unhesitatingly avow the parts they had respectively taken in it. —Ceylon Observer.

COURT MARTIAL.

CAPTAIN ALBERT WATSON.

Head-Quarters, Colombo, May 13.—At a General Court-Martial, held at Colombo, pursuant to instructions from his Grace the Duke of Wellington, dated Horse Guards, 19th December, 1850, on the 8th ult., and continued by adjournments to the 10th inst., of which Lieut. col. Brown, of the royal engineers, is president, and Lieut. col. Wilson, of the royal artillery, officiating judge advocate, Capt. Albert Watson, of the Ceylon rifle regiment, was arraigned on the undermentioned charges, viz:—

For behaving in a scandalous, infamous manner, unbecoming an officer and a gentleman, in the following instances, viz:—

First instance: For having, on the 14th February, 1850, at Westminster, when examined before a Select Committee of the House of Commons, touching a certain document then and there produced in evidence, and shown to him, written in English and in Singalese, the signature to which document is written in English, that is to say, "A. Watson, Captain commanding," and which document is in substance as follows, viz:—"Gollehella—Notice.—That unless all those who have held concealed, or knowing to have held, the effects of Gollehella Ratta Mahatmeya, deliver over to me such property, or give information about the same without delay, such persons shall be killed, and their property confiscated. To this effect, Captain A. Watson, commanding the troops in the Matelle Fort. A. Watson, Captain commanding. August 9th, 1848." And when questioned by the said Committee whether the said signature to the said document so produced in evidence and shown to him was written by him, the said Captain Albert Watson falsely answered that the said signature was not written by him, and the same was a forgery, or words to that effect, whereas, in truth, the said signature to the said document was written by him, the said Captain Albert Watson, as he then and there well knew.

Second Instance.—For having, on the 14th Feb., 1850, at Westminster, when examined before the said Select Committee of the House of Commons, touching a certain other document then and there produced in evidence, and shown to him, written in English and in Singalese, the signature to which last mentioned document is written in English, that is to say, "A. Watson, Captain, commanding Matelle," and which last mentioned document in the English language is in substance as follows:—"Negapettia Korall. Notice.—If all those who have possessed, concealed, or knowing to have been possessed (by others), the property of Negapettia Korall, will not bring and deliver over to me the same, or give information respecting them without delay, such persons will be killed, and their property confiscated.—To this effect, the officer commanding the troops at Matelle Fort—9th August, 1848. A. Watson, Captain, commanding Matelle." And when questioned by the said Committee, whether the said signature to the said last-mentioned document so produced in evidence, and shown to him, was written by him, the said Capt. A. Watson, falsely answered that the said signature was not written by him, and that the same was a forgery, or words to that effect; whereas in truth and in fact, the said signature to the said last mentioned document, was written by him the said Captain A. Watson, as he then and there well knew.

Third Instance.—For having, on the 14th Feb. 1850, at Westminster, when examined before the said Select Committee of the House of Commons touching a certain other document then and there produced in evidence, and shown to him, written in English and Singalese, the signature to which last-mentioned document is written in English, that is to say, "A. Watson, commanding at Matelle," and which last-mentioned document is in the English language in substance as follows, viz:—"Ukkoo-welle Kaloo Banda.—Notice. That unless all those who have held concealed, or knowing to have held, the effects of Ukkoo-welle Kaloo Banda, late Ratamahatmeya, bring and deliver over to me the said property, or give information respecting them without delay, such persons shall be killed, and their property confiscated. To this effect—A. Watson, appointed to command the troops at Matelle Fort, 9th August, 1848. A. Watson, Captain, commanding Matelle."

And when questioned by the said Committee whether the said signature to the last-mentioned document so produced in evidence and shown to him was written by him, the said Capt. A. Watson falsely answered that the said signature was not written by him, and the same was a forgery, or words to that effect; whereas in truth and in fact, the said signature to the said last-mentioned document was written by him, the said Capt. A. Watson, as he then and there well knew.

Fourth Instance.—For having, on the 14th February, 1850, at Westminster, when examined before the Select Committee of the House of Commons touching a certain other document then and there produced in evidence and shown to him written in English and in Singalese, the signature to which last-mentioned document is written in English, that is to say, "A. Watson, Captain, commanding Matelle," and which last-mentioned document in the English language in substance as follows:—"Dollawe Maha Nilleme. Notice.—That unless all those who have held concealed, or knowing to have held, the effects of Dollawe Maha Nilleme, bring and deliver over to me such property, or give information respecting the same without delay, such persons shall be killed, and their property confiscated. To this effect, A. Watson appointed to command the troops at Matelle. Matelle Fort, 9th August, 1848. A. Watson, Captain, commanding Matelle." And when questioned by the said Committee whether the said signature to the said last-mentioned document so produced in evidence and shown to him, was written by him, the said Capt. A. Watson falsely answered that the said signature was not written by him, and that the same was a forgery, or words to that effect; whereas in truth and in fact the said signature to the said last-mentioned document, was written by him, the said Capt. A. Watson, as he then and there well knew.

Finding.—The Court, having maturely weighed and considered the evidence in support of the charge against the prisoner, and what he has said in his defence and the evidence adduced in support of it, is of opinion that the prisoner is Not Guilty of the 1st instance of the charge preferred against him—that he is Not Guilty of the 2nd instance of the charge preferred against him—that he is Not Guilty of the 3rd instance of the charge preferred against him—that he is Not Guilty of the 4th instance of the charge preferred against him—and do most fully and most honourably acquit him of the said charge and the four instances contained in it; the Court are further of opinion that the signatures attached to the four proclamations before the Courts are not genuine, but are mere forgeries, as asserted by him, the said Captain A. Watson, before the said Committee of the House of Commons, at Westminster, on the 14th of February, 1850, and that the statements then and there made by him, before the said Committee, with regard to the said signatures, were true and not false.

CHINA.

THE LONDON MAIL, of March the 24th, arrived at Hong-Kong on May 11.

THE INSURRECTION IN THE INTERIOR.—The difficulty of obtaining authentic intelligence from the disturbed districts is becoming apparently greater and greater. The prime minister Sai-shang-ha, Tai-tung-ha (of Formosa celebrity), and Teh hing, have been appointed commissioners by Yih-chu (who may now no longer be called the emperor, as there are two who act under the title), and have been directed to proceed to Kwei-lin-fu, the capital of the Quang-si province, which city it appears has not yet fallen into the hands of the insurgents, as reported two months ago. At latest advices the commissioners had not arrived, but direct communication with Kwei-lin is now entirely cut off, and the numerous bodies of troops that have lately been despatched from Canton will have to enter the province by the somewhat circuitous route of Hunan. The water suburbs of Canton are quite rife with martial preparation. During the past fortnight as many as 5,000 men, it is said, have been seen to pass up the river in boats, all accounted for immediate action. They appear to be levies from the north-east coast, speaking an entirely different dialect from that spoken by the Canton people. We have well authenticated rumours, also, of a serious rising in the western districts of the Kwang-tung province. It is now some time since a report reached us that the insurgents, in order to keep up a communication with the sea-board, had attacked Kou-chau-fu, a departmental city, on the bank of a river about thirty miles from the boundaries of Kwang-si, and midway between them and the sea; and some of our Hong Kong speculators, we are told, have already sent emissaries down there for the purpose of buying live stock, vegetables, and other plunder, cheap. The linguists and others in Canton still speak of the rebels as mere robbers, whose sole object is plunder; that they are seriously frightened, however, there is no denying, and we hear that measures have been taken for barricading the river in the San-shwui district, so that the City of Rams may not be reached by that route. In some of the daily papers statements are given of the amounts of money ordered to be sent on to the commissioners, which are recorded as exceeding 100,000 taels, and the great merchants have been required to make up a further sum of five lacs of dollars without a moment's delay. A report has got into circulation, that the new emperor, a scion of the Ming dynasty, is a Roman Catholic, and that he is destroying idols and temples with all the fury of a zealot; others speak of him as a Shang-te man (the name generally given to the converts of Protestant missionaries); but that is more unlikely to be true than the other report, which, in connection with past events, has some possibility of truth in it. By those, however, who are carefully watching the turn affairs are about to take, the report of the new emperor's profession of Christianity (we may not call him an usurper, for if he succeeds he has but recovered his own again) is only got up by the Ta Tsing adherents, for the purpose of creating disaffection towards him—it is also rendered improbable by the assumption of the purely heathen designation, Tien-teh (heaven's virtue). — Friend of China, May 23.

HEALTH OF THE TROOPS.—We have again to report upon the improved health of the troops in garrison. To the present date there have been only three deaths in both European and native regiments, with a sick list now numbering forty-two. This contrasts favourably with the sanatory report for the month of May last year—when fifteen deaths were recorded.—Ibid.

CLIPPERS.—The British clipper vessel Reinder arrived at Hong-kong from Liverpool on the 9th—130 days' passage from port to port. The American clipper Oriental, from London arrived on the 11th—117 days' passage.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

The advices from the Cape, which are to the 31st May, report but little variation in the aspect of affairs on the frontier. No decisive engagement had occurred, the Caffres avoiding our troops in the field, and the military movements being confined to patrols, in which the Amatola mountains have been repeatedly penetrated, and their fastnesses explored by the British troops, who have endured great fatigue, and displayed all their usual energy and gallantry; but the enemy vanish on their approach, driving off their cattle. In fact, we have to deal with a foe who acknowledges neither front, flank, nor rear, and whose movements are too rapid and eccentric to be calculated upon. Sir H. Smith continued at King William's Town.

On the 28th April, Col. Mackinnon, with 2,000 men, moved from King William's Town into the Amatola mountains; and Major Wilmot, with about 700 men, proceeded again towards the Keiskamma, near the junction of that river with the Chumie, in order to effect a diversion. Both movements were completely successful. Col. Mackinnon, taking the Caffres by surprise, captured about 400 head of cattle. The enemy, exasperated by the loss, attacked the column with great fury, engaging for a time at close quarters. After a short but desperate conflict, they were repulsed with the loss of about 250. Three men of the 73rd regiment and one Fingoe were killed, and twelve men of the 73rd, one of the 6th, three of the Cape Mounted Rifles, and two of the levies, wounded. On the 1st May, Col. Mackinnon again entered the mountains, and burnt the kraal of Sandilli's brother. The Caffres collected in considerable force, but could not be brought to an engagement. On the following day, Col. Mackinnon returned to head-quarters.

While these operations were going on, Major Wilmot scoured the banks of the Keiskamma, near the Chumie and Fort Willshire, and for five days kept the Caffres in that quarter incessantly on the alert. Two smart skirmishes took place, in which more than thirty of the enemy were killed.

On the 8th and 9th, Col. Mackinnon and Major Wilmot again left King William's Town, with strong detachments, in different directions. The former proceeded to the Kei River, which he reached on the 13th. The enemy assembled along the line of march in considerable force, but usually dispersed on the approach of the troops. In two skirmishes, however, several Caffres were cut off by charges of cavalry, and slain; and about 300 head of cattle were captured. The column returned on the 16th.

Major Wilmot, at the same time, advanced into the Amatolas by way of the Kabousie River, traversed the mountains in various directions, and reached the Keiskamma Neck. The mountains were covered with snow, the cold was extreme, and the Caffres appeared to be cowed. Major Wilmot returned on the 13th.

On the 4th, the drought, which had prevailed in and beyond the frontier districts, was succeeded by heavy falls of rain and of snow. The cattle and sheep in Albany and the neighbouring districts perished by thousands. The Amatola mountains were covered with snow, and the Caffres have been compelled to leave them, and drive their cattle to the low grounds. Some have proceeded eastward, across the Kei; others have driven their herds northward, into Tambookie land; and a considerable number have entered the colony across the Keiskamma. Marauding bands of Caffres spread over the frontier districts, from the Orange River to the sea. Several farmers have been killed in the district of Albert; others have been obliged to quit their farms or camps, and retire into the interior of the colony. The Kat River district, and the adjoining country, have been again occupied by the Caffres and rebel Hottentots, who have repossessed themselves of Fort Armstrong. A body of them was attacked and routed, with considerable loss, by a small force under Capt. Fisher, the officer commanding at Eland's Post. Major-gen. Somerset himself subsequently moved into that district, with about 500 men, but found himself unable to check the ravages of the numerous hordes of marauders by whom the country was infested. In Lower Caffraria, immediately around King William's Town, bands of hostile Caffres had become numerous and daring. They twice cut off the mails between Graham's Town and King William's Town, and vigorously attacked convoys of waggons proceeding to the latter town from the port of East London.

Field-Commandant Joubert was assembling another force of burghers in the Colesberg district, to proceed against the Tambookie marauders.

In the sovereignty beyond the Orange River, the state of affairs had become extremely critical. Hostilities have broken out among the native tribes, some of whom claim the protection of the local government, on the ground of services rendered to it in suppressing other disturbances last year. The principal tribes engaged are the Korannas under the chief Gert Taaybosch, the Barolongs under Moroko, the Lighoyas under Molituan, and, it was feared, the numerous tribe of Basutas under Moshesh. Apprehensions were entertained that much disorder and bloodshed would ensue in that province.

From Natal, intelligence had been received of the advance of Mr. Shepstone (the superintendent of the natives in that colony), at the head of a considerable body of Zulus, towards the north-eastern frontier of British Caffraria, to co-operate with the forces under the Commander-in-Chief.

A report prevailed that Sir H. Smith was about to repair to Graham's Town, for the purpose of meeting Gen. Somerset, and arranging some plan of combined operations against the enemy. Major Wilmot, with 900 men, had been sent to open the communication with Graham's Town, by the Wesleyville Ford, where the mails had been cut off.

H.M.'s steamer Vulcan arrived in Simon's Bay on the 12th May, bringing the 74th regiment. She proceeded immediately to Algoa Bay, where the regiment disembarked on the 17th. This fine body of Highlanders, whose manly appearance and excellent state of discipline excited much admiration, had orders to join Gen. Somerset's division. The soldiers who arrived in the Singapore, about 300 in number, were sent up to East London, and arrived on the 13th at head-quarters.

AUSTRALIA.

Accounts from Sydney to 15th March state that an important territorial discovery had been made. Darling Downs has hitherto been the ultima Thule to the west of Moreton Bay, but there is now rising behind another district—the Maranos—almost unoccupied, but which promises to become one of the most productive of the northern districts. The newly-discovered country lies to the westward of Darling Downs, its boundary from which is about 150 miles from Brisbane. The climate is stated to be delightful. The discoverers of this new territory were Mr. Gideon Lang and a resolute old dragoon guard, named Walker, of many years' experience in the Australian wilds. Connected with this discovery is a report current among the blacks that the indefatigable and enterprising Dr. Leichardt and his whole party were murdered, more than eighteen months ago, in a locality still more distant. In confirmation of this melancholy intelligence, it is added that the pack-mules of the unfortunate band of adventurous explorers were still running wild there.

CIRCASSIA.

Accounts have been received, via Constantinople, of the total defeat of the Russians in Daghistan. Mohamed Emin, at the head of 25,000 men, attacked the Russian entrenchments of the Chenis, and drove the troops beyond Themer. The Russians suffered so severely that all the spare waggons of the army were barely sufficient to carry their wounded away. Their loss is calculated at 5,000 in killed and prisoners.

The railway across the isthmus between Navy Bay to Panama is rapidly progressing. In eight months it will be open from Navy Bay to Gorgona, and there is every probability of its completion to Panama in a year and a half or two years.

Amongst the Hazarehs and Eimaks of Central Asia, the ordinary currency is sheep, and men and women: money is but little used. Amongst the Eimaks, especially, slaves are the standard of value by which the price of commodities is measured.

In 1795, the Bombay post was thirty-six days in its progress to Calcutta; in 1831, the express from London via Bombay reached Calcutta in thirty-five days!

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

Every one has heard of Genghis Khan, but many probably do not know that the great-great-grandson of this conqueror had "friendly relations" with the kings of France and England, and that "official communications" were exchanged in order to concert an attack on the Mohammedan sultan of Egypt by a combined army of Christian crusaders, subjects of England and France, and of heathen Tartars, vassals of the emperor of China! Such is a historical fact, recorded by old chroniclers, ridiculed in later times by Voltaire, but proved to be true by M. Rémusat, who found in the royal archives at Paris, about 500 years after they were written, two letters in pure Mongolian from Tartar viceroys of Persia, sealed with Chinese seals, one of which was undoubtedly bestowed on the holder at his investiture by his sovereign lord, the emperor of China. These letters, which substantiated much that had previously been held for fabrication, were received and answered by Philip the Fair. Others, sent at the same period to England, were received and answered by the first and second Edwards, and might possibly still be found in some of the English archives.

Argun, a great-great-grandson of Genghis, ruled in Persia and the adjacent countries, where, though himself but a viceroy, a vassal of the Grand Khan, or Mongolian emperor of Peking, he numbered among his subject states the Christian kingdom of Armenia. The Mongols, heathens at bottom, were nearly indifferent to all forms of religion, and, like the Chinese of the present day, ready to invoke the name of God whenever it suited their purpose. Their sway was therefore preferred by the kings of Armenia and Georgia to that of the intolerant Mohammedans of Egypt and Arabia, the inveterate enemies of Christianity, to whom they must have fallen a prey at the time European ardour for crusades began sensibly to cool, had not the Mongolian power just then opposed a check to these rival conquerors. They consequently gave themselves much trouble to get the Mongols and crusaders to act in concert, and the letter of Argun is one of the results of their efforts.

His letter says but little, and led to nothing at the time, but it has nevertheless considerable historical and literary value. It is curious, among other things, to observe from it how powerful the influence of the unvarying Chinese literature has been throughout Asia. This letter, written by a Tartar ruler of Persia 500 years ago, is modelled so strictly on Chinese forms, that it might, in so far, have been issued from a Chinese yamun of the present day. The writer, in a letter sealed with a seal conferred by his sovereign lord, speaks as an undoubted superior to the king of France, whose title he places low in the page, and to whom he conveys, with sufficient plainness, the intimation that it was his duty to have sent in the tribute of a vassal.

LETTER OF ARGUN.

"By the power of the eternal God, and the auspices of the Emperor Argun: Our word:—

"King of France! Thou hast delivered to us through thy envoy, Mar Bar-sseveva Sachora, the following message: 'When the troops of the Il'khan take the field against Egypt, we shall set out from hence to join them.'

"Approving of this, thy delivered message, We now declare that We, trusting in God, will set out in the end of the winter month of the tiger year (1290), and on the fifteenth of the first spring month will encamp at Damascus. If thou, thy word truly holding, sendest thy troops at the time and to the place fixed, We will, if We, by the help of God, conquer these people, deliver Jerusalem over to thee. Should the fixed period and place of meeting not be attended to, and the troops marched uselessly about, would that be proper? And if one is afterwards at a loss how to act, what advantage will one obtain? Further; it were well if thou, offering tribute by envoys of different tongues and languages, didst send in presents of the agreeable and rare things of France, together with pictures of various colours. How it is to be ordered must be decided by the power of God and the auspices of the emperor. Thus informing you, We send Müsküril* Churtshi.

"Our letter is written in the ox year (1289), on the sixth day of the last half of the first summer month, during Our residence at Kündülän."

During the reigns of Argun's successors, Gaikhatu, Gazan, and Oldshaitu, the Mongol armies began for the first time to suffer reverses. Syria was alternately occupied by them and the forces of the Egyptian sultans; but on the whole, the fortune of war was against the Mongols, whose position in Persia became less secure. This may account for the civil tone of Oldshaitu's letter. Argun merely answered briefly and haughtily in the affirmative to an overture made him: Oldshaitu commences a correspondence, and writes in a style of solicitation, though even he is careful to place the title of the sovereign he is addressing lower than his own. This letter says as little as the other; but they were doubtless merely intended as the credentials of the envoys sent with each, and who were empowered to treat of affairs in detail.

LETTER OF OLDSHAITU.

"Oldshaitu, Sultan, Our word.

"King of France, Sultan! It cannot have escaped you, that you, the sultans of the Frankish nations, all from early times have lived in friendship with our noble great-grandfather, grandfather, father, and eldest brother, and that they, although distant, regarding each other as near, have mutually sent envoys with presents of greeting, in order to make various communications. Now as We have, by the power of God, ascended the great throne, let Us in nothing alter or depart from the policy of the former noble personages, Our grandfather, noble father, and brother, in what respects the established administration of the territories, agreed on by the former noble personages, but regarding the same as on oath, knit the friendship still closer than before, and always send envoys reciprocally to each other. These are Our thoughts.

"Through the inciting words of bad people, we, elder and younger brothers, have lived in mutual ill-will. Now, having obtained from God one heart, we, descendants of Genghis Khan, who have warred against each other for forty-five years, and in particular Temu Khan, Toktogha, Chäbär, and Togha, have reconciled ourselves, and have united the people and re-established friendly intercourse from the land of the Chinese where the sun rises, to the Talu lake. We have agreed that all shall fall united on any one among us who might think differently. And now how should We abandon your ways of friendship with the noble personages, Our grandfather, father, and brother? Thus informing you, We send the two envoys, Mamuluk and Tumon. It has been reported to Us that you, the various sultans of the Franks, live in concord; and truly, what could there be better than concord? That we now by the power of God will fall with united force upon all opposed to concord, that may God know!

"Our letter is written in the seven hundred and fourteenth year (of the Hejra), on the eighth day of the last half of the first summer month of the serpent* year (1305)."

The inscription on this seal reads: "Seal of the Emperor truly decreed (by heaven) for bringing to harmony the ten thousand barbarians;" that is to say, "the seal which the emperor uses when he writes for the purpose of bringing barbarian nations into concord." It is usual that the inscription on a Chinese official seal should be explanatory of the duties of the holder, or of the business the documents to which it is affixed are written on. Thus, when an insurrection in the empire becomes serious, a special officer is usually commissioned to suppress it, who gets the "Seal of the general charged to reduce the rebellious to order," or some similar one. This was given to General Yihshán, sent to Canton during the English war, while Yih-king, in Chehkiáng, held that with the inscription, "Seal of the awe-spreading general." How, then, came this seal into the hands of the Persian ruler? The most credible solution of the problem this question raises seems to be the following:—Those persons (probably Persian chroniclers) whom Rémusat states, as above, to have asserted that Gazan, the predecessor of Oldshaitu, refused to acknowledge the supremacy of the Chinese emperors, were correct; Oldshaitu followed his example; and the seal was not given him by any emperor of China, but made by himself. M. Rémusat says, the seal "verifies a fact which is perhaps not otherwise known, that Khodabendah† recognized, like the first princes of his dynasty, the supremacy of the khan or emperor of all the Tartars, who reigned at Peking. It has been asserted that Gazan, on coming to the empire, had caused the name of the grand khans of Tartary on the coin current in his states to be effaced, and that he had declined to recognize these princes. If that be true, his successor must have himself renewed the bonds which attached him to the head of his house, since he makes use, under solemn circumstances, of the seal

Nowrojee Furdoonjee, the author of the Tareekh-i-Zurtoshtee, has published in the Bombay journals a long letter on the existence and era of Zoroaster, in which he cites an alleged original work, entitled Vujurkird-i-Dinee, composed in Pehlivi, by Mediomah, the cousin and disciple of Zoroaster himself, which has survived the wreck caused by the conquest of Persia, first by the Greeks and latterly by the bigotted Mahomedans, and has been recently published by the "Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy's Translation Fund Committee," in the original Pehlivi. This work contains the following brief account of the birth and history of Zoroaster, by Mediomah, who describes himself as the son of Arasp, and the disciple of Zurtosht:—"Zurtosht Aspuntinan was born of Doghdo, at the city of Rai, governed by Doransuroon. At the age of thirty, he and all the members of his family left his native town, and proceeded to the capital of Iran, on which occasion I accompanied him. He reached his destination on the last day of the twelfth month. At the age of forty, on the 6th day of the first month, and in the thirtieth year of the reign of Gooshtasp, Zurtosht appeared at the royal court, and brought with him the sacred volumes of the Avesta, the sacred fire called Boorzeen Meher, and a cypress tree. King Gooshtasp asked him, 'Who are you, and from whence do you come?' Zurtosht replied, 'God Almighty has deputed me to you, and has appointed me a prophet, to guide you to the path of truth, virtue, and piety.'"

Several cases, containing additional antiquities from Nineveh, have arrived at the British Museum, containing a great variety of new and interesting objects, chiefly connected with the domestic economy and customs of the ancient Assyrians. They principally consist of instruments and vessels of bronze and earthenware, several in a very perfect state of preservation, others thickly encrusted with rust and broken to fragments. The use of some of them is quite inexplicable for the present. There are, however, bowls and vases, many richly chased; some dozens of earthenware studs of different shapes, supposed to be for harness; a very perfect bronze wine-strainer, similar to those in use at the present day; hinges of gates; legs and feet of chairs; a curious mask of iron or bronze; richly ornamented handles of various kinds; a large wheel, or the bronze casing of it, broken into many pieces; one or two small glass vases, of very beautiful colours; a quantity of cylinders about an inch and a half in length, carved or inscribed, some of a substance resembling plumbago, but the greater part of earthenware; a statue of a priest in stone, about four feet high, and much ornamented, and with the peculiarity that the figure has no cap or covering on its head, and is apparently bald; and several slabs of inscriptions.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

THURSDAY, July 17, 1851.

THERE is an old adage, that it is dangerous to meddle with edged tools, which is somewhat applicable to the efforts made by the Marquess of Londonderry and Lord Mahon to procure the release of the Moorish chief, Abd-el-Kader. No one can find fault with the motives of these noblemen; their impulse is a humane one,—a sympathy for the fate of another Kosciusko, aggravated by a direct breach of faith; but the argumentum ad hominem comes upon us with more force than the advocates of the unfortunate Emir, in their dishonest enthusiasm, seem to have anticipated.

The President of the French Republic, once the prisoner of Ham, met the appeal of the Marquess in a manner consistent with his character and highly to his honour. His letter to Lord Londonderry indicates a struggle between opposite emotions,—a desire to liberate the Emir, and an effort to palliate his detention. He seems to say, "I know it is a cruel thing to keep this man in prison, but I dare not do what I feel to be just." The French journals, however, set up a sort of a case against the Moorish chief, which, though it does not demonstrate the justice, shows the policy and expediency, of prolonging his captivity. According to ancient predictions, it appears the Arabs of Africa are to expect, in the year 1552, the avenger of Islamism, the "Messiah of the Hour," who is to exterminate all infidels; and the reappearance of Abd-el-Kader, it is apprehended, would be connected by his countrymen with this prophecy, and cause an insurrection in Algeria. But these journalists do not altogether forget the adage to which we have referred, and one of them slyly suggests that "the English well know the sacrifices which policy may impose on the clemency of a nation. They had in their hands," he observes, "a captive much more illustrious than the warrior of Africa; the Chateau of Amboise is a less severe prison than the island of St. Helena, and the captivity of Abd-el-Kader is far from equalling in duration that of Napoleon." True; but is there any analogy between the two cases? In the character of the two individuals, in the motive and object of their imprisonment, in all the incidents of their fate, their cases are as opposite as the poles. Abd-el-Kader was a prisoner of war, who surrendered to the nation he warred with upon the express stipulation of being exempted from duress. Napoleon, pursued by the world, as an enemy of mankind, placed himself in our hands without conditions (as distinctly understood) in order to escape a worse fate, and his captivity was demanded by the general voice of the nations of Europe, including his own!

It is surprising that the French journalists did not call to mind the various cases of Indian rulers whose liberty had been retrenched, some of whom still linger in confinement, as "sacrifices which policy imposes on our clemency." Amongst these cases more than one would bear a closer resemblance to Abd-el-Kader's than the solitary instance they have cited from the history of Europe.

In all these cases, however, there is one ingredient wanting, which distinguishes the Emir's from every case of the kind which has not been condemned by the universal voice of mankind. He surrendered upon the express condition that he was not to be detained in confinement; and the government of France violated that engagement, solemnly entered into with the illustrious captive by their own officer. This is the stain upon the transaction. It is this fact which justifies not merely our sympathy for Abd-el-Kader, but the efforts of the humane to expedite his liberation. Policy does not sanction treachery, which will cling to the French name in this matter, even should the Emir, when emancipated, become the direst foe of France. This is a distinction between his case and that of Napoleon, which the French journalists should not overlook.

THE signal defeat sustained by Messrs. Cobden and Hume, on Thursday last, upon renewing their unfounded and ungenerous attack upon Sir James Brooke, whilst it affords to this gentleman some compensation for the annoyance he has experienced during the pendency of these groundless charges, administers a pretty sharp rebuke to his two accusers, and will render them, we hope, a little more cautious in allowing themselves in future to be made tools of others. Although Mr. Hume's motion was a very diluted one, for an "inquiry" into the proceedings of Sir James, and especially into the attack made upon the Sakarran and Sarebas Dyaks, "under his advice and direction;" and although Mr. Gladstone, oddly enough, whilst he dissented from the motion, lent it all the assistance he decently could by a side-winded speech, the House rejected it by 230 against 19,—a majority of more than twelve to one. The whole question in dispute was reduced to this point—whether there was legal evidence that these men were pirates—a question already judicially decided, as Sir F. Thesiger observed, by the Recorder of Penang. But waiving this fact, and endeavouring to forget the notorious character of the tribes on the coast of Borneo, and the general habits of the maritime Malays and Dyaks who haunt the Archipelago, lawyers on both sides of the House declared the proof of the piratical and murderous propensities of the Sakarran and Sarebas people complete and unanswerable. In short, as Lord Palmerston justly remarked, there never was a debate in which argument and proof were so much on one side. Mr. Hume's speech was a faint and timid plea that inquiry was essential to the vindication of Sir James Brooke's character; whilst Mr. Cobden asked for "proof that these identical tribes of Dyaks ever committed piracy upon any European vessel!"

The debate in the House of Lords on Tuesday, upon the motion of the Earl of Derby for referring the papers respecting the representative institutions granted to the Cape of Good Hope to a select committee, involved the great question which now agitates that colony, and the proceeding of the Colonial Secretary in reference thereto narrowly escaped the condemnation of that august tribunal. Lord Derby, upon very plausible grounds, censured the whole policy of the Government in this matter, in promising the colonists "the largest powers of self-government in whatever relates to their internal and local affairs," affording them reason to believe that they might frame their own scheme of government, and in then virtually annulling the pledges made to them, by sending out a Constitution differing from what they had been led to expect. After so large a measure of the representative system had been solemnly promised, the engagement, Lord Derby observed, should have been rigidly adhered to. "No error could be more great and grievous than to hold out, in the name of the Crown, any expressions or pledges respecting boons to be granted or privileges conceded, and then to recede from those pledges in spirit as well as in letter."

Earl Grey treated the motion as a party movement, the object of which was to gain a triumph over the Government; and he thus endeavoured to alarm and secure the votes of wavering peers. The policy of granting liberal institutions to the Cape he justified; the constitution he had framed was, he maintained, of that character, and he attributed its rejection to the factious opposition of certain of the colonists; holding out the prospect that the differences between the mother country and the colony might be brought to an amicable conclusion if the quarrel were not exasperated by such motions as this, which, if successful, would, he said, furnish a dangerous precedent to other colonies engaged in the work of constitution-making.

The division was, we have remarked, a narrow one,—68 in favour of the motion, and 74 against it.

Making a reasonable allowance for the weight attached to the authority of the Earl of Derby,—once a Colonial Secretary;—for the influence of party bias, and for a certain degree of general prejudice which exists against the nobleman to whom is intrusted the government of our vast colonial empire, there will remain a sufficient proportion of independent and indifferent members of the Upper House, whose votes against the proceeding of Earl Grey demonstrate that it is not generally approved by those who influence public opinion in this country. We have already expressed our sentiment, which we repeat, that whatever administrative talents Lord Grey may possess, and however pure and honest may be his intentions, he is not fitted to be Colonial Secretary.

GENERAL VENTURA.

Those officers of the British and Indian armies who remember General Ventura, and who enjoyed his hospitalities during the marches through the Punjab, before and subsequent to the death of Runjeet Singh, will be glad to hear that, after being confined from severe illness for two months, he has recovered, and is able to move about.

The object of the general's visit to England is, it is said, to enter his protest against the confiscation, by the local Government of the East-India Company, of a certain jaghire or estate bequeathed to him by Runjeet Singh. As the concession of this jaghire was recognized by the Government of India, and its particular protection extended to the general before the annexation of the Punjab to the British dominion, we are at a loss to imagine how any subsequent events can have interfered with his personal rights. It is customary, we believe, to respect the landed property of individuals, even when a country is transferred, by conquest, to new hands. However this may be, every one must wish that the worthy old general may obtain complete justice. It concerns our character for good faith and respect for the foreigner that he should be fairly treated. But we would not have the Government simply just. Towards General Ventura the Company are under an obligation to be generous. Although it was in his power, commanding as he did a large proportion of the Sikh army, to nourish hostile passions, and draw his sword upon us, he adopted an opposite course, and invariably and strenuously urged the policy of an English alliance.

When we are better informed as to the particulars of the claims of the general, we will enter upon the matter more at length. Meanwhile, we trust that nothing will be done which can, in the remotest degree, tarnish the character of Great Britain for probity.—U. S. Gazette.

The following extract of a letter from St. Helena, appearing in the Cape Town Mail, contains some very remarkable information relative to the death of the Rev. Mr. Beck, a missionary of the South African Society, on his voyage from the Cape to St. Helena, for the recovery of his health:—

"The Rev. Mr. Beck, of your place, died of apoplexy, while in a bath (on March 7), two days before the Jane got in; but they were compelled to commit his body to the deep, though so near to land (about 350 miles). It had been, however, the earnest desire of the rev. gentleman to be buried at St. Helena, and his prayer was heard and answered,—for, from some neglect of the carpenter, the coffin floated to the surface, and the body washed on shore, on Monday last (4th April), was buried exactly where he wished, by the side of Captain Broadway."

An advertisement, issued by a Calcutta undertaker, appears in one of the papers of that presidency, in which he puffs his "patent coffins recommended by the faculty."

INDIA AT THE GREAT EXHIBITION.

The glorious Indian collection at the Great Exhibition is now complete. Had it been so when we commenced our description, we should probably have begun where we are now obliged to terminate, for assuredly nothing will approach, in grandeur, extent, and character, the contributions of his Highness the Nuwab Nazim of Moorshedabad. This prince, uninfluenced by any of the British officers or gentlemen at his court, and unasked by the Government, volunteered to forward to the Crystal Palace some illustrations of princely existence in the East, and, in the true Oriental spirit, has preferred transmitting articles actually in use at the palace, to causing inferior commodities to be fabricated for the purpose. The whole collection was placed under the charge of Dr. Young, physician to his Highness, who certainly merits the highest encomiums for the great care that has been taken in packing and bringing to England so inestimable a prize.

The presents consist of an elephant howdah of ivory and gold, and royal trappings to match; a state palankeen, with kincaub canopy; a state palkee, or evening palankeen, of ivory, without a canopy; a shumiana, or throne canopy, of velvet, very richly and carefully embroidered; a pair of moorchals, or wands of dignity, which are only allowed to be used by a few princes in India, in the presence of the Governor-General; and some camel trappings, of a gorgeous and elegant fashion. The value of these handsome and unique contributions is £10,000. It was only ten days after his Highness's spontaneous resolution had been formed that the articles were despatched from Moorshedabad; but when good intentions are to be carried out, the British functionaries are never slow to afford the requisite assistance. Mr. Henry Torrens, the Governor-General's agent at the court of the Nuwab Nazim, admirably seconded his Highness; the Pasha's Transit Company and the Peninsular and Oriental Company afforded every assistance for the despatch of the goods to this country, and, on their arrival, the Board of Control and the Court of Directors lost no time in expediting their arrival in town, and their transmission to Buckingham Palace, whither they were sent at her Majesty's express desire, and unpacked in her presence and that of Prince Albert, Dr. Young attending to superintend the proceeding. We believe that the presents will be removed to Buckingham Palace when the Exhibition closes. In the meanwhile, a handsome acknowledgment has been forwarded to the Nuwab Nazim, who will henceforth experience increased pleasure in his connection with Englishmen, towards whom he has always been remarkable for kindness and courtesy. No sport, in the shape of tiger-hunting, &c., can be enjoyed in the neighbourhood of Moorshedabad, without the assistance afforded by the prince in lending elephants, &c.

Another princely contribution, which attracts much attention, is an ivory throne from the Rajah of Travancore. A costly diamond glitters in the upper part of the throne, and above this is a knob, entirely composed of precious stones.

We have a few words to say regarding other articles in the Exhibition, and our task is done.

No part of the Crystal Palace so abounds in models illustrative of habits of life. Very lately, Capt. P. Reynolds has added a clever model of the way in which the Thugs perform their deadly offices.

The models of vessels, which occupy the first northern compartment on the western side of the nave, have never received the attention they merit. To nautical men who have served in India, and to persons who have looked at Indian boats and ships in pictures, there does not appear at first sight very much to attract notice; but a close examination develops facts which the curious in shipbuilding should not pass unconcernedly. The model of the Arab dow, for example, is accompanied by an explanation of its original purposes and structure. The dow, formerly a piratical vessel, is of 200 tons measurement only. It is never coppered, but a mixture of fine lime and tallow is laid upon the surface, which hardens by immersion during a voyage. The layers are repeated when the vessel returns into harbour. An excellent model of an Arab bugla, or trading-vessel, constructed in the Bombay Dockyard by the admirable Parsee builders, also appears in the compartment; and, suspended to the jib-boom of this, or a vessel near it (we do not precisely remember which at this moment), is a piece of teak, part of a deck beam of the ship Cornwallia, after being submerged for eight years. One side of the timber shows the corrosive action of the sand; the other illustrates the high state of preservation of the wood when only exposed to the water. The state barge of a Sikh chief, when the Punjaub had such men in the full possession of power, is likewise an interesting object; as are the Point de Galle canoes, with their outriggers, and the model of a Lanum pirate prahu of the first class,—a species of vessel which would be multiplied infinitely to the ruin of the commerce of the Archipelago, if Sir James Brooke were to shape his conduct by the dictates of the Humes and Cobdens.

Bombay fishing-nets in miniature, and several other illustrations of native ingenuity in capturing the finny tribe, complete the marine attractions of the Indian collection.

From the great number, rather than from the quality, of the musical instruments contributed by India, the world would suppose the Hindoos to be a very musical people. They certainly deserve the title, if their capability of producing discordant, deafening noises, suffices to give it. Their tom-toms of all manner of shapes and sizes, some of them arranged in a circle according to chromatic order; their venas, or guitars, and their rude trumpets, will recall to the ear of many an old Indian the dissonant celebrations of weddings and festivals. The Burmese have sent an instrument called the isign wign. The people of Java have forwarded a variety of musical chatties of brass, each emitting a different tone, and an instrument of hollow bamboos, equally musical. We should have had a model of a nautch, however, to have accompanied these instruments, and to illustrate the Oriental notions of dancing.

Amongst the models of edifices, we would particularly invite attention to those of Lahore, and some of the remarkable temples in the south of India. They have the merit of great exactitude, if nothing more.

The collection of wooden Indian toys must surely give a hint to our toy-makers. It costs a fortune to supply children in this country with means of diversion, for everything is of the brittlest kind; and many persons, from inability to purchase, are therefore obliged to deny their infants a source of entertainment and domestic quietude. If the toys of Patna and Surat could be introduced here, a market would be opened to which thousands would gladly resort.

We have said little of the contents of the jewel and gold and silver cases in the Exhibition, for a minute description would stretch out into an indefinite space. From the Koh-i-noor to the beetle's-wing, everything which glitters in India glitters here; and we feel quite satisfied that the ornaments and decorations of Indian life have been as fitly represented as the more useful and simple addenda to existence. Upon the whole, indeed, no part of the GREAT EXHIBITION is, according to universal testimony, so extensive, so interesting, or so instructive, as that which is devoted to the products of BARRISH INDIA.

Mr. Reddie, the first judge of the Court of Small Causes of Calcutta, in the course of hearing one of the cases, desired the mooktear, Mr. Page, not to address him by the title of "Your Honour;" remarking that the title of "His Honour" belonged to the Deputy Governor of Bengal, and, perhaps, to the judges of the Supreme Court.

THE GRAND TRIGONOMETRICAL SURVEY OF INDIA.

A report on the progress and expense of the Great Trigonometrical Survey of India, by Lieut. Col. Waugh, the Superintendent, with other documents connected with this interesting subject, has been recently laid before Parliament and printed.

This magnificent geodetic undertaking, which at present extends from Cape Comorin to Thibet, and from the meridian of Calcutta to that of Cashmere, was commenced at the beginning of the present century by Col. Lambton, who had previously served as a surveyor in America, and joined her Majesty's 33rd regiment, in Calcutta, in the year 1797. The regiment was then under the command of the Hon. Col. Wellesley, now Duke of Wellington, and was ordered to join the army proceeding to Mysore.

Immediately after the fall of Seringapatam, Brigade-major Lambton drew up his project for a trigonometrical survey across the Peninsula. This plan was submitted to Government with the recommendation of the Duke of Wellington, to whose cordial support the trigonometrical survey of India owes its origin.

In his early operations, Col. Lambton was assisted by Lieut. Warren, of his Majesty's 33rd, and Capt. Kater, of his Majesty's 12th Foot. The first named officer belonged to the ancient noblesse of France, to which country he returned after the peace. His stay with Col. Lambton was of short duration, as he was, at a very early period of the work, appointed to the charge of the Madras Observatory. Capt. Kater's health having failed, obliged him to quit the department. Thus it appears that, during the greater portion of his career, Col. Lambton worked nearly single-handed in the extensive and arduous operations which he carried on, amidst the formidable trials and obstacles that the baneful nature of the climate and the want of resources in the country everywhere presented.

For a long period, these operations were frequently interrupted by the disturbed political condition of the country, which was often the scene of warlike operations; for it was not until the Marquis of Hastings destroyed the Pindaree confederacies in 1818, that the Peninsula and Dekhan settled down into repose. The mysterious character of the instruments and operations, as well as the planting of flags and signals, always more or less awakened the apprehensions or excited the jealousy of the native princes.

Shortly after the commencement of his labours, Col. Lambton was called on to demonstrate the utility of his work. It was asserted that surveys on an astronomical basis would be equally accurate, and more economical than geodetical operations. The futility of these views was ably exposed by the colonel, and being supported by the Astronomer Royal of the day, the Rev. N. Maskelyne, all open opposition was withdrawn, and Major Rennell, who was the chief advocate of the astronomical basis, afterwards concurred in the trigonometrical system.

With reference to the length of time occupied by Col. Lambton's operations, it may be proper to remark that, in addition to the interruptions caused by the disturbed state of India, that officer's establishment was on the most circumscribed scale, and his arrangements were often thwarted by the Finance Committee at Madras. It required, indeed, all the powerful support of the Hon. Court of Directors, and of influential men in office in India, to keep the operations on foot, even on this limited scale.

Col. Lambton remained at his post till his death, which occurred on the 20th Jan. 1823, at the age of 70, at Hingham Ghat, about 50 miles from the city of Nagpore, in the Dekhan. The professional account of his labours is given in the first five volumes of the General Report, which are deposited at the India House in manuscript. Condensed accounts of the more scientific part of his operations have been from time to time published.

Col. Lambton, between the years 1802 and 1815, covered the whole country as high as 18° latitude with a net-work of triangles, whereby the Peninsula was completed from Goa on the west to Masulipatam on the east, with all the interior country from Cape Comorin to the southern boundaries of the Nizam's and Marhatta territories. Subsequent to this achievement, the Great Arc triangulation was extended nearly to Takal Khera, in latitude $21^{\circ} 6'$. The greater part of the Nizam's eastern territories were triangulated by meridional series between the Kistnah and Godavery, and considerable progress was made in the longitudinal series from the Beder base towards Bombay. The area comprised by the whole of the operations prosecuted during the time Col. Lambton was superintendent, aggregates 165,342 square miles. The expense incurred amounted to Co.'s Rs. 8,35,377. Consequently, the rate at which the triangulations have been ex-cutted averages only Co.'s Rs. 5. 0. 10, or less than 10s., per square mile.

From Col. Lambton's operations having commenced in Southern India arises the great superiority of the maps of the Madras presidency; the atlas sheets whereof, published by order of the East-India Company, are nearly complete. This part of India was surveyed in detail upon the basis of Col. Lambton's operations, and on a scale of one mile per inch, by the officers and sub-assistants trained at the military surveying schools.

In October, 1817, the Marquis of Hastings, impressed with a conviction of the utility of a trigonometrical survey, resolved to transfer the control over its operations to the Supreme Government of India; and, in consideration of Col. Lambton's age and infirmities, selected Capt. (now Col.) Everest, as eminently fitted to assist the superintendent, and eventually become his successor.

Capt. Everest joined the colonel as chief assistant in the latter end of 1818, and was employed, in the first instance, in the triangulation of the eastern parts of the Nizam's dominions, where, in consequence of the extremely unhealthy character of the country, together with great exposure induced by indefatigable labour in the duties of the survey, he twice had jungle fever, and eventually was ordered to the Cape of Good Hope for the recovery of his health.

On his return to duty, Capt. Everest was deputed on a longitudinal series of the great triangles emanating from the Beder base line, and intended to connect Bombay. He was engaged on this important work at the time of Col. Lambton's death, by which event he succeeded to the office of superintendent, and immediately proceeded to concentrate the resources at his disposal for the extension of the Great Arc series. The measurement was at length carried to the latitude of 24° , when it was terminated by the Sironj base line.

After the termination of the Sironj base line, Capt. Everest proceeded to England for the recovery of his health; and as there was no person in India competent to succeed him, the Supreme Government resolved to retain the situation of superintendent open until his return.

During Capt. Everest's absence, the establishment was usefully employed, under the principal sub-assistant, Mr. Joseph Olliver, in extending a longitudinal series from the Sironj base line to connect Calcutta, for which work written instructions were given by Capt. Everest. This series traverses, throughout the greater part of its extent, a wild, desolate, and unhealthy tract of hill country, which presented formidable difficulties. Notwithstanding the frequent ravages of jungle fever, which has all along been the most baneful enemy of the trigonometrical survey, as well as one of the chief retarding causes, this party, composed entirely of East Indians, successfully overcame all obstacles, and the work was eventually brought to a close in the year 1832, at the Calcutta base line, having occupied a period of six years in accomplishing a direct distance of 671 miles. The progress, therefore, was at the rate of 112 miles per annum, including branching series of secondary triangles. The area comprised in these operations is 33,442 square miles, and the charges amount to Co.'s Rs. 1,30,740, giving an average rate of expenditure amounting to Rs. 3. 14. 6. per square mile, including cost of measuring the Calcutta base line with Col. Colby's apparatus. This amounts to little more than 6s. per square mile.

Col. Everest returned to India in 1830, liberally provided by the munificence of the Court of Directors with geodetical instruments and apparatus of every description, in the construction of which the most skilful artists of the day, Messrs. Troughton and Simms, exhausted every resource of modern invention. During his absence from India, he had made himself acquainted with the English ordnance survey system, and with every modern improvement in geodetical matters that had taken place in Europe. Thus splendidly equipped, Col. Everest returned to India in the prime of life, the full vigour of his faculties, and with an undaunted determination of character that never quailed before any difficulties, nor yielded to any opposition. The task before him required, indeed, the full display of all the vigour he possessed. In addition to the duties of superintendent of the trigonometrical survey, he had now to perform those of surveyor-general of India, to which office he had recently been appointed by the Court of Directors.

He was detained by these arrangements, by official delays, and by the measurement of the Calcutta base line, until the end of 1832, from which time the great arc may be considered to have actually recommenced, after a cessation of seven years. The work was carried on unremittingly till December, 1841, when it closed with the measurement of the Beder base line; and the whole Indian arc from Cape Comorin to the Himalaya mountains, forming the main axis of Indian geography, was thus completed. The area comprised by the great arc operations, principal and secondary, aggregates 56,997 square miles, including the revision of the section Beder to Kaliaupur, and the measurement of three base lines, each from $7\frac{1}{2}$ to 8 miles in length. The average progress, therefore, was about 5,700 square miles per annum, and the total cost being Co.'s Rs. 8,98,326, the rate per square mile averages Rs. 15. 12. 2, or 29s.

This rate, considered per se, is very moderate; but contrasted with Col. Lambton's it exhibits a ratio of three to one. This is easily accounted for by the great superiority of the work, which is perhaps unsurpassed by any similar undertaking in the world. The instruments were much heavier, and more numerous, requiring a larger establishment of porters. The signals being all luminous, necessitated an increased number of attendants; the base line apparatus infinitely more complicated and ponderous than Col. Lambton's steel chains, demanded an additional number of observers, as well as greater cost of transport. A considerable part of the triangulation likewise passes through the plains of the Ganges, which is the garden of India. In this part of the country compensation had to be paid wherever private property was interfered with, and costly masonry towers were erected for stations.

In the year 1829, a trigonometrical survey in the Bombay presidency was commenced by Lieut. Shortrede, on an independent base and point of departure. These desultory principles were objected to by Gen. Hodgson, at that time surveyor-general of India, who recommended that the work should emanate from the Great Arc, and proceed to Bombay precisely according to Col. Lambton's original design. This injunction, however, remained unheeded; and, notwithstanding the respect due to Col. Lambton's judgment, and Gen. Hodgson's authority, the survey proceeded in an unsystematic manner until it was brought under Col. Everest's control in 1831. Finding that no use could be made of this confused net of triangulation, the colonel directed that the longitudinal series should be taken up where he left off in 1823, at the time of Col. Lambton's death. Lieut. Shortrede resigned in 1836, and was succeeded by Lieut. Jacob, of the Bombay engineers, by whom the Bombay longitudinal series was brought to a conclusion in the year 1841, and the whole work now rests on his observations alone.

Immediately after the measurement of the Calcutta base, Colonel Everest fitted out a party under Lieut. James Western, of engineers, for the purpose of carrying a triangulation along the meridian of Parasnath, dependent on one of the sides of the Calcutta longitudinal series. This work commenced in February 1832. In 1834, he was relieved by Lieut. Bridgman. Lieut. (now Lieut.-colonel) A. H. E. Boileau assumed charge in 1835-36, and commenced the work de novo. The area comprised in Colonel A. H. E. Boileau's triangulation, principal and secondary, amounts to 4,914 square miles, and the charges to Co.'s Rs. 54,760 showing an average rate of Rs. 11. 2. 4. per square mile, or say 21s. On account of defective instrumental power, this work is only of a second-rate order. Colonel Everest, at the end of 1832, fitted out another party, under Lieut. Roderick Macdonald, of the Bengal N.I. to carry on the Budhon meridional series, dependent on a side of the Calcutta longitudinal series. Lieut. Macdonald broke ground on the 2d February 1833, and was obliged to relinquish the work in September 1835, on account of ill-health, when Lieut. Ommanney was placed in charge, and he remained till April 1837, when he resigned, and was succeeded by Mr. Olliver. In the early part of 1838 operations were suspended on account of Mr. Olliver's services being required with Lieut. Waugh on the Great Arc. After the termination of the Great Arc, on which Captain Renny Tailour had been employed, he proceeded to take personal charge of the Budhon series, and the work was at length brought to a successful conclusion by that able and energetic officer in one season, having occupied in all, eleven years. The area covered amounts to 12,468 square miles, and the charges to Co.'s Rs. 1,72,510 giving a mean cost of Rs. 13. 13. 5. per square mile, or 25s.

In July, 1832, Lieut. col. Waugh was nominated to the department, and Lieut. (now Capt.) Renny Tailour, was also appointed. They were immediately employed in exploring the wild and jungly country between Chunar and the sources of the Son and Narbada rivers, and up to the city of Jubulpore. After closing this work, they joined the approximate operations of the Great Arc series in the Gwalior country, and organized two parties, one for the Ranghir meridional series under Col. Waugh, the other for the Amua meridional series under Lieut. Renny, both series being dependent on sides of the Calcutta longitudinal series. The Ranghir series commenced in January 1834, and was completed by Mr. Armstrong as far as the mountains, into which it was carried by Mr. Lane, and the work closed in 1841, having occupied nine years. The meridional distance comprised is about 400 miles, showing an average progress of forty-four miles per annum. The area covered amounts to 16,088 square miles, the charges to Rs. 1,18,378, showing an average cost of Rs. 7. 5. 9. per square mile, or 14s.

Capt. Renny Tailour commenced the Amua series in January 1834, and it was brought to a conclusion in June 1839. The area comprised is 5,565 square miles, and the charges amount to Co.'s Rs. 1,04,958, giving an average cost of Rs. 18. 13. 9. per square mile, or 35s.

Lieut. W. Jones was appointed to the trigonometrical survey in 1835, and remained till 1838 attached to the Great Arc. After the measurement of the base near Sironj, in which operation he took a part, Lieut. Jones was deputed to conduct a series on the meridian of Karara, dependent on a side of the Calcutta longitudinal series, which was completed by Mr. Armstrong in 1845. It embraces an area of 5,819 square miles, and cost no less than Co.'s Rs. 134,903, giving an average rate of Rs. 23. 2. 11. per square mile, or say 43s.

Brevet-Capt. Du Vernet, of the Madras army, was appointed to the trigonometrical survey in 1840, and in 1841 proceeded to prosecute the triangulation of the Himalaya longitudinal series, extending from the Great Arc along the southern face of the sub-Himalayan range, so as to connect the northern limits of all the meridional series. Previous to Col. Everest's departure, Capt. Du Vernet was ordered to continue the north longitudinal series, between the meridians of Amua and Karara, which he successfully accomplished in one season. During the year 1844-45 he was employed in prosecuting the triangulation from the north along the meridian of Karara to form a junction with Capt. Shortrede, who was working from the south. On the termination of this duty, Capt. Du Vernet was directed to take up the Gurwani meridional series, depending on a side of the Calcutta longitudinal series. This work commenced in 1845-46, and was accomplished in two years. The area embraced is 6,296 square miles, and the charges amount to Rs. 53,020, giving an average rate per square mile of Rs. 8. 6. 8., or 16s.

On the completion of the Gurwani meridional series, Capt. Du Vernet with his establishment was transferred to the north-west Himalaya series, proceeding from the Great Arc to Peshawar. This work was intended to form the foundation of the triangulation of the newly-conquered provinces of the Punjab, agreeably to a design sanctioned by Lord Hardinge.

On the termination of the Great Arc, the two parties which had been engaged on that work were deputed by Col. Everest before his departure to take up the Chendwar meridional series, and the Gora meridional series, dependent on sides of the longitudinal series. Mr. Logan finished the Chendwar series in two seasons, since which period he has been employed on the north longitudinal series. The Chendwar series comprises an area of 3,565 square miles, and cost Rs. 64,504, giving a rate of Rs. 18. 1. 6. per square mile, or 33s.

Mr. James at the same time commenced the Gora meridional series, in which he had made little progress up to the time of his death, in June, 1844, and Lieut. Garforth completed the work. It embraces an area of 4,417 square miles, and cost Rs. 76,948, giving an average rate of Rs. 17. 6. 8. per square mile, or 32s.

On the conclusion of the Budhon series, Capt. Renny Tailour was ordered to take up the Maluncha meridional series, dependent on a side of the longitudinal series, which was afterwards prosecuted by Mr. Clarkson and completed by Lieut. Walker in 1845. This work comprises an area of 4,765 square miles, and cost Rs. 52,878, showing an average rate of Rs. 11. 1. 6. per square mile, or 20s.

The Calcutta meridional series was commenced at the base line in 1841 by Mr. Sub-assistant Lane, and brought to a conclusion by Mr. Peyton in 1848. The series in its whole extent traverses the alluvial plains of the Ganges, in which great difficulties had to be surmounted. The area comprised amounts to 4,136 square miles, and the cost to Rs. 1,10,302, giving an average rate of Rs. 26. 10. 9. per square mile, or 49s.

In the year 1845 Capt. Thorold Hill, of the Madras army, who had formerly been employed in the Madras Topographical Survey, was nominated by Government to succeed Capt. Shortrede. He was deputed to the charge of the Coast series, intended to extend from the Calcutta base line to the Madras Observatory, according to Col. Lambton's original design; and this series is still in progress. The area comprised by the operations on this series from 1845 to 1849 amounts only to 2,427 square miles, and the cost has been Rs. 91,534, giving an average rate of Rs. 37. 12. 4., or 70s. per square mile. The difficulties, however, may be expected to be entirely surmounted in 1851; after which, the country being easy, the cost will most probably fall to about five or six rupees per square mile.

The north longitudinal series extends from the Dehra Doon base to the Sonakoda base, a distance of 690 miles along the frontier. This work has been executed by various parties at different times. The first part, from the Great Arc series to the Ranghir series, was executed by Capt. Du Vernet, as already stated. The next portion, between the Ranghir and Amua series, was completed by Col. Waugh. The part between Amua and Karara was executed by Capt. Du Vernet, and revised by Mr. Logan, who completed the whole extent as far as the Chendwar series, under great difficulties as regards climate and forest, from which his party suffered greatly.

In 1847-48, Col. Waugh measured the Sonakoda base line, for the verification of the north longitudinal and the Calcutta meridional series, as well as to furnish a new basis for the extension of operations into Assam, and up to the extreme frontier of British India on the east.

The area comprehended by the north longitudinal series amounts to 15,826 square miles, exclusive of the mountain operations in Sikkim and along the frontier, which cover a further area of 73,920 square miles, giving a total of 89,746 square miles. The cost, including the expense of the Sonakoda base, amounts to Co's Rs. 2,14,257, which, divided by the former, gives an average of Rs. 13. 8. 7., or 25s. per square mile for the plain work, or, including the snowy peaks, an average of only Rs. 2. 6. 2., or 4s. a mile.

After the conclusion of the Bombay longitudinal series, Capt. Jacob proceeded to England on sick certificate, and was succeeded by Lieut. Harry Rivers, of the Bombay engineers, by whom the trigonometrical operations in that presidency have been conducted to the present time. These consist of the South Konkan series, dependent on a side of the Bombay longitudinal series. This work was completed by Lieut. Rivers between the years 1842 and 1844. After the conclusion of this work, Lieut. R. took up the North Konkan series, in the prosecution of which the health of his party suffered so much, that it became necessary to withdraw from it when it had attained the parallel of 21 deg. 45 min. He next took up the Khanpishura series on the meridian of 75 deg., which he has continued up to Ajmere. The area comprised in these several operations conducted by Lieut. Rivers amounts to 45,854 square miles, and the cost to Co's Rs. 1,26,734, giving an average rate of only Rs. 2. 12. 2. per square mile, or nearly 5s.

"In reviewing the whole progress of the trigonometrical survey of India from its commencement by Col. Lambton to the year 1848," observes Col. Waugh, "it will be seen that the grand total of area triangulated amounts to 477,044 square miles, and the grand total of cost to Company's Rs. 34,12,787, or say 312,389l., showing an average cost of Rs. 7. 2. 5. per square mile, or about 13s. 1d., which cannot but be considered remarkably moderate, especially when the nature of the country and climate, as well as the absence of all the usual resources to be found in Europe, are taken into account. The hardships and exposure of surveyors working in the field for the greater part of the year, in such a climate as India, and living under canvass, whilst all other servants of Government seek the protection of cool houses, are either little known or little appreciated."

"With regard to the duration of the survey, the question depends on the strength of the establishment employed, which statement is true within certain limits, defined by the power of supervision and training. The chief point is the rate per square mile, which is on an average 15s. 4d. The survey has been about forty-eight years in operation, chiefly on a small scale. Now, as the area of India exceeds Great Britain and Ireland some twelve times, we have, comparatively speaking, been only four years at work. Since the commencement the object in view has perpetually extended. Successive wars have added continual accessions of territory to be surveyed. The late wars alone have given new kingdoms with no less additional surface than 169,827 square miles. The limits of our empire, however, appear to have been at length reached. The total area of British India as it now stands, including Scinde, Punjaub, Jalandar, Doab, and Tenasserim, has been carefully estimated at 800,758 square miles, and the native states at 508,442 square miles, making a grand total of 1,309,200 square miles as the area of survey under my charge. A complete delineation of this vast superficial extent, amounting to 1½ million of square miles, confined within an external boundary of 11,260 miles in length, including every variety of configuration and climate, is an undertaking of unprecedented magnitude, demanding considerable time to accomplish with any pretensions to mathematical accuracy. The exertions hitherto made have been unremitting, and it is but justice to say that the progress has been, generally speaking, as honourable to the officers employed as the results have been useful to the country."

The present state of the trigonometrical survey consists of seven parties: two in the Punjaub; one party in extending the great longitudinal series from Calcutta to Karachi, in Scinde; one on the coast series from Calcutta to Madras; one on the Hurlong series in Behar (if possible, to be extended into Nipal); one party employed in Bengal on the Parasnath series; and one party in the Bombay presidency. The programme of future operations which have been sanctioned is as follows:—"According to Col. Everest's design, an ellipsoidal space is included between the Great Arc on the west, the Calcutta meridional series on the east, the great longitudinal series on the south, and the north longitudinal series along the frontier; which are verified by four base lines at their origin and termination; all measured with Colby's apparatus. This immense ellipsoidal area is filled up by subordinate meridional series nearly one degree of longitude apart, which series depend on the great longitudinal series for origin, and on the north longitudinal for verification. This has been denominated the gridiron system, and obviously possesses superior facilities for rapidity and accuracy. This design of Col. Everest's has been nearly completed, for there remains only a small portion of the Hurlong meridian, and the northern part of the Parasnath meridian, which will be finished in two years. The country to the west of the Great Arc is intended to be triangulated on precisely the same principles. 1st. The north-west Himalaya series will extend from the Dehra Doon base line to Peshawar, where it will be verified by a measured base. This series has reached the meridian of Cashmere, and may be expected to be completed in two or three years. 2dly. The great longitudinal series will be extended from the Sironj base to Karachi, where it will be verified by a measured base. It has been carried as far as the borders of the desert, across which its further progress is uncertain, because no analogous operations have ever been attempted. 3dly. Between the Peshawar and Karachi bases will extend a great meridional series, between which and those before described will be included an immense ellipsoidal area, averaging 9° of latitude by 10° of longitude. As all the bounding series will be executed with superior instruments, and duly verified by base lines, whereby limits will be placed to the intrusion of error, those series will be fit to verify the subordinate meridional series by means of which the intermediate space is intended to be rapidly filled up at every degree of longitude apart, according to Colonel Everest's system. To the east of the Calcutta meridian it is proposed to extend the north longitudinal series, from Sonakoda base into Assam. From this series will depend other meridional triangulations at one degree apart, upon which the accurate geographical delineation of eastern Bengal will be based. The Bombay party will complete the remaining triangulation of that presidency in a few years. There only remains, therefore, to be considered the vacant space to the south of the Calcutta longitudinal series, in which is embraced the hill country of Gondwana and tributary mahals, between the sources of the Son and Narbada, the Godavery river, and the sea. This region, inhabited by aboriginal tribes, is unhealthy in the extreme, and of no value; but from its rugged configuration, any survey not based on triangulation would accumulate vast errors. It is proposed to triangulate this region by meridional series at every two degrees apart, filling up the interstices with secondary triangulation. In this way that space can be most rapidly surveyed. The accomplishment of these several plans will complete the trigonometrical survey of all British India; and in six or seven years such progress will have been made as will bring the termination in view; before which time no satisfactory opinion can be given."

The Commercial Gazette of the Mauritius exposes a system introduced by the Indian immigrants of "hocussing" and robbing unwary persons by the aid of the datura, which is plentiful in the island, and which the rascals introduce into pastry and sweetmeats, which they sell or give to their victims, chiefly their own countrymen, by the roadside. One hundred and forty-one cases of this kind are ascertained to have occurred within the last six years.

Some of the hill tribes of Bengal require their chiefs always to sleep with the head reclining upon an elephant's tusks, as a pillow.

THE LATE MR. DYCE SOMBRE.

If we divide mankind into the three classes specified by the correspondent of Malvolio,—those who are born great, those who achieve greatness, and those who have greatness thrust upon them,—the late Mr. David Ochterlony Dyce Sombre must be included in that last named. Though his birth was not exalted, and there was nothing shining in his qualities of person or mind, the enormous wealth which fell into his possession by accident or caprice, lifted him into a conspicuous position, and the Court of Chancery, in return for the money it took from him, has given him notoriety.

His biography would scarcely merit a fugitive paragraph if it were not associated with that of a most remarkable personage, the late Begum Sumroo, whose real history, had it not been well authenticated, would be regarded as an eastern fiction.

A man of low origin, named Walter Reinhard, born in the electorate of Trèves, a private in the French army, in the year 1760, deserted, and proceeded as an adventurer to India. He contrived to reach Calcutta, calling himself Walter Summers, and obtained an appointment as a warrant officer in a Swiss battalion in the English service. He deserted again, and went to the French settlement at Chandernagore, whence he proceeded to Upper India, and took service as a common trooper with Sudfer Jung. He once more deserted, and offered himself to the notorious Meer Cassim Ali, who, perhaps, through sympathy of character, took a liking to the adventurer, and gave him the command of a corps. Whilst in the service of this miscreant, he was his ready tool in that black deed, the massacre of Patna, when Mr. Ellis and the other members of the factory were slaughtered in cold blood at an entertainment. The fortunes of Meer Cassim failing, and being himself proscribed as an assassin, Summers entered the service of Sujah ud Dowla, and ultimately that of Neujif Khan, to whom he rendered valuable assistance, and who, in return, invested him with the jaghire of Sirdhana, which made him a petty prince, and its revenues enabled him to amass a large amount of treasure.

Summers, whose name underwent the transformation, common with European names in India, into Sumroo and Sombre, had become acquainted with a young Cashmerian female, of great personal attractions, educated for a nauchin, or dancing-girl, who lived with him as concubine. The name of this damsel was Zeb-ul-Nissa, or "ornament of her sex." The elevation of Summers, or Sumroo, inspired this ambitious and unscrupulous woman with the hope of gratifying two passions which engrossed her heart—avarice and the love of power. Whatever affection she may have entertained for the European adventurer, was extinguished by nearer acquaintance with his low, brutalized habits; nevertheless, employing every art of fascination, even embracing the Roman Catholic religion, she lured him into a marriage with her. She then formed an extraordinary project to get rid of her husband, who, in 1776, had become involved in a dispute with his suzerain, Neujif Khan, and she persuaded him that a plot had been contrived by the Khan to murder them both, and recover the jagheer; urging him to fly with their treasure and valuables into the British territories. The tale was so artfully got up, that Sumroo implicitly believed it; and, upon her representations of the tortures that would await them if taken, and of her passionate attachment to him, he assented to her proposal, mutually to commit suicide if pursued. The first day of their flight they were attacked by a party of their own dependents (disguised) in the interest of the begum; a pistol shot was heard from her palkee; Sumroo, in terror, was told that his wife was dead; in fulfilment of his vow, he shot himself, and the begum returned in joy and triumph to her jagheer, of which she thenceforward was the sovereign.

In the administration of her affairs she was assisted by a half-caste, named George Alexander Dyce, who married one of the begum's adopted daughters, and with the rank of colonel acted as her minister and commander-in-chief. For some reason or other she quarrelled with this person, who was dismissed from her service, and lived for some time in penury at Meerut.

David Ochterlony Dyce, who took the name of Sombre, was the son of this officer,—and as some surmise, of the begum. At all events, she became much attached to the youth, and adopted him as her son. When his father was discarded he assumed the superintendence of the begum's affairs, which he is said to have managed well. He was educated at the Delhi college in Persian and English literature. Of great bulk, and of very dark complexion, he had yet a mild and agreeable expression of countenance, and being of a kind disposition and liberal to profusion, he was a general favourite.

In January, 1836, the begum died at the age of 88. Her jaghire, in default of legal issue, escheated to the East-India Company; but her vast personal property, supposed to amount to nearly a million sterling, with the exception of legacies to Messrs. Troup and Solaroli, who had married sisters of Dyce Sombre, was bequeathed by her will to this gentleman.

Col. Dyce, his father, upon the strength of an asserted matrimonial relationship with Sumroo, the begum's husband, claimed to be her heir, and in February, 1837, finding himself unnoticed in her will, he commenced an action against her son in the Supreme Court of Calcutta, which the latter compromised by agreeing to allow his father 1,800*l.* a-year; but Col. Dyce died of cholera at Calcutta the very day appointed for signing the agreement.

Mr. Dyce Sombre left India in 1838, and arrived in England with his enormous fortune, and with the reputation of being even richer than he was—an Eastern Croesus. His subsequent history may be soon told. The electors of Sudbury chose him for their representative in the British Parliament, and in 1840, the daughter of an English earl selected him for her husband. What though his complexion was dingy and his figure obese, his wealth repaired every defect—

Before such merit all objections fly.

Matrimonial dissensions, imputed lunacy, a Chancery suit, and all the torments which lawyers and physicians can inflict, filled up the few remaining years of his life, and he died in his apartments in Davies street, whither he had come from Paris, in the hope of being able to establish his sanity, on the 1st July, at the age of 41.

His property, which, even after the settlement upon his wife, and the sums spent in litigation, is said to yield 11,000*l.* a-year, will, in consequence of his dying a lunatic, be divisible between his two sisters, Mrs. Troup and Mrs. Solaroli.

MISCELLANEOUS.

INDIA SHIPPING TRADE.—The statement published by the East-India and China Association, of the number of British ships, with their tonnage, which entered inwards and cleared outwards from and to places within the limits of the East-India Company's charter, from the 1st of January to the 30th of June in the years 1850 and 1851, shows in the various ports the gross increase for the six months has been 50 vessels, 22,794 tons—the difference between 523 vessels, 254,659 tons, in 1851, and 473 vessels, 231,865 tons, in 1850. Of this increase, the return for London contributes 24 vessels, 10,933 tons; the increase at Liverpool has comprised 32 vessels, 14,348 tons; Clyde and other ports show an increase of 9 vessels, 3,437 tons. Bristol and Hull furnish the sole instances of decrease, including 15 vessels, 5,924 tons. Of the gross increase already stated, the entries inward principally comprised vessels from Madras, China, New South Wales and the Cape of Good Hope. According to the return of clearances outwards, the gross decrease for the six months has been 101 vessels, 36,693 tons, the difference between 572 vessels, 268,776 tons, and 471 vessels, 232,078 tons. The items of decrease are at London, Bristol, Hull, Clyde, and other ports. Liverpool stands precisely in the same state as it did in 1850, with the exception of an increase in tonnage to the extent of 4,790. The return for other ports presents a decrease of 75 vessels, 24,694 tons. The decrease in the case of London has been 22 vessels, 14,966 tons. The decrease at Bristol and Hull is shown to have been 4 vessels, 1,828 tons. Of the gross decrease stated, the clearances outwards comprised vessels for Bombay, Calcutta, Mauritius, Ceylon, Madras, Arabia, China, New South Wales, Singapore, &c.

STREAM COMMUNICATION WITH AUSTRALIA.—It has been stated, by the advocates of the Pacific line as a postal route, that Torres Straits might be traversed at all seasons by mail steamers maintaining a high speed, and that merchandise might be conveyed across the isthmus of Panama with great facility, and at a very trifling expense. On the other hand, it was urged that to navigate the Indian Ocean westward from Adelaide to the Cape of Good Hope was impracticable—in other words, that the homeward voyage from Australia could be performed by no other routes save those of India or Cape Horn. The dreadful character of the navigation off Cape Leuwin was also expatiated upon. In the evidence taken before Lord Jocelyn's committee with respect to the navigation of Torres Straits, Mr. Moore declared—"I think it impossible to navigate the straits for this purpose. I believe that six months would not pass over without the people of Sydney finding that the mail had not arrived; and what would be the cause?—the wreck would be found on some of the coral reefs in the channel." With reference to Cape Leuwin and the western route, Captain Hyde, who commands vessels in the Australian trade, was asked—"Do you believe that any vessels could make the passage round Cape Leuwin at the worst season of the year?" His reply was, "Yes; many vessels bound to India and Singapore make the passage at all seasons. Even the smaller vessels, of from 20 to 40 and 60 tons, come up from Hobart Town at all seasons." The same witness was then asked, "Is it your impression that a screw-vessel of 1,400 tons and 250-horse power would have any difficulty in making the homeward passage from Australia to the Cape at the worst season of the year?" Captain Hyde's answer was, "I should say, not the least, as far as I am capable of judging. My impression is, that the screw will supersede the paddle entirely. It will be found much more efficacious on long voyages than the paddle." Captain John Lane said, "As far as my experience goes, in passing and repassing Cape Leuwin, I think there is nothing to prevent even such steam-vessels as I have seen trading between London and Rotterdam making a very good voyage round Cape Leuwin, let alone the larger ones." Mr. Just, the Secretary of the Pacific Steam Navigation Company, as to merchandize traffic on the Panama line, said, "The cargo part of our trade would be very inconsiderable." The committee have, consequently, decided in favour of the Capeline, by which a first-class passenger may reach Sydney in sixty-four days, in a screw-steamer, for 70*l*. Intermediate passengers will be taken at 30*l*, and steerage passengers at 12*l* each. The cost of steam conveyance by any other route would be nearly double.

SIR C. NAPIER.—The following letter from Sir W. Napier appears in the Times:—"Sir: My letter to you of the 11th of March, relative to the sword presented to Sir Charles Napier by the Sirdars of Scinde, has brought down a wonderful storm of vituperation, and some tolerably bold assertions, from the editors of the Indian journals, the Bombay Times being, as usual, foremost in both. They declare that the whole story is a lie—that there is no sword, no gift, no feeling amongst the Sirdars—'no nothing,' as the country girls say when they are disappointed. Nevertheless, the sword, a very beautiful one, is now being fashioned by the skilful artists of Messrs. Hunt and Roskell's establishment. Were it not for your right to the assurance that no false tale was palmed on you, I should have silently enjoyed this 'fluttering in the dove-cotes of Corioli.'"

ABD-EL-KADER.—The Constitutionnel, alluding to the conversation in the House of Lords about Abd-el-Kader, says:—"We honour the sentiment which inspired Lord Londonderry on this delicate subject. But the English know better than any one the sacrifices which policy may impose on the clemency of a nation. The lot of the illustrious warrior of Africa touches them; they comment on his severe and long captivity. But had they not in their hands a captive much more illustrious? The Château of Amboise is a less severe prison than the island of St. Helena. And the captivity of Abd-el-Kader is far from equalling in duration that which the prisoner of England underwent. The English Government thought right to silence its humanity in presence of what appeared to it the security of Europe. France must think, on her part, on the security of French Africa. Let us be permitted to say that the hour of clemency does not appear to us to have arrived; this is not an opportune time for setting Abd-el-Kader at liberty. The eventualities to which the year 1852 subjects France may be a cause of agitation in Algeria. Ancient predictions announce to the Arabs that in the year 1268 of the Hegira, the avenger of Islamism is to appear to exterminate the unfaithful. This year 1268 corresponds to our epoch of 1852. If Abd-el-Kader were free, whatever precautions were taken, we could not prevent impostors from causing insurrection in Algeria, by spreading the rumour that Abd-el-Kader had reappeared, and that he was the 'Messiah of the hour' announced by prophets. After all, however, that has been written and said by English statesmen on this question, it is reduced to the expression of a wish arising from humanity. There is not, there cannot be, a question of negotiation."

BISHOP OF BOMBAY.—It is understood that Dr. Carr has resigned the bishopric of Bombay, and that the Rev. Mr. Harding, rector of St. Ann's, Blackfriars, will be the new bishop.

ENGAGEMENT OF SHIPS.—The Mary Shepherd has been engaged for the conveyance of troops to Calcutta, and the Bussorah Merchant for freight of stores to Bombay.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST-INDIA STOCK.

Ladies and Gentlemen,—

A VERY careful revision of the results of my canvass up to the present time, while it is most gratifying as evincing the extent of the support promised to me, shows at the same time that many of my friends are pledged on the occasion of the next vacancy which may occur in the East-India Direction.

By the advice, therefore, of those best capable of judging, I think it right to apprise you that it is not my intention to proceed to the ballot on the next vacancy.

Whatever experience I may have gained during the course of thirty years of active official service I anxiously desire to devote to the benefit of that country in which the best part of my life has been spent, and the welfare of which, moral and political, is and will ever be to me a subject of the deepest interest.

To this statement I have only to add, that should I be thought worthy to take a part in the direction of your affairs, my best exertions shall not be wanting to do justice to the trust reposed in me.

I have the honour to be, Ladies and Gentlemen,

Your most obedient servant,

FREDERIC MILLETT.

Woodhill, Ripley, Surrey,
July 9, 1851.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST-INDIA STOCK.

Ladies and Gentlemen,—

YOUR choice this day of Mr. Astell to fill the vacant seat in the administration of your affairs has removed from the field another of the candidates who preceded me in soliciting your suffrages.

Placed by this event one step nearer the object of my ambition, I beg most gratefully to acknowledge the kindness of those Proprietors who have already promised me their assistance when I come to the ballot, and earnestly to renew my request for the favourable consideration of those who have not yet honoured me with their support.

I have the honour to be, Ladies and Gentlemen,

Your obedient humble servant,

L. R. REID.

This day is published,

LIEUT. COL. C. J. C. DAVIDSON'S NEW WORK ON INDIA.

TARA THE SUTTEE. An Indian Drama in 5 Acts. With most copious Notes, faithfully depicting the state of native society.

To be had only of the Author and Publisher, No. 5, Stockwell Park Road, London, richly bound in silk, &c., One Guinea.

Just published, price 2s. 6d.

HOWARD ON THE LOSS OF TEETH, and on a new method of FASTENING LOOSE TEETH.—A very curious invention connected with Dental Surgery has been introduced by Mr. Howard, consisting of an entirely new description of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, fixed by SELF-ADHESION, without springs, wires, or ligatures. They will never change colour or decay. This method does not require the extraction of any teeth or roots, or any painful operation. The invention is of importance to many persons, and those interested in it should read this Treatise.

London: SIMPKIN and MARSHALL, and all Booksellers; or by post of the Author, THOMAS HOWARD, Surgeon-Dentist, 17, George Street, Hanover Square, London.

THE BEST INDIAN CURRY POWDER, UNEQUALLED FOR GENUINE FLAVOUR,

In 1 lb. Bottles, 3s. 6d.; ½ lb., 2s. 3d.; and ¼ lb., 1s. 6d.; or 7 lbs. for 21s.

INDIAN CURRY SAUCE, of superior quality.—This novel and piquant Sauce, now introduced to the English public for the first time, is peculiarly adapted for Steaks, Chops, Game, Fish, Cold Meats, Hash, &c. The addition of a little of this Sauce, in cases where a curry cannot be procured, will prove to connoisseurs a valuable accompaniment.

DELHI CHUTNEE, TAPONIAN SAUCE, and all other Condiments, from Calcutta direct.

PAYNE and Co.'s ROYAL POLYTECHNIC TEA and FOREIGN ESTABLISHMENT, 324, 326, and 328, REGENT STREET.

TRUE MADRAS CURRY PASTE, and MULLIGATAUNEY PASTE and CHATNYNS.—Messrs. BARRIE and Co., Vepery, Madras, to enable their old correspondents returning from India to continue the use of these celebrated Condiments, have made arrangements to forward regular supplies of the above, packed in glass jars for family use, at 1s. 9d. and upwards, which may be had of GROSSE and BLACKWELL, Purveyors to Her Majesty, 21, Soho Square; FORTNUM, MASON, and Co., Piccadilly; and of the principal Sauce Vendors throughout the kingdom. Each bottle is labelled, and BARRIE and Co., Madras, stamped on the glass.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS a CERTAIN SPECIFIC for NERVOUSNESS, LOWNESS OF SPIRITS, and DISORDERED STOMACHS.—The wonderfully regenerating effects produced by these invaluable Pills are truly astonishing. This fine Medicine acts in so peculiar a manner on the system, that by following the directions affixed to each box, as to the mode of using it, nervous irritability is allayed, the tone of the stomach strengthened, the digeston improved, freedom of circulation given to the blood, and a robust state of health attained. Persons of studious and sedentary habits, being more especially liable to the class of disorders alluded to, should take Holloway's Pills to insure a good state of health.

Sold by all Druggists, and at Professor Holloway's establishment, 244, Strand, London; and by all European and Native vendors of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

And Haydn's Creation, 15s.

NEW SCHOOL MUSIC.—Hamilton's Modern Instructions for the Pianoforte, large music folio. "An educational work, which has now reached its twenty-first edition, requires no other praise than the simple record of the fact. A manual of instructions so simple, that they may be easily understood by the youngest learner; and besides exercises on the scales, &c., a collection of 61 preludes and favourite airs, 68 exercises, 12 chants, and 4 favourite vocal songs, with pianoforte accompaniments,—easy and pleasing airs, arranged with great care, and fingered by so eminent a professor as Mr. Czerny. Its extremely low price, only 4s., is also an important recommendation."—Weekly Chronicle. Hamilton's Dictionary of 3,500 Musical Terms, 37th edition, 1s. His Catechism on Singing, 3s. Ditto on Thorough Bass, 2s. Ditto Violin, 1s. Clare's Psalmody, 12 books, 3s. each. Clark's Catechism on the Rudiments of Music, 23rd edition. CZERNY'S ROYAL PIANOFORTE SCHOOL, dedicated to her most gracious Majesty, 4 vols. each 31s. 6d. Each vol. forms a perfect work. "It is evidently a frank disclosure of all the writer knows, and is a boon to his profession, which will long cause his name to be borne in grateful recollection."—Times. "The examples and exercises are admirable throughout; as a manual to teachers and amateurs, it is invaluable."—Morning Chronicle. "Posterity will not forget him."—Sunday Times. "Czerny's Pianoforte School is decidedly one of the most valuable contributions to the art of modern times."—Musical World. "Mr. Czerny has presented us with a work which, in regard to interest and utility, can never be surpassed."—Hamilton, Author of the Musical Catechism.

STEPHEN HELLER'S latest PIANOFORTE LESSONS.—Students of the pianoforte will find in the following works of the above distinguished author an unusual degree of merit, suited alike for the saloon and the practice-room, viz. Chant du Chasseur, 2s.; L'Adieu du Soldat, 2s.; Chant du Berceau, 2s.; Arrangement of Mendelssohn's Chant d'Amour, 2s.; ditto Parting Song, 2s.; ditto Chant du Fête, 2s.

NEW PIANO MUSIC, by BRINLEY RICHARDS.—The Vision, and Angel's Song, each 2s. Poor Mary Anne, the Ashie Grove, the Rising of the Lark, and the Sturm March Galop, each 3s.

NEW MUSIC.—Just published, a Catalogue of New Vocal and Instrumental Music, being Part IX. of the General Catalogue of Musical Works published by Messrs. ROBERT COCKS and Co. To be had gratis, and postage free, upon application to the publishers.

CHURCH MUSIC.—Just published, a Collection of Ninety-three Chants, for the use of the United Church of England and Ireland, compiled by John Bishop, of Cheltenham, with copious introductory remarks. Vocal score with organ accompaniment, price 1s. 4d.

UNIVERSAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY,
Established in 1834.—Empowered by Special Act of Parliament.
1, KING WILLIAM STREET, LONDON.
For the Assurance of Lives at Home and Abroad, including Gentlemen engaged in the Military and Naval services.

DIRECTORS.
SIR HENRY WILLOCK, K.L.S., Chairman.
JOHN STEWART, Esq., Deputy Chairman.
Lieut.-Gen. Sir Richard Armstrong, William Kilburn, Esq.
C.B., K.C.T., and S. Francis Macnaghten, Esq.
John Bagshaw, Esq., M.P. Charles Otway Mayne, Esq.
Augustus Bosanquet, Esq. William Rothery, Esq.
Charles Dashwood Bruce, Esq. Robert Saunders, Esq.
Ellis Watkin Cuthill, Esq. Capt. Samuel Thornton, R.N.
AUDITORS.—Robert Gardner, Esq.; Robert Hichens, Esq.;
William Oxborough, Esq.
BANKERS.—Bank of England, and Messrs. Currie and Co.
SOLICITOR.—William Henry Cottrell, Esq.
PHYSICIAN.—George Burrows, M.D., F.R.S., 18, Cavendish Square.
ACTUARY.—David Jones, Esq.

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will show the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 14th of May, 1851, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums, being a reduction of 45 per cent. on the current annual premium. This will be found a most liberal reduction, if the original premiums be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits:—

Age when Policy was issued.	Date of Policy.	Sum assured.	Original Premium.	Reduced Ann. Premium for current Year.
20		£1,000	£19 6 8	£10 12 8
30	On or before	1,000	24 8 4	13 8 7
40		1,000	31 10 0	17 6 6
60	1846.	1,000	66 11 8	36 12 5

*. The attention of Gentlemen connected with India is particularly requested to the Regulations of this Society; as, on comparison with other offices, its terms will be found peculiarly advantageous, especially as regards the liberal plan adopted on the return of Indian Assurers to reside permanently in this country; and the Indian Rates have been calculated from extensive data and Tables exclusively in the possession of this Society, by which the true risk of life during residence in India has been most accurately ascertained.

AGENTS IN INDIA.—Messrs. Braddon and Co., Calcutta; Messrs. Bainbridge and Co., Madras; Messrs. Leckie and Co., Bombay.

MICHAEL ELIJAH IMPEY, Secretary.

LADIES Travelling, or during the Drive, the Aquatic
Excursion, or while otherwise exposed to the scorching rays of the Sun and heated particles of Dust, will find ROWLAND'S KALYDOR a most refreshing preparation for the complexion, dispelling the cloud of languor and relaxation, allaying all heat and irritability, and immediately affording the pleasing sensation attending restored elasticity and healthful state of the Skin. It tends to neutralize the action of the atmosphere upon the Skin, and to promote that healthy action of the microscopic vessels, by which its general well-being and the beauty of its appearance are so essentially promoted. Freckles, Tan, Spots, Pimples, Eruptions, and Discolorations, fly before its application, and give place to delicate smoothness, and the glow of beauty and of bloom. In cases of Sunburn, or Stings of Insects, its virtues have long been acknowledged. Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle.

ROWLAND'S AQUA D'ORO. This is the most fragrant and refreshing perfume ever yielded by the "Souls of Flowers." It retains its fresh and delightful odorlessness for days. It is invigorating, gently stimulating, yet sedative; and is an unrivalled quintessential spirituous product. For Fainting Fits, lassitude or fatigue, oppression from over-crowded rooms, or intense summer heat, it will be found most cordial and restorative in its effects.

Travellers and residents in warm climates will fully appreciate its invigorating and refreshing properties; and gentlemen after smoking would do well to rinse the mouth with a small quantity, and thus restore the breath to sweetness and purity. Price 3s. 6d. per bottle.

All holders of Policies in India on the Profit scale, who may have paid five annual premiums, will be entitled, at the expiration of the fifth year, to a year's profit, calculated on the average of the preceding five years; such profit to be paid in cash, or to go in diminution of the future premiums payable, or to be added to the sum assured by the policy, at the option of the holder, after the calculation of the profits shall have been made in London.

After the expiration of 1851, the profits will be declared annually, and the payers of five complete annual premiums be regularly entitled to a participation therein, with a like option as to the mode of application.

Parties assured in India for Life shall, on their return to England for a permanence, and on the first half-yearly premium becoming due, be entitled to come upon the English rates of premium, and be placed under the rules and conditions of the Society there obtaining.

All parties assured for Life, or for terms other than for Life, whatever the number of payments, or the permanency or otherwise of their residence in Europe, shall, after completing a full year from the date of their quitting India, and on the first half-yearly premium thereafter becoming due, be entitled to a reduction of their premium to the English rates, such reduced rates being continued during their further residence in Europe.

Notices of Assignments of Policies will be duly registered at the Office of the Secretaries.

The Society also grants ENDOWMENTS and DEFERRED ANNUITIES for India, the Tables for which, with full information, may be had at the Office of the Family Endowment Society, No. 12, Chatham Place; or at the Office of the Secretaries in Calcutta, Messrs. GORDON, STUART, and Co.

HINDUSTANI WORKS BY JOHN SHAKESPEAR, Esq.

NEW EDITION, with GREAT ADDITIONS.

This Day is published, the 4th Edition, in 1 vol. 4to. price £5. 5s. in boards, SHAKESPEAR'S HINDUSTANI and ENGLISH DICTIONARY, GREATLY ENLARGED: to which is added, a DICTIONARY, ENGLISH and HINDUSTANI, ENTIRELY NEW.

*. To the First Part of this Dictionary, the author has, by laborious study of Hindustani works, both printed and manuscript, made the most extensive additions. In the Hindustani and English Part, the Hindustani words are printed in their proper characters, together with the pronunciation in Roman letters. The Derivatives, which are traced from the Sanskrit, Arabic, Hebrew, Persian, and Greek, are given respectively in the character peculiar to each of those languages.

The Second Part, English and Hindustani, is ENTIRELY NEW. It comprises the most common English words, and also numerous usual phrases, with the fitted corresponding translations into Hindustani.

REVIEW IN "TIMES," Jan. 3.—"Much attention has been paid to the collecting of scientific terms, especially botanical ones, as well as to the correct rendering them into the technology of Europe." * * * "The Hindustani and English Part of it now contains upwards of 53,000 words and phrases explained, being 7,000 more than in the last edition, and 11,000 more than in any other Dictionary of the like description now extant." * * * "In India, as well as in Europe, the character of this work has long been fully established, and the present edition will greatly enhance its reputation."

III.
5th Edition, 1 vol. royal 8vo. price 14s.
A GRAMMAR of the HINDUSTANI LANGUAGE.
To which is added, a short Grammar of the Dakhni.

OVERLAND ROUTE TO INDIA.—Firman of His Highness the Pasha of Egypt, dated, Land of Egypt, Regheh, 1267 (May, 1851).—Translation: We, the undersigned Hkair ed deen Pasha, Director in Chief of the Transit Administration throughout Egypt, by order of His Highness Abbas Pasha, Viceroy of Egypt, hereby declare that the TRUNKS made by Messrs. THRESHER and GLENNY, London, are the Trunks best adapted for the Overland Journey through Egypt of travellers going to or returning from the East Indies. We moreover recommend all those whose intention it is to travel by this route, to provide themselves with the Trunks in question, which are most convenient, for their small size, lightness, and durability. They are most adapted for easy and safe conveyance across the Desert between Suez and Cairo, and for this cause are of greater security than any other trunks.—Under seal and signature of Hkair ed deen Pasha, Director in Chief of the Transit Administration throughout Egypt.

THE object of this Advertisement is to give publicity to the most valuable and efficient remedy that has yet been introduced in the practice of Medicine, for the purpose of removing every unsightly appearance from the Skin. Extensive experience and minute observation have convinced the Proprietor that, if applied as directed, it will remove any unsightly appearance, such as Tan, Sun-burns, Pimples, and Eruptions, which may disfigure the countenance; and will also impart to the Skin the most delightful softness and delicate clearness; in short, to preserve a pleasing complexion through life, nothing is required but the use of

GODFREY'S EXTRACT OF ELDER FLOWERS,

The sweetest and really the most perfect Beautifier in Nature.

This admirable preparation of Elder Flowers is very fragrant as a Perfume, and so efficacious, that the result of its application cannot fail to prove, in the highest degree, beneficial and satisfactory.

The Proprietor has, in private practice, very narrowly watched its effects upon all Diseases of the Skin, and, from proofs incontestable, is enabled to pronounce it most decidedly superior to any other preparation which has come under his observation,—and he has, by way of experiment, tried all the most popular ones,—but none will bear even a slight comparison with it, either for its sweetness or its surprising effect in clearing and softening the Skin, in rendering the complexion beautifully fair, and in producing a surface of the most perfect elegance. All this is accomplished by its power of speedily and completely removing, not only those lesser enemies of Beauty, as Redness, Tan, Sun-burns, &c., but also all its more decided foes, which generally peep out in the most conspicuous places; they need not be named, but those who are plagued and annoyed by them may be assured that the Extract of Elder Flowers possesses an influence over them which must be seen to be believed; for it will remove every unsightly appearance, and improve every complexion, and, by persevering in its use, the Skin will become and continue delicately soft, clear, and smooth.

Elder Flowers have from the earliest ages been esteemed as a mild and harmless, yet most perfect beautifier of the Skin; but the difficulty of properly preserving them, so as to retain their virtues when dry, has put it beyond the power of people in general, or of the profession, to avail themselves of their usefulness. Elder Flower Water has been adopted in their stead, and found to a certain extent to answer as a substitute; but being a weak and imperfect preparation of the Flowers, and very liable to decomposition, it cannot be depended upon. This elegant and (in comparison with the Flowers) powerful preparation was discovered, like many of our most valuable medicinal agents, by mere accident; and the Proprietor having, from personal experience, good reason to think highly of Elder Flowers, as a remedy for all diseases of the Skin, at once determined, as opportunities offered, to give it an ample trial. The very first trial he made speaks volumes, and will be sufficient to induce any unprejudiced person who may require to try its effects. It was upon an elderly lady, who from her youth had a most inveterate humour in her face and neck, which had so increased with her age, that it was in a constant state of heat and irritation. She had lost all hope of a cure, having sought for the first advice, and used every means to remove it, but to no purpose. When this article was named, she willingly consented to try it, and, incredible as it may appear, the very first application considerably reduced the irritation, and from that period she lived in comparative ease,—of course, continued its use,—and in the space of about eight months the Skin had become perfectly healthy, had lost all its foul appearance, and had become nearly as clear as an infant's. Though the Proprietor has some hundreds of proofs of its efficacy, equal and even more surprising, he will instance only this first one, because such evidence in favour of a Medicine may be overcoloured, or entirely fabricated; but those who may wish to have a confirmation of the high character he has given it, need only make one trial, to be thoroughly convinced of the correctness of his statement. Such a circumstance to begin with naturally convinced him that it was an article which had just claims to a high distinction, and of course he did not fail to seek after and apply it in those cases which had baffled the skill of other Medical Men; and in doing so, his success was uniform. For great as is the variety of Diseases confined to the Skin, different as their causes may appear, whether local or constitutional, he invariably found the Extract of Elder Flowers to be absolute master of them all; it immediately improved, and ultimately cured, not only the mildest, but even the most malignant. It would require a large space to describe all the cases in which it might be used with advantage, but that is no reason why none should be named; therefore we will begin, as we have all done before, with infancy; and it is pretty well known that, for the first few years of our existence, we are very liable to and much distressed by many inflammatory affections of the Skin, more particularly about the neck, mouth, and ears: to avoid which, and to preserve the sweet appearance peculiar to childhood, it is only necessary to use GODFREY'S EXTRACT OF ELDER FLOWERS about two or three times in a week; and the best way to lay a good foundation for and make certain of a luxuriant crop of Hair, is to preserve the Skin in health, and resist the accumulation of Scurf. For that purpose, let the head be moistened with the Extract of Elder Flowers every other day, and the result will afford the most ample satisfaction, and show distinctly that this preparation is as well the ne plus ultra of the Nursery as of the Toilet.

As we advance in years, other annoying and perplexing diseases are to be avoided. The worst, perhaps, is RINGWORM; and the Proprietor feels not a little proud in having been the means of conferring upon his species a remedy so mild and pleasant, and yet so uniformly certain of not only preventing but absolutely curing Ringworm, and that, too, in the short space of one month: the worst cases are subdued in six weeks, at longest. When it has been proved to possess such power over a disease which has set at defiance the ingenuity of the first Medical Practitioners of the day, few will (at least, it is hoped so) be inclined to doubt the salutary influence it exerts over all the less virulent complaints incident to the Skin.

As we increase in years, or at that period which may be termed the spring of life, the COMPLEXION is subject to many and serious changes, when, from various causes, the Skin is likely to become discoloured, Humours generate and become confirmed, Pimples of different hues and sizes peep out, and Eruptions disfigure the countenance. At this trying age, all parents, who really value the comfort and welfare of their children, ought to avail themselves of every means to prevent the secretion of animalcules, which is the cause of all these evils. The Extract of Elder Flowers offers a ready, safe, and sure means of preventing it. It will destroy in embryo whatever may be generating in the small orifices of the Skin, preserve it free from taint, confirm it in health, and impart a beautiful transparency, which will probably afford a proud satisfaction for the rest of their days.

In the middle stage of life, when we become subject to Indigestion, which, by deranging the secretions, is very likely to check the necessary exhalation from the Skin, and thereby induce a sallow and bloated Countenance, sore Lips and Nose, inflammatory Eruptions, Carbuncles, &c., this preparation will be found of the greatest service, for by frequently damping the troubled part it will immediately stop and soon repel them; and, by keeping the pores of the Skin unobstructed, will cause the most fascinating pliability and softness, together with the constant appearance of cleanliness and health.

In the process of SHAVING it is invaluable, annihilating every pimple and all roughness, rendering the Skin soft, and its surface even and smooth, and preparing it so completely for the application of the razor, that the Proprietor earnestly enjoins every Gentleman who has any regard for his own comfort to try one Bottle, which will so well recommend itself, that he will undoubtedly recommend it to others.

In the autumn of life, when the Skin begins to lose its firmness, and become uneven, wrinkled, and loose, its effects are most consoling. Cleansing and bracing its pores, it secures a healthy and proper evaporation. And if, at a very advanced period of life, it will not preserve all the firmness, transparency, and freshness of youth, it will approximate very near to it; so much so, that, rely upon it, all who try it will be fully satisfied with its conservative effects.

Finally, it ought to be observed that, with whatever indifference many may profess to regard appearances, all are in some degree influenced by them,—many much more so than they themselves suspect; but, be that as it may, it is certainly to the interest of most, and must be desirable to all, to carry an appearance as pleasing as the nature of things will allow; and of whatever form the features may be, a clear and wholesome Skin must be deemed infinitely preferable to one which is sallow or covered with numerous eruptive specks and blemishes; therefore it is candidly submitted whether it does not behove every one to make use of those means which chance or science may have brought to light, to reduce and obviate, as much as possible, the ills which flesh is heir to.

Sold in Bottles, at 2s. 9d. each, by all Perfumers and Patent Medicine Venders.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE Indian journals are filled with local news of little interest; it requires some diligence to glean from our files the few incidents which deserve prominent notice. Our last Bombay papers are still wanting.

There was a rumour current at Loodiana that Dost Mahomed Khan was dead. His successor would probably be his eldest surviving son, Hyder Khan. The fact of his death, however, requires confirmation.

The King of Oude has married his minister's daughter. The event was sudden, and of a romantic character:—At a marriage festival in the minister's family, the king was present, and received nuzzurs from the children. The beauty of one of the daughters struck his majesty, who ordered the gangan, or badge of a bridegroom, to be fastened on his arm, and he demanded her immediately in marriage. The minister, Ali Nuckey Khan, was overwhelmed, not with joy, but perplexity, at this demand; for the young lady had been designed for the heir-apparent. A letter from Lucknow states that the minister, at first, made some demur to the marriage; upon which the king suggested this pertinent question, which proved a poser—"If you refuse me your daughter in marriage, of what use are you to me as a minister?"

In the Nizam's dominions, the fort of Dharoor has been razed at last; the Rohilla prisoners had been sent to Rall Mhow.

The Calcutta papers report that Deb Indro, who had been confined at Dacca, had escaped, hoisted his standard, and was on his way, with 500 followers, to make an attempt to wrest the guddee of Munnipore from Kirtee Sing.

The Lahore Chronicle states that a fort in the Bunnoo valley, held by ten men of the police corps, had been attacked by a considerable body of hill-men on the 24th May, whom they, however, repelled, with the loss of only one man.

A report had been spread, which caused some alarm at Lahore, that a mutiny had broken out at Umritsur, in a Sikh corps commanded by Jewun Sing. It turned out that Jewun Sing himself had fallen a victim to a drunken European soldier. The particulars are thus given in the Lahore Chronicle:—

"On the 10th June, a corporal's party was sent from Gurdaspur into the town of Umritsir to look for two European soldiers of the Fort garrison who were absent without leave. On passing the gate guard, the corporal requested the native officer to detain the absentees if they should pass that way. Shortly after the men came, were stopped, and taken into the guard-room, when one of them became furious, seized a sword and threatened the guard. Jewun Sing, the commandant, happening to be there, endeavoured to appease him, on which the fellow rushed at the commandant and inflicted such a severe wound over the neck that he died a few minutes after. The murderer, after mortally wounding the commandant, became so frantic, brandishing the sword of which he had obtained forcible possession, in so furious a manner, that the guard were afraid to approach him. He seized his opportunity, rushed out of the guard-room, cut down a donkey, and ran off straight to the gallows, which he began hacking with might and main. He was secured with great difficulty by a party of his comrades sent to apprehend him. He belongs to H.M.'s 10th foot, a company of which regiment is in garrison at Govindghur. The guard made a close prisoner of the other European, but appear not to have hurt him, although they were greatly enraged.

"The whole of Jewun Sing's regiment was naturally much excited, for he was greatly beloved by them. He was an excellent officer, and, while commanding his regiment, the only durbar one at Umritsir during the war, not only himself remained faithful, but on one occasion seized and summarily confined in irons a subadar and part of one company that proposed to join Shere Sing. To him in a great measure may be attributed the perfect peace that subsisted at Umritsir throughout the insurrection. Government rewarded him by trebling his pay, and giving him a handsome sword and dress of honour.

"This news reached Lahore yesterday evening; the intelligence of this morning is, that everything is perfectly quiet, and that no sort of disturbance is expected, though the citizens, as well as the soldiers, deeply sympathize with the family of the murdered officer."

Later advices report that nothing had occurred to show any bad spirit in the Sikh corps.

A meeting is stated to have been held at Lahore, at the residence of Lena Sing, which was attended by Sir H. Lawrence and other members of the Board of Administration, in order to receive a report by Lena Sing respecting the political and social state of Gholab Sing's dominions in the vale of Cashmere. The north-west papers surmise interference, if not annexation.

The Governor-General and the Commander-in-Chief continued at Simla. The latter appears to have incurred some personal risk. The Delhi Gazette relates the incident thus:—

"A letter from Simla, dated the 30th, mentions that as his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief was taking his usual ride on Wednesday morning, two discharged sepoy rushed out and seized his pony's head, loudly demanding 'justice;' they kept their hold until a European groom, who was the only attendant with Sir William, rushed to the rescue, and knocked one of the men down, when the other released his hold. Sir William is said to have had a narrow escape of falling over the precipice, as the sudden appearance of the men startled the pony so as to render the position of his rider dangerous."

The same journal understands that a committee has been ordered to assemble at Simla for the purpose of drawing up a code of regulations for the guidance of regimental messes. It likewise announces, on what it considers excellent authority, that the relief will not be large this year. "One or two European regiments, and a native cavalry regiment, may perhaps be moved; but it is the present intention of the powers that be to order all native infantry regiments to stand fast, as far as practicable, for we imagine the regiments at half-batta stations, whose time has expired, must be relieved—an arrangement entirely in accordance with the wish expressed by Sir Charles Napier, shortly before he left these shores."

The Act of the Indian Legislature, for relieving the sufferers through the dishonesty of Sir Thomas Turton, by the application of the "accumulated produce of certain unclaimed estates in the custody of the Administrator-General" to the payment of the losses, has passed the Council, and we have given it a place in another page. It is rather remarkable that, when Lord Jocelyn inquired last night in the House of Commons when it was likely the Act would pass, Mr. Elliot did not know!

The committee on ship-burning at Calcutta had met several times since its formation, but its investigations had not led to any important disclosures.

At the Madras Presidency much agitation prevailed amongst the natives respecting the case of the Brahmin convert and his wife, which we have noticed in another place. It is said that the relatives of the wife, who are represented as greatly incensed at questions put to the convert, meditate an appeal against Sir Wm. Burton's decision.

The correspondence between Sir H. Elliot and the Bombay Chamber of Commerce, relative to the charge made by Sir C. Napier against the Marquess of Dalhousie, on the subject of Mr. Arratoon, has been published, and we have given the chief portion of the correspondence in another page.

"We have merely to repeat what we have stated before, that Lord Dalhousie, so far from refusing the assistance required, offered at once to do everything in his power to assist the scheming Ferozepore shopkeeper in the fulfilment of his projects; that he referred him at once to the Lahore Board of Administration as the parties with whom all details must be arranged. Mr. Arratoon took no further steps in the matter, and instead of applying to the Board, off he flew to Sir Charles Napier, to pour his grievances into the ear of the retiring Commander-in-Chief, that these might be related and retailed whenever an occasion of abusing the Governor-General of India presented itself. One of the first and most conspicuous of these was the opportunity afforded by the members of the Byculla Club, where a large body of distinguished gentlemen, servants of Government, assembled to listen to the slander and abuse of those they were most bound to reverence and respect. Mr. Arratoon stated that he had timber in quantities lying cut on the Chenaub, and what he wanted was leave to carry this away. The Lahore Board reply that no leave can be given him, the forests on the Chenaub being in the territories of Goolab Sing. Of course the inference is, that the cut timber was nowhere but in the imaginations of Mr. Arratoon and Sir Charles Napier—that it had not in reality any actual existence at all, any more than the grievance associated with it."

A Mr. Sumner, in 1849, was imprisoned by the Portuguese authorities at Macao for not taking off his hat at the elevation of the host. Captain Keppel and his crew rescued him by force. Lord Palmerston, it appears, has apologized to the Portuguese Government for the violence of the British captain, and the British Government has granted a pension of 20*l.* per annum to the widow of a Portuguese soldier killed in the fray, and a douceur of 500 dollars each to two or three wounded soldiers; also 50*l.* to the jailor's daughter, because she had been frightened!

BENGAL.

THE HINDOO MOVEMENT.

We cannot but think that the great Hindoo meeting held on the 25th May, and the resolutions expressed and adopted at it, constitute one of the most important events that have occurred in India in the present century. It was in fact, though not in name, a Hindoo protest against one of the more prominent evils of the system of caste, which has been for centuries considered the bulwark of Hindooism. The gentlemen assembled at the Oriental Seminary on that day did not belong to the party commonly called "Young Bengal," and who are generally suspected of a desire to shake off the trammels of caste altogether; the great majority consisted of men whose highest pride it has been to preserve the purity of their priestly lineage, and the minutiae of their religious observances. They were of the party among the natives who still consider a furtive feast at Wilson's on champagne and beef, as an almost inexpiable crime, who gather round them a whole establishment of pundits, and perform the duties of Hindoo gentlemen as those duties were understood two thousand years ago. The Chairman of the meeting was a rajah best known among his countrymen for his valuable contributions to Sanscrit literature, and his inflexible adherence to every dogma of the Purans. His chief supporter, Rajah Kalee Krishna Bahadour, maintains a regular council of pundits, whose decisions upon matters of ceremonial or religious observance, carry as much weight in Calcutta as those of the Pope in the Catholic churches of the Continent. They are the very men who led the agitation against the Act for securing liberty of conscience, and who wish even now to strip every Christian convert of his ancestral patrimony. Yet it is men of this stamp, the most orthodox supporters of the ancient system, who have begun to acknowledge that the chain of caste is perhaps a little too tight, and that it may be possible to give additional strength to the body corporate by a slight relaxation of its stringency. The manner in which they propose to do this, is even more remarkable than the fact itself. Instead of proposing, as might have been expected, a form of expiation so tedious and severe, that none but those most earnest to be readmitted would consent to undergo it, they propose a pecuniary gift, not in itself of large amount, and gradually diminishing with the caste of the person communicated.

The effects of this immense change may easily be foreseen. The natives declare that it is but a slight relaxation of the chain, and that the barriers of caste remain unaltered, though the door of egress and ingress is a little widened. We believe, it will be found, that the chain has not been lightened, but that one link has been filed through. The institution of caste is in its very nature so burdensome to all but those for whom it was framed, viz. the priestly order, that the smallest loophole will be instantly taken advantage of, and day by day rendered wider. Caste must either exist in its entirety, or gradually cease altogether. In Calcutta, at this present moment, there are hundreds of young men who, though not exactly Christians, are yet deeply convinced of the superiority of the Gospel creed to their own, and who would gladly embrace any opportunity of bursting their fetters and avowing openly the convictions they secretly entertain. Hitherto, the great obstacle to such a course has been the very natural dread, that they must burn their ships behind them, and can never again be received among their own communion should a vacillation of opinion induce them to desire such a course. This dread will now be removed, that is, if the proposal made at the meeting be carried. They may live to the latest moment of their lives as free from the bonds of caste as Europeans, and then, by a donation and a dinner to the ever ready priests, restore, not only themselves, but their children, to the full enjoyment of the rights and privileges of Hindooism.

We have one more word to say, and it is rather for our readers in England than those in India. We have heard a great deal too much of late of the small number of converts made in Bengal, and of the gradual extinction of missionary usefulness. The meeting of which we have just spoken, is in itself a sufficient answer to all such calumnies. The very foundations of native society must have been shaken before men, aptly described as more Hindoo than the Poorans, would come forward with a proposal for lightening the massive chain which for two thousand years has crushed the intellectual and religious activity of one-eighth of the human race, and that for the avowed object of saving Hindooism from the encroachments of Christianity. The meeting, it is evident, looked upon the missionaries as the great enemies whose exertions and activity required to be baffled, and while they acknowledged that it was hopeless to attempt to supplant them as educators of youth, declared that their influence was making itself felt through every grade of native society. —Friend of India, June 5.

SIR T. TURTON'S DEFALCATIONS.

An Act passed the council of India on the 6th June, 1851 (No. V. of 1851), "For Relief of certain Sufferers by the Insolvency of Sir Thomas Turton, Baronet," which recites the Act of Parliament, the 40th Geo. 3, and that Sir Thomas F. M. Turton, Baronet, as registrar of the Ecclesiastical Court at Fort William in Bengal, was empowered to administer to the estates of all British subjects dying intestate within the said presidency, in default of any claim made and established on behalf of any next of kin or creditor to the deceased; and that whereas the said Sir Thomas, on the 25th February, 1848, resigned the office of registrar, then being insolvent, and unable to pay several large sums of money due to the owners of sundry estates to which he had administered or had assumed to administer under the power vested in him by the said Act, and also other sums of money due to the owners of sundry estates of which he had taken charge as such registrar, and also other sums of money belonging either to suitors of the Supreme Court of Judicature at Fort William, or other persons for whose benefit a trust was created in the said Sir Thomas, by reason of his holding the office of registrar of the said court, on its Ecclesiastical, Equity, and Admiralty sides, or as curator or official trustee; and, whereas certain commissioners, appointed by order of the Supreme Court of Judicature at Fort William, had reported the names and titles of the several estates, suitors, and other persons to whom, upon the account taken by them, money, or securities for money, appeared to be due by the said Sir Thomas; and whereas it is deemed expedient that the said sufferers by the insolvency of the said Sir Thomas Turton be reimbursed their losses out of the accumulated produce of certain unclaimed estates, now in the custody and management of the administrator-general, due provision being made for securing the interest of the rightful claimants thereunto, if any shall hereafter appear; and it then enacts as follows:—

1. The net proceeds of all estates to which the registrar of the Ecclesiastical Court has administered in right, or under colour of his office under the said Act of Parliament, and which from the official books and accounts of the registrar appear to have been in his custody or control ready to be distributed before the 1st day of January, 1836, and to have been since that time unclaimed, and also from time to time the net proceeds of all estates to which the registrar or the administrator-general had administered, or to which the administrator-general shall hereafter administer, and which shall in like manner appear to have continued for fifteen years in his custody or control unclaimed, shall be transferred and paid, as the same respectively accrue, to the sub-treasurer of the East-India Company at Fort William, and be carried to the account and credit of the East-India Company for the general purposes of government; and the receipt of the said sub-treasurer shall be a full indemnity and discharge to the administrator-general.

2. If any claim shall be hereafter made to any part of the net proceeds of any estate so transferred and paid to the account and credit of the East-India Company, and established to the satisfaction of the administrator-general and accountant to the Government of Bengal for the time being, the accountant shall direct the sub-treasurer to repay, and the sub-treasurer shall thereupon repay the principal sum so paid or represented by the securities so transferred, or so much thereof as shall appear to be due to the claimant out of the monies of the East-India Company in his custody. If the claim is not established to the satisfaction of the administrator-general and accountant, the claimant may apply by petition to the Supreme Court against the East-India Company and administrator-general; and, after taking evidence, either orally, or on affidavit in a summary way, as the Court shall think fit, the Court shall make such orders on the petition as justice requires.

3. The accountant to the Government of Bengal is authorized and required from time to time to direct the sub-treasurer to pay, and the sub-treasurer shall thereupon pay, out of the monies of the East-India Company in his custody, such sums as will be sufficient to pay off and discharge to such persons as shall appear to be entitled thereunto, as the lawful representatives of the intestates and others named in the schedules (A), (B), (C), (D), annexed to the Commissioners' report, and also to the suitors and other persons entitled to the equity deposits and trust monies in the suits and under the trusts named in the schedules (E) and (F), annexed to the said report and other deposits and trust monies (if any) paid or intrusted to Sir Thomas by order of the Court, and to the net proceeds of the estate of Ramnarain Coondoo, of which Sir Thomas was curator, the several principal sums of money which, upon the final adjustment of the accounts of their several claims and estates, shall appear to have been due to them respectively from Sir Thomas on the 25th February, 1848, and to be then still due and unsatisfied; and also the balance due by the said Sir Thomas to Government in respect of court fees received by him as registrar of the said Court, but not accounted for by him to Government.

COPPER ORES IN DEOGHUR.

Capt. W. S. Sherwill, revenue surveyor, has given the following official account of the discovery of copper ores in the Deoghur mines:—"During the present month, and whilst engaged surveying zillahs Beerbhoom and Bhaugulpoor, I was requested by Mr. Vincent, deputy magistrate of Deoghur, to visit and give my opinion upon a vein of copper that had a few months previously been accidentally discovered by a native, and by him reported to Mr. Vincent.

"Deoghur, or Bijnath, is a small town in zillah Beerbhoom, the inhabitants chiefly Brahmins. The town is situated on the great primitive Table-land, which extends from near Burdwan to the Dunna Ghat, in Behar, and which is composed of granite, gneiss, serpentine, greenstone, quartz rock, &c., the gneiss strata are much contorted, often vertical, generally inclined and abundantly traversed by greenstone dykes. The appearance of the country is pleasing, the land is undulating, well wooded, and studded with detached hills of rounded masses of garnetiferous gneiss. The spot where the copper is found is situated in the lands of the village of Byrûki, of Tuppeh Deoghur, Saruth of zillah Beerbhoom, and about one mile from the common boundary of zillahs Beerbhoom and Bhaugulpoor, eight miles N.W. from Deoghur or Bijnath, and on the watershed of the high land of Beerbhoom; the streams which flow to the south falling into the Hooghly, those flowing to the north falling into the Ganges; it is situated in a dense jungle of Asun, Sakû, Dhow, Kunchnar, Keud, Jâmun, Aonla, Kusmûbhâ, Chirownjee, and is on the fork or junction of two small mountain torrents, which discharge their waters into the Chandun river, a tributary to the Ganges, which discharges itself into the Ganges near Bhaugulpoor; these torrents and the Chandun river are mere dry sandy channels during the cold and hot weather.

"The occasion of the copper being brought to light was the hill men bringing in to Mr. Vincent small pieces of a bright green species of waterworn felspar, which at once showed the existence of the ore. The ground in the immediate neighbourhood of the ore is pretty freely strewn with green felspar, and with weather and waterworn fragments of the ore embedded in the felspar. The immediate superficial soil is composed of quartz, felspar, hornblende, fragments of gneiss, black mica, silvery mica, and shorl. The surface veins run east and west, and present the ore in irregular masses of $\frac{3}{4}$ of an inch broad, so much corroded by atmospheric influence as to appear as a soft friable red, yellow, liver-coloured or garnet-coloured earth; but upon digging a couple of feet below the surface of the country, the veins become a compact liver-coloured mass, spangled with shining particles of copper; the whole enclosed in a soft friable apple-green, yellow or white felspathic rock. Traversing the copper, from north to south, small veins of lead appear, which occasionally form the containing walls to the copper. I traced the vein of copper for about 100 feet east and west, and dug to the depth of two feet only. I have smelted, with the aid of coal dug from the Banslee Kullah in the Rajmuhul hills, some of the ore, which has given a return of 30 per cent. of good copper; inferior specimens, mostly waterworn pieces, picked up on the surface, gave 25 per cent. I have sent a large amount of the specimens, together with the smelted ore, to Mr. Piddington, Curator to the Geological Museum attached to the Asiatic Society, and have requested that gentleman to furnish you with a detailed account of its value, purity, &c., and which will form an addendum to this report."

Mr. Piddington, in his report, states that the ores contain a proportion of silver; "that from two of the classes of ores, of which only he could obtain a sufficient quantity for the experiment, the produce in silver has been a fair and good average; though these are still but surface specimens, and that moreover (and upon this depends their value) the Spanish American process of amalgamation can be successfully practised at what may be supposed theoretically the very worst period of the year in India. We have now to hope that the deposits, if wrought, will be found abundant." He adds, "In a geological and mineralogical point of view the discovery of these ores in a country yet so little known to us holds out some hope that we are only yet at the threshold of what we have still to find; but it will be the first successful working of a mine which will stimulate speculation in that branch of industry."

MEASUREMENT OF BRITISH AND AMERICAN TONNAGE.

The Hurkaru, of the 9th, contained some remarks with reference to a stir recently made by some of our merchants, urging the Chamber of Commerce to take steps towards inducing the Government to interfere in some way or other to place English ships on an equal footing with the American, which at the present they are not, because, in the first place, the vessels of our transatlantic friends are manned by a much smaller number of hands; and, secondly, because they pay port duties only upon their registered tonnage, whilst they carry a much larger cargo. Our contemporary contests the validity of the first ground, and maintains that the Americans are able to work their ships with comparatively fewer hands, owing to the mechanical means and appliances introduced in their vessels, (which he recommends British shipowners to adopt without loss of time. We cannot admit the soundness of such argument, for as long as ships are bound by Act of Parliament to be manned with no less than a certain number of hands, no mechanical contrivance can be pleaded as an exception from that law, and therefore American vessels, which are not bound by any such regulations, will so long have the advantage over English. Whether American ships are sufficiently manned or not, and whether English ships carry more than the requisite number of hands to ensure their being properly worked, is a question which chiefly concerns the Insurance offices; but it is indisputable, that in ships of equal tonnage, the expenses must be considerably less in those which are not bound by any particular laws as to the number of their crew, and contrive to sail with as few hands as possible.

As regards tonnage, it is evident, that if a ship carries a much larger cargo than her registered tonnage, and pays port dues according to the latter, it must make a considerable difference in her expenses. Now it is well known that American vessels carry by far a greater cargo than British ships do in proportion to their respective registered tonnage, and though the American ton is computed at 40 cubic feet, yet the surplus cargo is generally more than double the difference between the American and English ton. But it is the fault of the public authorities if foreign ships are not measured here, according to the English Register Act, as we have nothing to do with foreign measurement, nor ought the register of a foreign ship to be regarded for a moment by the port officers, but, in common justice, all vessels should be made to pay according to one rule, as is done in England, where every foreign ship is measured for port dues.

This cannot, however, be expected, as it would entail too much trouble upon the government officials, particularly on the surveyors, who actually have nothing to do. We are told that in Austria a regulation exists, by which all port dues are levied on the computed tonnage of the export cargo, and though there may be a few vessels that actually sail in ballast, yet as it is the general interest of ships to take in as much cargo as they can carry, on the whole, Government get their full dues, whilst the system in itself is more equitable towards all parties.—Englishman, June 11.

DARJEELING.

The following extract of a letter speaks well for the climate of the Sikhim hills:—

"Darjeeling, May 31.—I was determined to stay a month before I allowed myself to form a deliberate opinion of this place. I have now come to the conclusion that for healthiness it is superior to England. Its effects on me have been wonderful. I was, I feel now, in a most critical state when I left Calcutta. The disease was of so dangerous a nature, and broken as my health was by repeated illnesses, I am sure I should never have got better if I had remained in Calcutta. I was so reduced in strength on my journey that I could hardly walk across the verandah at the Titalya Dawk Bungalow, but the next morning, directly we had crossed the Terai Forest, and began the ascent of the mountains, I felt myself on the high road to recovery, and I thank God most heartily that I have continued to improve ever since. The scenery here is magnificent. No one could imagine the grandeur of the mountain scenery unless they had witnessed it. It is quite bewildering by its beauty; mountain is piled upon mountain in the wildest confusion—until the whole grand prospect is terminated by the snowy range of the Himalayas; and Kunchinjunga—the highest mountain in the world (28,000 feet) rears his lofty crest—crowned with eternal snows. The distance of this noble mountain, in a direct line, is only 35 miles, and at times the air is so transparent, so clear, that with a good glass the smallest object is visible on its sides, and I have frequently seen snow slips or avalanches as plainly as if the distance was only a mile or two off, so bright and clear is the atmosphere. The house where I am living stands in the bight of a range of mountains on the very saddle of the range—and on one side you look down into a valley 6,000 feet below, where the Rugnoo and Rungeet flow with all the impetuosity of mountain rivers—while on the other side you see down a valley, but not so steep, for nearly the same distance to the westward. I am now able to take a great deal of exercise. I rise at five, take a cup of coffee, and then start for my regular morning walk round the saddle of the Jilla Puhar. This is eight miles, the walk takes me two hours and a half, and by the time I get home, I am glad to take a bowl of ripe raspberries and cream, for the keen mountain air gives you an appetite. This is the hottest season of the year, and yet I have seldom seen the thermometer above 73, never above 75 in an open verandah, while in the house it is from 65 to 70; of a morning it ranges from 50 to 58. They burn fires morning and evening, and sometimes all day, and if you go out to dinner you are glad to send a pea-jacket or cloak to put on, when you leave the fireside, and come out in the cool air. I have never seen so many rosy faces among children before; rosy cheeks are common at home, but here they are universal. I went to see the convent, and the nun that opened the door, instead of looking cadaverous as a nun ought to do, was as rosy as a milkmaid. What greater proof can you have of a climate, where the very nuns cannot look pale! Living is as cheap or cheaper here than in Calcutta. House rent for a furnished house, from 50 to 100 rupees, fowls, ducks, butter, milk, eggs, vegetables, as cheap as Calcutta. Bread a little dearer, and meat costs more per joint; but then, as it keeps for days instead of hours, it is actually cheaper than in Calcutta. Wine and beer are one-third dearer."—Hurkaru, June 12.

THE BENGAL CIVIL SERVICE ANNUITY FUND.

We have obtained a copy of the report of the committee, appointed at the special general meeting of subscribers to the Bengal Civil Service Annuity Fund, on the 1st of April, 1850, and now proceed to give a brief notice of it. Twenty-five years have elapsed since the fund was established, and the time has now come round for reviewing its operations, and comparing its results with the anticipation of the Honourable Court, as well as for those modifications which the experience of this long period suggests. The rules of the fund are too well known to those who are interested in it, to render it necessary to recapitulate them from the report. It may be sufficient, therefore, to state that the Civil Annuity Fund is differently constituted from all other funds of a similar character in India. It was doubtless the intention of the Court to give the civilian a pension of £500 a year, after twenty-five years' service, and to assist him in providing an annuity from his own subscriptions, to which he should be entitled at the same time with the pension. But the Court adopted a curious and round-about plan for the accomplishment of this object, and established a most complicated system of accounts and proceedings. The civilian was to contribute four per cent. from his allowances, to the annuity fund; the Court was to contribute an equal amount, and to allow six per cent. interest on the accumulated fund: the pension and the annuity were to be blended together, under the term of an annuity of £1,000 a year, after the full period of service, and the civilian was required to make good half its value, or Rs. 53,920, before he could enjoy it. The difference between this sum and the aggregate of his monthly subscriptions in twenty-five years, with six per cent. interest, was to be made up by a fine. It was originally supposed by the Court that the accumulated value of a civilian's contributions, at the end of twenty-five years, would be Co.'s Rs. 41,467, and that the fine he would be required to pay to be entitled to the annuity would be Co.'s Rs. 12,453. The Court also calculated the number of civilians likely to retire upon the annuity in the twenty-five years at 225. It has actually been only 167. Of the 134 deceased subscribers, no fewer than 48 died after they had completed their service of twenty-five years, and many of them would have retired upon annuities, but for their inability to pay the fine, in estimating which the Court are found to have been singularly mistaken. In consequence of the general reduction of allowances, the twenty-one subscribers who are entitled by length of service to annuities in the present year will have to make good, not Rs. 12,453, but, on an average, Rs. 26,522. This sum, however, includes what we cannot but consider an iniquitous addition which has been made to the subscription for "quarterly and to date of decease payments." We are happy to perceive that the committee are anxious to abolish it.

The report furnishes us with some important data regarding the rapid deterioration of the financial position and prospects of the service. The eleven subscribers, who are now qualified by twenty-five years' service for the annuity, were receiving in 1835, that is, after fifteen years' service, aggregate allowances (one of them being on furlough) of Rs. 293,000 a year. But the situations held at the close of 1850, by the nine subscribers who arrived in India in 1835, and who have consequently been fifteen years in the service, give them an aggregate income of only Rs. 97,000 annually (one being on furlough.) In the former case the average income of each civilian, after fifteen years' service, was Rs. 29,300 a year, in the latter, Rs. 12,125. The rule which the Directors laid down in 1825 is therefore utterly inapplicable to the circumstances of 1850. But there are few bodies so slow in accommodating themselves to the mutation of circumstances as the Court, and we can scarcely expect to see the modifications proposed by the committee carried into effect during the present charter. The proposals they have made in their report are in accordance with the general wishes of the subscribers at this presidency on this subject. At present a civilian is not allowed to retire after his period of 25 years' service, till he has completed the payment for one-half the value of his annuity. But there is no absolute necessity, beyond the inscrutable fiat of Leadenhall-street, that a man who is willing to retire on £750 a year, should be absolutely constrained to remain in the country, encumbering the ladder of promotion, till he has paid up the value of an annuity of £1,000. The committee propose, therefore, to ask the Court to grant permission to the members of the civil service to retire on a pension of £500 a year after twenty-five years' service, together with that amount of annuity which their accumulated subscriptions may be equivalent to. The Report gives many good and valid reasons for this modification of the rules, but it omits the strongest of all reasons—that the modified rule is the dictate of common sense.

But why should the Court restrict the number of retirements, as they do, in each year to nine (which the committee are anxious to increase to ten)? This limitation of the number of pensions is not enforced on any other branch of the service. Every military, medical, and clerical officer is at liberty to quit their service with his pension, as soon as his claim to it is matured by the length of his service. Why should a different rule be made in reference to the civil service? The committee state that, under the present system, there will be only ninety-six annuities, that is pensions, available on the 1st May, 1857, whereas there will be 207 subscribers on that date, qualified by twenty-five years' service to take annuities. The only reasonable mode of dealing with the retiring allowances of the civil service, is to allow every man to take his pension, at the end of twenty-five years, and to retire from the service with whatever annuity his aggregate subscriptions may entitle him to.

The vetata questio of allowing a refund of the excess of subscriptions beyond the half value of the annuity, and permitting those whose subscriptions have already entitled them to an annuity to discontinue any farther payments, is fully discussed in this report; and six of the members of the committee have recorded their rejection of this claim, while one of them, Mr. Harvey, has drawn up a separate minute, in which he espouses it. The question must be considered as referring to the past rather than to the future. The diminution in the scale of allowances in the civil service is at present so great, that there is not the remotest chance of any such contingency hereafter. Of the twenty-one subscribers entitled by length of service to an annuity in the present year, seven will have to make good, on an average, Rs. 19,390, and the remaining fourteen no less a sum than Rs. 30,086 each, for the half-value of the annuity. There will therefore be a deficiency in every future case, and not an excess. But, on the 1st May, 1850, there were 36 members belonging to the palmy days of the service, and who had subscribed more than the half value of an annuity on their lives, and the aggregate excess of their subscriptions was Rs. 774,141. It must be remembered that after the fund was once established, every civilian was obliged by his covenant to join it, but that it was left optional with the civilians in the service when it commenced, to join it or not. In dealing therefore with the case of the 36 members who have paid more than the half value of their annuity, we have to refer to the inducement which the Court offered the members of the service in 1824 to connect themselves with the fund; that is, to the rules which they laid down for it. The clear stipulation was, that the civilian was to receive on his retirement an annuity of £1,000 at a purchase-money of half the value of the annuity, and no more. This rule most clearly and unequivocally provides that no civilian shall be required to pay more than one-half the value of his annuity, or Rs. 53,920, and that he is entitled to a refund of all excess of subscriptions beyond this amount. The report endeavours to explain away the application of the words and no more to the excess of subscriptions, by a long and laboured argument, which, however, carries little satisfaction to the mind. It also discusses the expediency of allowing or withholding the repayment of the excess, but the question appears to us to be one of right, and not of expediency. The Court of Directors, moreover, must be allowed to be the best interpreters of their own proposal, and the explanation of the terms of it must be conclusive. In their letter to the Government of Bengal, dated the 1st September, 1841, they state, with respect to refund of subscriptions, "we are disposed to meet the views of the majority of the subscribers to the extent of confining refunds to the excess which may have been paid beyond the half value of the annuity, such an arrangement being in accordance with the rules of the fund." We have not space to go over the arguments which have been used for and against the measure, but we must confess, that the reasons given in Mr. Harvey's minute for a refund of all excess subscriptions, independently of the support they derive from the express declaration of the Court of Directors, appear, in our humble opinion, to be absolutely irrefutable.

With the exception of that portion of the report which bears on this question, it is in the highest degree satisfactory, and the improvements which it suggests in the rules of the fund are highly desirable; only, instead of asking the Court to increase the number of annuities from nine to ten, they should, we think, have summoned courage to propose the broader principle of restricting them to no specific number, but of allowing every member of the service to retire on his pension at the end of twenty-five years.—Friend of India.

MISCELLANEOUS.

PUNJAB ANTIQUITIES.—We have learnt with much satisfaction that the Governor-General has turned his serious attention to the propriety of preserving, and comparatively restoring, the works of former dynasties that may be in existence in various parts of the Punjab, and though the Government would certainly not be justified in going to any great expense on this side, it is pleasant to know that any interest is manifested in so desirable a direction. It is only much to be regretted that his lordship did not give expression to his views on this interesting subject before some, at least, of the buildings about Lahore fell victims to the ruthless craving of the executive engineers for bricks. We may, however, now congratulate ourselves on that reign of terror being over, and look forward to steps being taken for the careful preservation of the few remaining relics of former dynasties about Lahore.—Lahore Chron.

CONVERSIONS.—The son of a respectable native of Bahala, in the Twenty-four Pargunnahs, having renounced the errors of Hinduism, has recently embraced the faith inculcated in the Gospel. The neophyte, on the recent conversions in the Bhowanipore Missionary School, was withdrawn from it, and his parents were negotiating for his marriage, fixing the 31st inst. for his wedding-day, when, one morning, he contrived to effect his escape from his parents, and took up quarters with the missionaries of the aforesaid institution, to be baptized. His mother and relatives repaired to the neighbourhood of the mission-house, to bring him back; but the young man remained steadfast to embrace the Christian religion, in spite of all their entreaties and remonstrances with him for hours.—Citizen, May 27.

A statement having been made at the meeting held in the Oriental Seminary on the 25th May, to the effect that certain Hindu converts (Chundernauth Banargee, Kassinauth Dotto, Kassubchunder Halder, and Taraprosaud Chatterjee) were inclined to return to Hinduism, if means were adopted to render such a step practicable, they have addressed a letter to the Hurkaru, denying the statement. They say: "We embraced Christianity because we believed it to be true; nor have we discovered anything in it to lead us to an opposite opinion. The inhabitants of Kalighat and the neighbourhood know that most of us had nothing of a worldly nature to gain by embracing Christianity, since our friends loved us tenderly, and our families are of acknowledged respectability. Some of us, since we became Christians, have been invited to return to our homes, and the most tempting offers have been made to us; but we have invariably replied, that, though wishful to live on terms of concord with our relatives, we would not forsake Christianity, nor willingly do anything inconsistent with its commandments. What, therefore, may be done to render the return of Christians to Hinduism practicable, we have not the smallest intention of availing ourselves of such an arrangement."

THE AGRA BANK.—The report of the auditors on the affairs of the Agra Bank has been published. The scrutiny they seem to have undergone appears to have been most searching, and the results are in the last degree satisfactory.

BENGAL MILITARY FUND.—The Englishman calls attention to the case of a colonel of a native corps, who proceeded to Europe on sick certificate early in 1850, drawing from the Military Fund both passage-money and outfit, and making two solemn declarations with reference to those demands; that, as respected the first, he was not worth Rs. 5,000, and for the second, that he was not possessed of Rs. 2,000, or property of any kind whatever to that amount; and it observes: "Now here is a gentleman,—and a religious gentleman, too,—who, whilst a full colonel in the Bengal army, draws his off-reckonings, and possessing say a thousand a year certain as long as he lives, solemnly and sincerely declares that he is not worth Rs. 2,000; who, coming down from a brigade command, draws on and receives from the management of that institution of which we are speaking Co.'s Rs. 300 to buy a sea outfit, and find himself, at the expense of the Fund, in comforts for the voyage home,—flannel waistcoats, cheroots, thick shoes, powder and heavy shot for albatrosses, shirts, or spare soda-water, as the case may be! Is this, or is it not, we ask, disgraceful to the management of the Fund? or if not, in what state must the rules of an institution be, which permits such abuse of its funds and objects?"

THE AGRICULTURAL AND HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY OF INDIA are making great efforts to improve their garden, particularly that portion of it dedicated to the cultivation of fruit. With this object they have written to China for a supply of the best descriptions of fruit-trees flourishing in that country.

LORD DALHOUSIE'S RESIDENCE IN THE NORTH-WEST has been beneficial in the highest degree to the settlement of the Punjab. Too much praise cannot be given to the efforts which have been made for the consolidation of our institutions in that new country, the success of which is in a great degree owing to the deep interest he has taken in them. More progress has been made in two years in that principality than was made in twenty in Bengal. This, of course, is to be ascribed in part to the greater experience we have acquired in the science of Oriental administration, and partly to the superior agency at the disposal of Government; but it is certain that, without the personal influence of the head of the Government, exercised on the spot, on the occasion of every reference to him, no such progress could have been expected. But the attention bestowed on that country has been abstracted from the rest of the empire, and the interests of other provinces have suffered to the same extent to which those of the Punjab have benefited. Considering how power has been centralized by Parliament in the hands of the Governor-General, even to the appointment of a surgeon in Calcutta, how innumerable must be the references to him on every subject, it is easy to understand the boundless inconvenience which must result from his residence in the Hills. As this absence, even in time of peace, has now received the official sanction of the Court of Directors, some arrangements must be made, at the termination of the present Act, for readjusting the various powers of the Governments in India. The Governor-General, when absent from his Council, takes with him all the executive powers of the Government of India; and the first question which arises is, of what use, then, is the Council of India in Calcutta, when, for forty months out of sixty, the Governor-General is twelve or fifteen hundred miles from it, and is not obliged to consult its members upon any question whatever?—Friend of India.

CAPT. CLOSE.—The friends of Capt. Close, of the Gwalior Contingent, will doubtless be rejoiced to learn that there is nothing in the case now pending between him and Sir Richmond Shakespear (recently alluded to in the Delhi Gazette), to occasion the slightest anxiety to any one except Sir Richmond himself, who has utterly and ludicrously failed to substantiate a single charge, or even to attach an atom of blame to any of Captain Close's proceedings.—Englishman, June 12.

DAKOOTIE.—It is a very extraordinary feature of the present day in this country, that while the graver crimes of thuggee and dakoitee are rapidly disappearing from the criminal calendar of other parts of India, the latter has recently become a main feature in the public history of Bengal, the oldest province of Hindostan that fell under British rule. Hardly a day passes without our finding, in some of the Calcutta journals, accounts, either contributed direct, or copied from the native papers, of some more or less desperate gang-robbery, accompanied by violence, and generally attended with success. The frequency of these outrages against the persons and property of the inhabitants of the lower provinces, the systematic manner in which they are committed, the number of individuals that seem to be engaged in them, and the apparent difficulty in bringing the offenders to justice, indicate the existence of a police either extremely lax in the performance of its duties, or totally inadequate to the repression of crime; a state of things by no means creditable to those intrusted with the superintendence of a most important branch of the public service.—Lahore Chron.

GOVERNMENT SCHOOL AT UMRITSUR.—We have been favoured with the sight of a private letter from Umritsur (in the Punjab) giving an interesting account of the opening of the Government school there, and of the great eagerness of the people to learn. The following are extracts:—"The school was opened under the direction of Mr. Saunders on the 19th May, with ninety boys, thirty of whom had applied for studying the English language; about forty-two the Persian, and the rest for learning the Goormukhy language. For the last four days we have got many more pupils. The number of English students has arisen to about fifty, and the number of Persian to about eighty-two. The number of Goormukhy students has also greatly increased, and it is obvious that the present limited number of masters will be unable to manage them properly. There are in all 156 pupils (the school has only been opened five days), and we do not know how many we may get by to-morrow morning. The desire of learning the English language is common to all classes of people, of every rank, and every degree of age; and, what appears strange, the oldest are most desirous. However, except we obtain soon a considerable supply of school-books, and particularly English school-books, the progress of the school will be greatly impeded. At present the want of them is very much felt. The school commences at six o'clock in the morning and breaks at eleven. The school building is not yet completed, and will take at least three months to be completely finished. The school is built on the bank of that remarkable tank, from which the city itself (as the people say) takes its name. It is about a hundred yards square, and incrustured with marble. In the midst of it stands the temple Guru Nanuc, made of beautiful white marble, incrustured with gold. Every morning the people assemble together to bathe in the tank and worship in the temple, which is called the Durbar, or preaching-place of the Guru."—Delhi Gazette, June 11.

CAPT. STOCKLEY.—We understand that the decision of Government on the finding of the Court of Inquiry held on Capt. Stockley, of the 7th B.N.I., commanding the Malwa Bheel Corps, and which we mentioned as having closed its sittings in our issue of 16th April last, has been communicated to the Bombay Government. Capt. Stockley is honourably acquitted of all the charges brought against him by Lieut. Campbell, his late second in command, and is ordered to resume the command of his regiment. The Governor-General, however, notices great neglect in the method of keeping the accounts of the corps, which he desires shall be amended in future. Lieut. Campbell is not likely to be restored to his staff appointment; the Court of Inquiry, we understand, marked their disapprobation of his conduct somewhat strongly. We observe our correspondent misled us regarding the resident of Indore's part in the transaction. We now learn that he was in no ways concerned. The charges against Capt. Stockley were sent by Lieut. Campbell direct to the Bombay Government, who forwarded them to the Commander-in-Chief, thereupon the Court of Inquiry was ordered, the result of which we have just given.—Delhi Gaz. June 7.

TRAVELLING IN THE HILLS.—A party of gentlemen from this station, who recently proceeded to the Chumba range, had a very narrow escape during a snow-storm that occurred when near the crest of the mountains. Having the advantage of a good guide, they made for an isolated rock, on which they weathered the storm; but some unfortunate servants, who were in the rear, and who were abandoned by the koolies with whom they were travelling, were buried, and we regret to add perished, in the snow.—Lahore Chron. June 7.

COMPULSORY MESS.—We have it on good authority that the question of compulsory messes is all but decided, a large majority of commanding officers being in favour of the measure. We have also been informed that in the event of the order being issued, certain arrangements will take place with a view to establishing a controlling power such as exists in her Majesty's service, and a recommendation will be forwarded to the Court of Directors to increase the Government donation from 120 to 180 or 200 rupees per mensem. It remains to be seen whether in these economical days, the Honorable Court will consider themselves justified in countenancing the outlay of funds in excess, even to further an object so fraught with benefit to their army.—Delhi Gazette, June 11.

THE RELIEF.—We have it on what we consider excellent authority, that the relief will not be large this year. One or two European regiments, and a native cavalry regiment, may perhaps be moved, but it is the present intention of "the powers that be" to order all native infantry regiments to stand fast, as far as practicable, for we imagine the regiments at half-batta stations, whose time has expired, must be relieved—an arrangement entirely in accordance with the wish expressed by Sir Charles Napier, shortly before he left these shores.—Ibid.

THE EXAMINATION ORDER.—The Citizen furnishes a singular instance of the injustice which the otherwise admirable order of the Court of Directors, requiring every officer to pass his examination, or be remanded to regimental duty, has inflicted upon a few individuals. Lieutenant Maisey, a young officer who had previously distinguished himself by unusual attainments in archaeology, had been selected by the Lieut. Governor of Agra to collect the fullest information in his power, regarding the antiquities at Ramanode, a place in Scindia's dominions. These antiquities had been declared by Sir Henry Elliot to be of the very greatest importance to the history of India, and Mr. Thomson's appointment was accordingly confirmed by Lord Hardinge. In pursuit of his object, Lieut. Maisey laboured for three years, in a spot isolated from all the rest of the world, and completed a number of highly beautiful and valuable sketches. Unfortunately, he neglected the "black classics" in the interim, and was unable to pass the committee of examination. He has accordingly been remanded to his regiment, where his peculiar abilities will be useless to the state, and the work on which he was engaged has been brought to an abrupt termination.

BANKS.—The Benares Bank has been broken up, the Cawnpore Bank wound up with much credit to all concerned, and two mossul mercantile institutions, rivals of the great Agra Leviathan, have thus disappeared from the scene of its own exclusive and highly-profitable labours. A third is now about to vacate its mossul position, if we may judge from the terms of an advertisement, from which we learn that, if the shareholders approve of the scheme proposed by the present directors, the N.W. Bank will transfer its head-quarters from Meerut to Calcutta; a change of name as well as location will, in the event of the proposition being carried, be absolutely necessary.—Lahore Chron. June 4.

MAJOR WATT.—We are sure there are very few who were acquainted with the late Major Alexander Watt, who will not join with us in considering his loss a public one: he was a gallant soldier, a firm friend, an honest man, and a good Christian. It has redounded greatly to his credit that, after some twenty years' service in the commissariat department, he went home a poor man. Had it not been for his anxiety to join his regiment on service, during the Sutlej campaign, and for which purpose he threw up his staff appointment, we might have now seen him, had he been spared, either commissary-general, or at least deputy. It is indeed said that Lord Dalhousie told the major that had he been aware of his services in the department, had he even known there was such a man, he would have had much pleasure in advancing him. But his name was not mentioned, and the major was not appointed, simply because he was not the man to push himself into notice. However, he was afterwards sent up on special commissariat duty to Allahabad, at a time when the services of an experienced officer were required at that great entrepôt during the Punjab campaign. He was afterwards deputed by the Governor-General to visit and inspect all the commissariat offices in the lower provinces, in fact, we believe all below Meerut, including those to the south of the Jumna. He had only got as far as Daka, when he was forced to go home on medical certificate.

THE TEMPLE OF JUGGURNAUTH.—The Poornochandroday has the following remarks on the Act relative to the withdrawal by Government of all countenance and aid from the shrine of Juggurnauth:—"The missionaries are right glad at the promulgation of the late Act, which suspends the state allowance to the temple of Juggurnauth. They are loud in their praises of Government as just and truly Christian; but these epithets cannot be properly applied to it until it makes a restitution of those grants and endowments which have been appropriated by it. The allowance granted to the shrine of Juggurnauth was but a pittance in comparison to the immense property belonging to it, which it has been dispossessed of. If any connection with idolatry be unbecoming of a Christian Government, it is equally unworthy of it to enjoy property belonging to idolatrous shrines. It would not be acting in consonance with the duties of a Christian, if, along with this disowning of all relations with the temple of Juggurnauth, it does not discontinue all connection with the estates exclusively appropriated to the use of Hindu shrines, and now held by them. Our present Government holds uncontrollable sway in this country; the people are weak, and therefore incapable of offering any effectual resistance to those arbitrary measures which it carries into effect; so, whatever it does is, as a matter of course, just and proper. But it appears to us passing strange that the missionaries should praise it for its liberality and strict adherence to the duties of a Christian. Are not such praises quite undeserved in such cases as the one we have noticed? Is not false praise quite unworthy of the spirit of Christianity?"

LIEUT.-COL. HEPBURN, of this army, another of the victims of the Union Bank failure, has just passed away. After a life spent in the accumulation, rupee by rupee, of a sum, estimated at somewhere about Rs. 90,000, which sum he invested in Union Bank shares, he lost every farthing by the grand smash of 1847, and had to pay in addition about Rs. 10,000, the amount at which he was assessed. These heavy losses had such an effect on him that he became insane, and was, if we recollect right, forwarded under restraint to the presidency, from whence he proceeded on medical certificate to England. He was a rough diamond, but a good soldier.—Lahore Chron. June 7.

BENARES COLLEGE.—Captain M. Kittoe, architect of the Benares College, has reported that he confidently expects the entire work will be completed by the end of December. His assurances have been accompanied by an application for an additional sum of Rs. 25,000, which has been granted.

SIGNOR LARRULETTA.—We have been informed of the death of a gentleman well known some years ago among the community of Calcutta, Signor Mannel Larruletta. He died, we hear, about ten days ago at Jungypore; where he had been residing since the commencement of the present charter, latterly holding the office of collector of river tolls on the Bhaugeruttee. Mr. Larruletta was formerly a partner of the old firm of Mackintosh and Co., from which he retired with nominally a large fortune, not a very long while, we believe, before the general failures of the large houses of agency, commencing with Palmer and Co. in 1830. Mr. Larruletta's fame for liberality and hospitality was spread far and wide; and there were few of the society of former days who did not taste of the luxuries of "Atchipore House," Mr. Larruletta's country seat, close to Moyapore, now, we are informed, in an advanced state of ruin. On the abolition of the Company's commercial privileges, and the sale of their silk factories, Mr. Larruletta, who had suffered losses by the factories, became the purchaser of the Jungypore concern. This, which was never profitable to him we believe, he resold some years ago. Mr. Larruletta was a great sportsman; and until within the last year or two, when his health began to fail him, he invariably spent the greater part of February, March, and April, in the Malde, or Rajmahal jungles, bagging his dozen tigers every season. Mr. Larruletta was a native of Spain, whence, if we mistake not, he was exiled by the Bourbons with many others holding similar opinions to his own, which may be classed politically as ultra radical. We suspect that Mr. Larruletta's early career would afford some curious passages of political history.—Bengal Hurkaru, May 29.

THE Hurkaru yesterday announced the death of Mr. M. Larruletta, and gave a few biographical particulars which contain several errors. He was not a native of Spain, but of the Caraccas, though educated in Spain; and his commencement in Calcutta was not as a member of an agency house, but as factor to the Philippine Company, once an important and lucrative post, though the company was finally bankrupt. Mr. Larruletta's hospitality was as celebrated as our contemporary mentions, but its principal seat was at his house in Garden Reach, the same lately occupied by Sir H. Seton. His Atchipore establishment was on a very reduced scale, and only commenced after he had been a heavy loser by his business transactions. He was a kind-hearted and most generous man as long as he had the means, his bounty was magnificent, and in that respect he was well deserving of a better fortune. As a sportsman, he was well known in most parts of Bengal.—Englishman, May 30.

THE BISHOP.—We learn with great regret that the good old bishop has been suffering from indisposition, though he was much recovered, according to the accounts which reached us yesterday. We understand that his lordship's imprudent jaunt by land all the way to Barrackpore for the purpose of taking possession of the Serampore Church, and the violent jolting he experienced in consequence of the state of the roads, brought on the attack. We may expect, now that a bishop has suffered from the disgraceful condition of the roads, that there will be some improvement, in which case the inconvenience felt by the venerable prelate by a brief confinement to a sick couch will have effected a public good.—Morn. Chron. June 10.

FOUR NATIVE NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS of the 12th Irregular Cavalry were tried for entering into a mutinous conspiracy to complain against their commanding officer, Lieut. J. G. Holmes, for passing them over in regimental promotion, and to compel him to recommend them for promotion. They were found guilty and sentenced to dismissal from the service. Three of them were recommended to the merciful consideration of the Commander-in-Chief on account of the testimonials given in their favour by their commanding officer. Sir William Gomm attended to the recommendation of the Court, and with his severe admonition ordered them to return to their duty. The fourth was dismissed the service.

GOOLAB SING'S COUNTRY.—Extract of a letter: "I have lately returned from a trip in the territories of the Maharaja Goolab Sing, I cannot refrain from saying a few words as to what I saw and heard as to the state of the country itself. In the first place the good feeling evinced by the labouring population towards Europeans is, considering the little intercourse they have had with us, somewhat extraordinary, and they seem to be at no pains to conceal their disaffection to the present order of things, as on entering into conversation with any of them, nearly the first question they would ask was this:—'When are you going to take the country,' and frequently followed up by the remark:—'The rule of the English is a good rule, while we cannot exist for the oppression (zulm) we have to undergo!' Even the soldiers, the paid servants of the Maharaja, on several occasions, remarked much the same thing as regards the 'Rajas,' adding that they were nearly as badly off, as they had frequently to wait six, eight, and ten months for their pay, and woe betide the unfortunate devil that dared to remonstrate. The Government taxes are most heavy, and in some cases very offensive. Take, for instance, one or two, viz:—The tax of Rs. 50, which every man, however poor, has to pay on getting married, or in default thereof an immediate seizure of his goods takes place; this tax is nearly prohibitive on the very poor, and consequently the result is that it tends to encourage immorality to a large extent, and sometimes crime. Then the tax of one-third of the whole of the produce, which has to be stored in the godowns of the Maharaja, is another most iniquitous imposition on the industry of the labouring classes. The effect of this system is seen in a poor and miserable set of landholders, and as for the labourers they are slaves and nothing else."

ON DRS.—We believe it is settled that Mr. B. Reed will come from Umritser to Lahore to take the place of Mr. C. F. Carnac, proceeding to Simla on sick certificate; that Lieut. Becher will continue his jagheer investigations, on assuming his officiating duties as deputy secretary; and that Mr. Wedderburn will come in from Shikhoopora to conduct the duties of his office at Lahore.—The following changes are about to take place amongst the assistant commissioners in the Punjab: Lieut. Fitzmaurice moves from Leia to Khangur; Lieut. Bristow, from Ferozepore to Jhung; and Mr. H. R. Maddox, from Jhung to Ferozepore.—We understand there are four infantry majors about to take Major Bygrave's bonus.—Such is now the reputation of our 2nd Fusilier corps, that as much as Rs. 5,000 has been refused by a second lieutenant, to induce him to exchange into a N.I. corps.—We understand that Captain Talbot, 61st N.I. who obtains his promotion by Major Macdonald's advancement to the rank of Lieut. colonel, purposes taking the bonus, on which Capt. Grissel obtains the majority.—Col. Cox, now commanding the 21st regiment N.I. at Wuzerabad is, we are told, to be transferred to the 32nd regiment N.I. at the same station.—We understand that there is at last a great probability of Lord Ellenborough's very invidious restrictions on the leave of absence of civil surgeons from their stations when sick, being altogether removed.—By letters from Nussurabad we regret to learn that Ensign Campbell, of the 21st regiment, is again under arrest; on this occasion, in consequence of having personally chastised Ensign Thoys whilst returning from a party where conviviality had been by the former carried to an unseemly extent.

THE PUNJAB.—The following is from a correspondent:—"We have heard of a most strange production just discovered in the Punjab, which deserves the attention of the Agricultural Society. We hope that the local branch which has lately been established at Lahore will take up the subject, and give us an inkling into the matter. There is a root, small (for it is not larger in circumference than an 8-anna piece), and very much resembling the root of the kuskus, which is found in the jungles in the vicinity of the city; it has no head or leaves above ground, and cannot be distinguished from the earthy matter around. From this small root oozes a juice, which tastes, and is in appearance very much like goor, and is eaten by the poor coolies who labour in the jungles. The root itself is also sweetish. If it is ascertained that the root is grown in any large quantities, it is probable that sugar and rum will soon be produced in the country. We look with anxiety to further details of this curious discovery."—Calcutta Citizen.

THE STEAMERS ON THE INDUS.—Orders have been issued that the steamers plying on the Indus are to take passengers at the following rates:—From Kurrachee to Mooltan, first class, Rs. 200; second class, Rs. 150; third class, Rs. 100. Second and third class passengers are not to be taken until the first class is filled up. From Mooltan to Kurrachee two-thirds of the above rates. Four rupees a day are to be paid for table expenses, without wines, &c. One servant can be taken free; all beyond to be paid for at the rate of six pie per mile. This arrangement to commence immediately. Goods also can be forwarded.

THE GROUNDLESSNESS OF ATTACKS ON THE BENGAL ARMY.—During the five years which he has held the command at this station, in which time the 4th, 13th, 30th, 41st, 42nd, 50th, 53rd, 67th, 68th, and 72nd regiments of Native Infantry, and two batteries of artillery have been quartered, Brigadier Palmer has scarcely ever had occasion to complain of the conduct of either officers or men. We have great pleasure in giving publicity to his farewell order to the garrison of Delhi, as it completely refutes the calumnies that have so frequently been heaped upon the army. We have no doubt that the farewell order of each brigadier as he retires would, to a very great extent, furnish evidence that would silence the tongue of calumny for ever. We would thus have the details in extended form, which would show the vast surface from whence the few bad cases are drawn to form the base of the calumnies against all:—"Brigadier Palmer cannot relinquish the command of the garrison of Delhi without expressing his high approbation of the exemplary conduct of both officers and men, which, having rendered his duty a pleasure, entitles them to his respect. To the staff of the garrison he feels grateful for the support they have on all occasions afforded him. Groundless reports, injurious to the character of this army, having been too sedulously circulated. Brigadier Palmer considers it the duty of all who have it in their power to refute the aspersions of demoralization and disorganization in this army, to do so. He therefore with pleasure records, to the credit of the regiments that may have composed the garrison during the five years he has commanded at Delhi, that one officer alone has, during that period, been brought before a court-martial; and with one other exception the brigadier has found it unnecessary to obtrude on the notice of the major-general commanding the division the conduct of any officer. Such indeed has been the peaceable conduct and forbearance of the native soldiery, that notwithstanding the proximity of this large city, the brigadier cannot recall to memory one single complaint having been preferred against them by the civil authorities during that period." The garrison will reciprocate the good feelings of Brigadier Palmer, than whom none more respected ever retired from a command. It is supposed that either Colonel Harvey or Colonel Riley will succeed him. In the mean time Lieut.-Colonel Napleton, 13th N.I., commands the station.—Delhi Gazette, June 14.

THE SHIP City of Glasgow has made a passage from the Clyde to the Sandheads in eighty-seven days.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

PAY AND ALLOWANCES TO VETERINARY SURGEONS.

Sinla, May 17, 1851.—The Most Noble the Governor-General is pleased to publish the following paragraphs of a military despatch from the Hon. the Court of Directors, dated 2nd ult.

4. On a review of the whole of the circumstances connected with these appointments, we have resolved to grant to veterinary surgeons the same pay and allowances when in India, and the same furlough pay in Europe,

As cornets of cavalry during their first 10 years' service,
As lieutenants of cavalry after 10 years' service, and
As captains of cavalry after 20 years' service.

5. This will accord with the relative rank now assigned to our veterinary surgeons, and is in conformity with the rule of rank in her Majesty's service.

6. Veterinary surgeons of H.M.'s regiments will receive such addition to the British pay of their rank as will place them in the receipt of corresponding allowances to those granted to veterinary surgeons in the Company's service of the same standing.

7. We have also resolved to grant to veterinary surgeons, in lieu of the present scale of retiring pensions, the rate specified in the annexed paper, showing the present and revised rates of pay and allowances, furlough pay and pensions to veterinary surgeons of the Company's service.

8. Veterinary surgeons now in the service will not be deprived of the benefit of the present regulations.

REMOVAL OF OFFICERS FROM REGIMENTS.

Sinla, 22nd May, 1851.—Instances having occurred of young officers, who have involved themselves in difficulties in the regiments to which they have been attached, applying time after time to be removed from regiment to regiment, the Most Noble the Governor-General of India is pleased, in continuation G. O. P. C., No. 260, of the 29th December, 1837, to direct that no cornet or ensign shall hereafter be permitted to exchange more than once, and that such exchange shall only be sanctioned when the reasons for desiring it are valid and proper, and it is shown that the application is not made from the young officer's having involved himself in any difficulties, whether of a pecuniary or of any other nature.

MURDER OF LIEUT. JOHNSTONE.

The Madras Spectator gives us some further information respecting the Jaulnah tragedy. He says:—"Another Jaulnah letter affords fresh ground for suspecting that the reduced havildar, Khader Khan, was indeed the murderer of Lieut. Johnstone. He had been previously heard, it seems, to use threatening language, and a nondescript fowling-piece, half musket and half pistol, has been found in his house. It is further worthy of notice, that several intelligent natives of Secunderabad, from whence the 3rd L.C. proceeded early in the year to Jaulnah, and where the men of the corps are well known, on being questioned concerning it, on the very morning that intelligence of the murder had reached the European residents, declared their full knowledge of the affair, and their suspicion that Khader Khan was the perpetrator of it. If the story is correct, and we see no reason to doubt it, some light might perhaps be shed on the tragedy by the interrogation of those natives. They, it is clear, had received some communication that outstripped the Tappal, and must have had reason for assigning the deed to Khader Khan. Let them be asked hows the news reached them, and why they at once pointed him out as the probable assassin. Their answers might possibly furnish a clue to other evidence, which would bring his guilt home. We trust that Government will take the hint, and address General Fraser on the subject of inquiry.

"Our letter corroborates one of the hypotheses adopted by us relative to the threatening placard on Captain Water's gate. 'It is generally supposed,' we are told, 'that the reduced Havildar caused the placard to be put up, with the view of warding off the suspicion resting on him. He was in confinement, and would wish it to be believed that, as the perpetrator of the murder must have been the individual who affixed the threatening notice, he never having left his place of confinement, ought not to be suspected.' The same communication, referring to the threatened murder of three officers, mentioned in our last, intimates that a rumour of the kind had currency in the corps before Lieutenant Johnstone's death, but that no notice was taken of it.

"It purported that some one had been heard to say, that the present commandant, Lieut. Johnstone, and the riding-master would be shot. If this story is authentic, we consider it of no small importance, since it entirely corroborates what we have heard about the alienated temper of the men. An intending assassin would never have betrayed his purpose, had he not felt sure of the silence and sympathy of those around him. If such a report was current, and if the officers were not made aware of it, the troopers of the regiment obviously felt that disinclination to prevent the crime, which they have since shown to aid in detecting its perpetrator. This point likewise needs investigation. The whole circumstances of the case, indeed, cry aloud for it. Disaffection must have reached a great height, ere a body of Native soldiers could resolve to act thus, and it is imperative on the authorities to trace out the causes of their quarrel, no less than to punish the crime to which it has led. We quite agree with the Crescent, that wrongs suffered by the regiment should be straightway redressed, but we also think that they merit punishment for sheltering the assassin."

LAW.

SUPREME COURT, JUNE 7.

In the matter of Lutchmee Ummall.—This was a proceeding instituted by V. Sreenavassa Charry, for the purpose of having his wife, Lutchmee Ummall, restored to him. On the conversion of Sreenavassa from Brahmanism to Christianity (see p. 352), a separation took place between him and his Brahmin relatives. His wife also forsook him, acting, as alleged by the husband in his application to the Court, under the influence of her relatives.

The writ of habeas corpus for the production of the wife was returnable this day. The wife appeared, attended by her aunt.

The Advocate-General, and Mr. Smyth, appeared on behalf of the husband; Mr. Salmon conducted the defence for the wife and her father.

The arguments on either side were points of law, and neither the wife or husband was examined. Mr. Salmon did make an application to have the wife questioned, but it was made too late, his lordship having commenced his judgment.

Sir Wm. Burton, while delivering judgment, was many times most affected, almost to tears. He began by saying, this was the most important, most material case, that had ever come before the Supreme Court while he had been one of its judges. The case was one where redress is to be given for rights infringed. There is no Court here to administer Hindu law; the property of all is protected by the common law of England. The question is not whether there is a marriage, but whether the husband shall exercise his rights over the wife; if we consulted Hindu law, his rights would be absolute. A loss of caste entails the loss of association with his fellow men, and the Hindus, having many separate castes, may exclude any one from them; but when a man comes into this Court and claims his rights, the Court must decide that, though a party may exclude, they cannot take away any one's rights. By the Hindu law, the wife, as soon as married, ceases to belong to her own family; she becomes part and parcel of her husband's; she looks to him and to his relations for protection and support, and in no way can she claim protection from her own relations. There is no law in this land that can dissolve a marriage contract. If a Christian should become a Mahomedan, he could still enforce his wife to live with him, although she might remain a Christian. Excommunication lost its terrors ages ago; but the 53rd Geo. 3 expunged it altogether, depriving it of all name, title, or power. The Act passed in 1850 is the charter of religious freedom; it is an Act all should be grateful for, as by it no man's rights can be hurt by a change of religion. No one need apprehend ill-usage towards this young woman. A wife's virtue is only safe when under her husband's protection. The judgment of the Court then was, that the wife be restored to her husband.

His lordship ordered the wife (a mere girl, fifteen years of age, and not particularly prepossessing in appearance) to walk over to Sreenavassa, who was seated on the other side of the Court. She refused to do so, twitching herself in the way young girls do when offended; but she positively refused to stir. Sreenavassa was told to take her hand and lead her into his lordship's room; but no, the hand was not to be obtained. Sir William spoke to and entreated her to hear him as she would a father; he advised her, in the most soothing language he could use, to return to the man to whom she had been married for nine months. To all appearance, this tender regard for her welfare had not the slightest effect, and it was at last found necessary to have her carried by one of the European constables to his lordship's room. The aunt and father of the girl now commenced proceedings; the old woman screeching and yelling, tearing her hair, and making ineffectual attempts to reach her niece; it took two or three men to hold her back. She rushed down the stairs of the Court, threw herself on the pavement, beating her head, pulling her tongue, and going through all the demonstrations of the most frantic grief. She soon became tired of knocking her head to no purpose, and, jumping up, declared that the only way to soothe her pain would be by death. To put this into execution was the work of a moment, dashing through the crowd, and running into the sea, but only far enough to wet her knees; all the time calling on the old man to do the same. His inclinations did not tend this way, and the loss of caste his daughter had experienced did not seem much to affect him. The couple were taken from the water, and, for safety's sake, were marched off and locked up in the Police Court, from which they were in a short time released.

The scene before the Supreme Court was most exciting; it was a riot in a small way, hundreds of Brahmins shouting, uttering imprecations, and menacing the building and its contents, with closed fists and waving arms. The door at the foot of the stairs was obliged to be guarded with pions, for the mob seemed inclined to take the place by storm, actually charging the police pions, and using every endeavour to force their way, as if with the intent to rescue Mrs. Charry. The front opposed to them was, however, too strong, and, on the order being given, the pions soon cleared the square of vociferating Brahmins.

The conduct of the native police on this trying occasion cannot be too highly eulogized; they did not in the least participate in the rebellious feelings of the excited Brahmins; every order was executed with despatch, and a willingness to serve their masters to the utmost of their power seemed to predominate in their minds.

The following is a copy of the order of the Court, in reference to the treatment to be observed by Sreenavassa towards his wife:—

"Upon the motion of Mr. Salmon, of counsel for the above-named Lutchmee Ummall, and upon hearing the Advocate-General, the counsel for Andrew Philip Sreenavassa, it is ordered that the said Lutchmee Ummall, while under the care and custody of her husband, be permitted to partake of food prepared by herself, after the manner of her caste; and that the said Lutchmee Ummall be not forced to partake of food with her husband, or any food or drink calculated to forfeit her caste, or to do any act having that effect; and that the said Lutchmee Ummall be allowed to speak with her parents, or either of them, in the presence of her husband, once on every Monday in the week for one hour, between twelve and one o'clock in the day time."—Athenæum.

MISCELLANEOUS.

COMMANDS OF THE N. AND S. DIVISIONS.—A report is generally prevalent in military circles, that the commands of the northern and southern divisions are likely to become vacated before the conclusion of the year, in consequence of the failing health of the present incumbents, and that the adjutant-general of the army will succeed to the command of the Hyderabad subsidiary force, Brigadier James being advanced to the command of the northern division.—Spectator.

WHOLESALE MURDER.—The Madras Crescent has learnt that a most atrocious series of murders was perpetrated, not many days ago, in the province of Malabar. A Hindoo carpenter was at work in his house, when a couple of men came in, and entered into conversation with his wife; and, while so engaged, they were suddenly set upon by the husband, who, improbable as the relation seems to be, managed to murder them all three with no other weapon than his chisel. The shrieks of these victims, two of whom ought to have made an effectual resistance, called in some neighbours, who also seem to have been so unaccountably panic-struck as to permit the infuriated carpenter to kill outright, with the same weapon, four men, two women, and two children, and to inflict wounds upon other two persons, before they were able to secure them. We have heard of Malays, and sometimes Chinamen, running a muck after having previously maddened themselves with bang, but never before heard of a Hindoo breaking off from his work, and, without any such preparation, destroying eleven persons and wounding two more, with no deadlier instrument than a carpenter's chisel.

THE LATE MRS. GORDON.—We regret to announce the death of the late Mrs. Gordon on the 11th of June. This respected lady had devoted the greater portion of her long life (seventy-seven years) to the education and training of native females, and hundreds survive her who will, to the last moment of their existence, bless the energetic and untiring missionary spirit of the deceased for their knowledge of that holy faith which leads to eternal life. For the last two or three years, bodily infirmities had crept on, and her mental faculties had become much impaired, notwithstanding which, she was able to attend Divine service until within a fortnight of her death.—Athenaeum.

NATIVE COLLEGE.—The Nabob of the Carnatic has written to Government, expressive of his desire to found a college at Triplicane for the benefit of the Mussulman population. His highness is not at liberty to entertain the services of Europeans without the permission of the Government. Were the college designed exclusively for the cultivation of the literature of the East, his highness need not apprise the Government of his intentions; but as it is to be established for the purpose of imparting to Mussulman youth the languages and erudition of Europe, chiefly that of England, European professors must be entertained, and without the sanction of Government this cannot be done.—Circulator.

We are aware that for some time past it has been in contemplation by the Nabob to found a college or madriasa at Triplicane, for the benefit of the Mussulman population. The design of the institution, we understand, is of the most liberal character; comprehending, in particular, the instruction of the scholars in European languages and literature, and, of course, requiring the employment of European professors. In favour of this magnificent scheme of his highness, several wealthy and enlightened Mahomedans agreed to withdraw some schemes which they had in view for promoting general education amongst their race.—Athenaeum.

BOMBAY.

SIR CHARLES NAPIER AND MR. ARRATOON.

THE Bombay Chamber of Commerce have published entire the correspondence on the subject of the charges of Sir Charles Napier against Lord Dalhousie in the matter of Mr. Arratoon. The first letter is from Mr. H. E. Goldsmid, secretary to the Bombay Government, dated 13th April, forwarding to the Chamber a letter from Sir H. Elliot. That letter is addressed to Mr. Secretary Goldsmid, and dated Camp Pichami, 1st April, and is as follows:—

"SIR,—The attention of the Governor-General was lately drawn to a number of the Bombay Gazette newspaper, which contained a speech said to have been delivered there by his Excellency Sir Charles Napier, in which his Excellency is reported to have made the following statement—the extract is given in full, omitting only some personal allusion:—

"I met an Armenian of the name of Arratoon the other day in the Punjab—a man of great energy and enterprise, and who largely assisted our armies in Afghanistan in procuring supplies,—who told me that he had felled an enormous quantity of timber, which was now lying on the banks of the Chenab, as he could not bring it down to Bombay—Lord Dalhousie having refused him the protection of Government unless he could prove that he had the means of carrying out his enterprise. It is true that I had only this Arratoon's own story, and he was an interested party, but I believed what he told me. Now I don't know much of such things, and I am speaking in the presence of those who do, but I should say that Government had nothing to do with a man's means. Commerce requires to be nursed like a child. But in justice to Lord Dalhousie, I must tell you again that I got this story from Mr. Arratoon himself, an interested man, who told me that the timber would be ravaged by the rajahs without he had the protection of Government, and which Lord Dalhousie refused him. It is nothing to the purpose whether Lord Dalhousie is right or wrong, but it is to the purpose for you to know that this Arratoon complains that he has a great abundance of timber, the produce of the countries of the Punjab, ready to be borne to Bombay, and that the Government will not give him the fair protection he requires to bring it here. Is it not a pity that such opportunities should be neglected for bringing England nearer to these rich Indian provinces? With proper arrangements, I say that Bombay will soon be the great rendezvous for all things, both from England and the Punjab. Calcutta will not lose her grandeur, but she cannot rival Bombay or Kurrachee as mercantile ports. Eight years ago Kurrachee had a population of only 5,000 men, whereas now, as I found passing through it the other day, it numbers 25,000 men; and it must continue to increase and prosper, while Bombay must become the grand mart of India."

"The Governor-General, I am desired to say, does not concern himself to contradict any of the numerous errors and misrepresentations regarding the Government or himself which appear from time to time in the public journals. But when the late Commander-in-Chief of the army is represented to have publicly repeated statements imputing to the Governor-General that he had refused to a merchant of enterprise, willing to engage in large undertakings, that fair protection from obstruction which he had a right to expect from the Government of the country, his lordship thinks it necessary that the error should be noticed and corrected.

"Sir Charles Napier, indeed, is reported to have guarded his statement by adding, that he had only the story of Mr. Arratoon, an interested party. But the Government and the community of Bombay may probably be aware, that his Excellency was present in the station of Simla, with the Governor-General and Mr. Arratoon, when the communication with that person took place, and that then and there, or afterwards and at all times, his Excellency had ample and simple means of verifying the statements made, and of ascertaining whether Mr. Arratoon's story was true or not. They will, therefore, naturally and reasonably have concluded that, since his Excellency did afterwards publicly give currency to Mr. Arratoon's injurious statement, he must have had very good reasons for believing and circulating it.

"The necessity of sending for information, which was not in camp, has hitherto delayed his lordship from noticing this matter. A mere perusal of the correspondence which passed will be sufficient to show that the statement made by Mr. Arratoon is without foundation. The facts are these:—

"In the month of October last, Mr. Arratoon submitted to the Governor-General his proposal through the private secretary. The following memorandum was addressed to him in reply:—

"The patent which Mr. Arratoon seeks, it is not within the competency of the Government of India to grant. But every facility which the Governor-General can by any of the means at his disposal, procure for Mr. Arratoon in carrying out his desirable objects, his lordship is very willing to afford. Mr. Arratoon had better address a short letter to the secretary to Government, Foreign Department, stating briefly the nature of the assistance he requires, and the mode in which it would be most available given. The Governor-General will be prepared to accede to any practicable and reasonable request.

"(Signed) F. F. COURTENAY,
Private Secretary to Governor-General.

"Simla, 15th October, 1850."

"In pursuance of this recommendation, Mr. Arratoon addressed to me the letter which follows:—

"To Sir Henry Elliot, K.C.B., Secretary to the Governor-General of India.

"SIR,—I beg to inform you that, agreeably to Mr. Courtenay's request, I waited upon him, and annexed is the copy of his lordship's reply. Mr. Courtenay verbally stated to me that his lordship was willing to afford me all the aid in his power; such as giving a contract or any other thing feasible; and to write to you on the subject, explaining the nature of the assistance I required. I beg, therefore, respectfully to state that the first thing I require is a radharry perwannah to the hill chieftains, to the effect that I am not to be molested, and any assistance I may stand in need of to be given me; such as workmen and coolies, payable at the usual hire, in felling and floating the masts from the Himalayas down the rivers winding through their territories. And although I have felled a number of pine trees on the Beas in Kooloo, yet I have found the river Chenab a much better one adapted to float down timber of large size than the Beas. My intention is to float down timber by that river next hot season. A radharry perwannah from yourself or the Board of Administration is necessary; for without it the obstacles that would be thrown in my way would render the undertaking impracticable.

"If the Governor-General would sanction the Naval Board of Bombay should grant a contract, say for ten (10) years, for the large timbers and spars they may want, I am sure that thus aided by the Governor-General my exertions would ultimately close the American trade in timber with British India, which would be supplied from its own internal resources, and at less cost.

"In searching for the timber I met with copper and lead veins, and if the Government would grant me a period of say 20 or 30 years' lease, to enable me to form and work mines for minerals generally, wherever I might find it profitable or sufficiently remunerative, I should be prepared to pay to Government a duty on the amount of minerals produced and brought into the market, leviable on value or quantity, as might be determined upon.

"I have the honour to be, &c.

"(Signed) M. T. ARRATOON.

"Simla, 18th October, 1850.

"P.S.—I would beg to mention that in my memorial to the Most Noble the Governor-General of India, I have set forth to what extent I had carried on operations with respect to the supplying of timber for the Bombay Government, and the obstacles which prevented my carrying out this desirable object."

RECENT LAKES IN THE DECCAN.

We give the following extract from the letter of an able and excellent observer: every scrap on the subject is of importance. The fresh-water formations described by Dr. Malcolmson may be left out of view in this discussion,—his discoveries are perfectly made out beyond the reach of dispute. The lakes, whose existence may, it appears to us, be established, are of very recent date in comparison, and hereafter it may be better perhaps to allude to them as two separate matters altogether. We should call the one set,—the old lakes in Central India, "Malcolmson's"; the other set, "recent lakes in the Deccan." It is not easy to say what relation the former of these bear to the date of upheaval or of partial change of level—undoubtedly great volcanic eruptions followed the deposit of the fresh-water shells, the matrix of which is often so melted as to be readily mistaken for trap. We hold that all alluvial matter must have been deposited in water partially stagnant, and that when found on the summits of eminences, there is good reason to suppose that a recess of the waters which brought it into existence, or an elevation of the sites on which it now prevails, must have occurred. Does our correspondent mean to state that the Godavary rose one hundred feet perpendicularly? Such an enormous flood as this may doubtless produce phenomena very closely resembling those described by our Aurungabad correspondent. But the fresh-water shell-bed first spoken of in September last was described as existing on the banks of the Moola Moola, at the Jamsetjee Bund at Poona, where no such inundation as this ever could have occurred, excepting under circumstances differing as widely as possible from those now prevailing; the shells were beneath a bed of alluvium ten feet thick, the surface being from ten to fifteen feet higher than the highest flood. Nothing but stagnant water—a lake in fact, could have brought the alluvium into existence. How far the Poonah lake may have extended, or whether or no it may have been a portion of a series, are matters that require to be determined by observation:—

"Your remarks on evidences of lakes in the Deccan I hope will bring forth some discussion. I hardly look upon the observations of your correspondent as in any way confirming their existence in the site he appears to allude to; the fluvial strata being in all likelihood nothing beyond the usual deposits of periodical floodings, and of far too recent a period to suit our purpose. Two years ago the river Godavary rose a hundred feet in thirty-six hours, and remained in that state for a day or two. In floods of such a nature it is quite possible for shells such as he describes to have been deposited in elevated spots. Malcolmson upwards of sixteen years ago demonstrated the existence, in days bygone, of an inland sea or lake in Central India, and the supposition was that the trap mountains were raised above it in a series of gradual throes and upheavals, and that that was the case. The discovery of lacustrine shells lying in their marshy beds 200 feet in the hill-side above the level of the plain, is good evidence, as well as the black alluvium now seen resting on the summits of the table-lands, there deposited prior, and not subsequent, to their upheavement, as your correspondent supposes; and I fancy it was during those great changes of level that occurred in the later periods of the tertiary epoch, that the deep alluvial beds were deposited in the valley of the Godavary he alludes to, for they all have the appearance and character of deposits from moving rather than quiescent waters. What the eleppers fossils may be, I cannot conceive, nor have I ever met with the name before; but it is probably a local term. During my late tour in the districts, I have settled one point of doubt about the true nature of the Lake of Loonar, by obtaining about a bucket-full of scorie and vitrified sand, as well as tracing its stream of molten rock, east and west, for a distance of upwards of a hundred miles. Malcolmson has written a very interesting account of it; but I regret to say ours in the Geographical Society's proceedings gives but a very indifferent description. I happened to have had both with me on the spot, and found rocks described that never were, at least, such as I could not discover. It is a very remarkable place, and worth visiting."—Bombay Times.

WRECK OF THE CHARLOTTE.

The following are the particulars we have been enabled to collect in regard to this unfortunate event, and which may be relied on as perfectly correct. The Charlotte left Calcutta on the 1st instant, and was tossed about as is usual in this season of the year in the Bay of Bengal. On the whole her voyage was very tedious and troublesome. About a week ago she encountered very bad weather, for about two days the sun was not seen, and in consequence no observations were taken, and the captain was in great doubt about the latitude the ship was in. On Wednesday last, the 11th instant, a faint observation was taken, which induced the captain to go about directly to the northward, as he found he had been previously mistaken in her latitude. This was along the Hubsheesh country, twenty or thirty miles south of Bombay. The weather was very thick and squally, and the winds so boisterous that the ship was driven about very violently until she was eventually in six fathoms, when the captain deemed it advisable to come to an anchor, giving her a whole chain; the sea, however, setting in stronger every minute, a second anchor was dropped with sixty fathoms of chain, and, after labouring greatly for two or three hours, the ship parted from both chains, and in consequence of the heavy surf, drove towards the shore until six o'clock on the same evening, when she grounded half a mile from the shore in a most perilous and confined situation, the wind blowing at the time a perfect gale, and a heavy swell running in to the shore.

The captain and crew remained on board all that night, and the following morning at six o'clock the mate with twelve hands in the ship's cutter tried to land. A heavy surf was running at this time, and when the cutter had got about half way between the ship and the shore, the boat swamped, and one European apprentice and a native Kiassee were drowned; the mate and the remainder of his party were providentially enabled to reach the shore, partly by the aid of the oars they had with them, and partly by swimming, but their position is represented as having been most perilous, and that they were all nearly drowned. Immediately after reaching the land at Jinjoora the mate procured writing materials, such as were to be had in the village, and wrote the letter which we noticed on Monday, reporting the loss of the vessel, and applying for assistance from Bombay. The letter was intrusted to two of the villagers, who were promised twenty rupees as a reward if they delivered it safely, which they did, and on a representation being made to Government on the subject, instructions were issued to the agent at Angria's Colaba to render every assistance in his power to the captain and crew of the Charlotte.

At noon that day with the rising tide the masts went overboard, and the ship parted amidships. Five minutes previously the captain and remainder of the crew left her, as they saw she could not hold together long: they proceeded ashore on a small raft which they had constructed, formed with two royal yards and broken spars, and in this frail vessel they eventually got safely on shore, but greatly exhausted, and nearly overcome from the force of the elements.

The ship soon went to pieces; the shore for miles was strewn with fragments of the vessel, and the cargo, which consisted chiefly of rice and gunny-bags, valued at sixty thousand rupees, the vessel also being worth a similar sum;—both the cargo and vessel were inured, but not to their full value.

The captain and mate, with the crew, principally natives, then proceeded by foot along the coast, until they reached Angria's Colaba, where they were hospitably treated by the agent, Mr. Jones, and sent over to Bombay, where they arrived late on Monday night, without having been able to save the least particle of property belonging to them. The captain's loss is particularly heavy, as he was part owner of the vessel and cargo.—Gazette, June 18.

MISCELLANEOUS.

DR. JAMES ESDAILE, who will long be remembered as the father of painless surgery amongst us. Amidst a storm of ridicule and derision, Dr. Esdaile, some five years since, commenced systematically to practise surgery on patients rendered insensible by mesmerism, and continued in this way to perform the most painful and difficult operations with perfect success. To satisfy the general scepticism which prevailed on the subject, a committee of inquiry was appointed, and ultimately a mesmeric hospital established, where painless surgery was practised with much more uniformity and success than it had ever been under the influences either of ether or chloroform, and with entire exemption from the dangers attendant on the administration of drugs. Dr. Esdaile leaves India in the prime of life, to resume, we trust, in his native country the career of honour and of usefulness he has hitherto pursued in Bengal.—Bom. Times, June 24.

THE RAILWAY.—A correspondent of the Bombay Gazette draws the following animated picture of the progress of the Bombay Railway:—"The hills some three miles beyond Tannah are being vigorously assaulted; a few weeks since where all was solitude and quiet, and where traces of tigers unmistakably indicated that they had not yet abandoned these haunts, may now be seen hundreds of labourers pioneering a track for civilization. Following the road beyond Peerseek, you suddenly come upon a work-shop, forges, and tents, and close at hand a chunam-mill, and here also men, women, and children are moulding bricks. Glancing at the hills, you see men on the face of the steep, clearing off the bushes and invading the grounds that hundreds of monkeys have hitherto possessed in undisputed right; on the left the river contributes its freighted boats of lime and building materials. The contractors in the western presidency do not appear to have been harassed by any difficulties in the way of obtaining land, nor by any reluctance on the part of the owners to part with their ground. Some interest has been manifested as to the effects likely to be produced on the earthworks of the railway by the burst of the monsoon, and it is satisfactory to learn that they have suffered no material injury from a total fall of twenty-four inches, six of which fell in eight hours' time, an event of very unusual occurrence, even for Bombay.

FALL OF ICE.—On the 22nd of May, an extraordinary fall of ice occurred near Bangalore, during a storm of thunder, lightning and rain; the hailstones which at first made their appearance were about the size of limes and oranges, but broke through the tiles and roofs of houses, and destroyed gardens and fruit-trees. Some of the hailstones found next morning were as large as goose eggs, some as big as pumpkins—one block, found in a dry well, measured four feet and a half in length, three in breadth, and one and a half in thickness,—it was probably the result of the cementation of several of the smaller pieces into one lump, although the fall of pieces of ice of this size is not unfrequent in India. In the reign of Tippoo Sultan, a piece was found the size of an elephant, which took several days to melt; in 1826 a piece of similar size fell in Candeish; in 1838, a block of ice, apparently a mass of cemented hailstones, was found near Dharwar, measuring twenty feet in circumference.—Bombay Times, June 24.

WRECKS.—During the storm which occurred on the 11th June, the ship Atlet Rohoman, with nearly 300 pilgrims from Mecca on board, was wrecked at the island of Kenery, at the mouth of Bombay harbour, with a loss of above 100 lives. The vessel appears to have been badly managed, and miserably provided with stores: her sails were blown away early in the storm, and she had none to replace them with—she lost her rudder, her cable parted, and she was driven ashore on the rocks. The sufferers were chiefly females. The ship Charlotte was wrecked at the same time near Jinjeerah, twenty miles to the south of Kenery, with a loss of two of her crew. She was on her way from Calcutta, but lost her reckoning in the storm, and so went on shore, and almost immediately afterwards became a total wreck.—Ibid.

COLONEL W. OGILVIE.—This lamented officer, after several weeks of severe suffering, to which from the first a fatal termination was apprehended, was attacked by paralysis in the end of May; it was followed by gangrene, and he expired at Poona on the 17th June, in the sixty-fifth year of his age. Colonel Ogilvie arrived in India in 1805, and has thus been forty-five years in the army, without having once visited his native country. In 1836 he was appointed Judge Advocate General to the Bombay army under Lord Keane, in succession to the late Major-General Vans Kennedy, and difficult as it was to stand a comparison with one of the first masters of military law, Colonel Ogilvie not only in no way suffered by the contrast, but throughout the fifteen years during which he has occupied the eminent position to which he was then appointed, has been distinguished for the ability, knowledge, patience, labour, zeal, temper, and forbearance, at all times exhibited by him, and which won the admiration even of those it was his duty to prosecute. In private life he was distinguished for a generosity of disposition bordering on indiscretion, and often taken advantage of to his extreme embarrassment by those to whom—considering the favours with which he had loaded them, though in no way connected with him by affinity or blood—his interests ought to have been most dear. His reading was extensive and varied, and his memory tenacious to a degree altogether extraordinary; the writings of Scott and other distinguished authors of his country he could repeat with an accuracy the author of Waverley himself might have envied—the Ettrick Shepherd admired. Removed for nearly half a century from home, the scenes and friends of his youth were remembered with a freshness, and cherished with a tenderness, rarely met with even amongst those just parted from all that is dear to them. The feelings of his earlier years were fresh, tender, and warm within him to the last, and we question if there was one who had ever enjoyed his friendship whose career was overlooked or fate forgotten by him. His views of politics had changed little with the times, and he continued one of the few specimens to be met with of the old Scottish Episcopalian and Aberdeenshire Tory of the last century.—Bombay Times.

THE NEW ENGLISH COLLEGE AT POONA was recently opened in form by Mr. John Warden, one of the judges of the Bombay Court of Appeal (Sudder Dewanny). This college is an extension of the former Sanscrit and Mahratta college, where those languages were exclusively taught. Mr. Warden said that the object of the Government was to obtain native officers from the college who were fit to sit as judges in cases of life and liberty, and one of the conditions on which these high offices would be conferred upon natives was, that they should qualify themselves to record in the language of their rulers the reasons which had actuated them in deciding upon the guilt or innocence of the prisoner tried by them. This is a great step; and if hereafter natives are appointed to act as judges over their own countrymen, the most earnest hopes of their advocates here and in England will be fulfilled.—Bombay Telegraph, June 25.

SHAHAMET ALI has been appointed as native assistant political agent at Settane in Rajpootana.

THE FORGERIES ON THE ORIENTAL BANK appear destined to occupy our magisterial bench, and the gentlemen of the long robe, for some time to come. Another forged cheque for eleven thousand rupees, was paid by the bank in December last, and the loss of this trifling amount was only discovered on the 5th instant.—Bombay Telegraph, June 25.

SCINDE.—We hear that the Kardar of Kurrachee has got into a scrape. Whether he gets out of it remains to be seen, but we hope he will. As far as we can learn, it appears, that some characters, one in particular, a famous one, have lodged a complaint, that the said Kardar, on a certain day, put a man out of the way, the said man being required at Kurrachee, by permitting him to run away. We know nothing of the merits of the case, as our informant was very mysterious, and would give us nothing more than a hint, letting us gather, however, that the complaint has probably been manufactured, well cut and dried. This also remains to be seen. In justice to the Kardar, we must say, that we have always heard him highly spoken of, and we hope he will be able to throw back the stone hurled at him by his accusers. It is a common saying that a zealous servant will make enemies; this may be so in a certain acception of the term, and may apply to the present case; but we happen to know many would-be zealous servants, possessed of india-rubber consciences, and capable of stretching to any extent. Consciences are sadly at a discount at times, and it is very little we would give for many consciences, or conscience cases which have come before us within a few short years.—Kurrachee Advertiser, June 11.

BELGAUM.—A letter of the 13th June, from Belgaum, mentions that the monsoon had set in, and that cholera prevailed to rather an alarming extent in the districts around. A new Masonic Lodge had just been built and consecrated at the station.

COLABA.—Shortly before one o'clock on the 12th June, a shower of hail fell at Upper Colaba. The stones were about the size of large pistol bullets, and the shower lasted close on a couple of minutes. This is the second time we have ever heard of hail falling, on this side of India, south of lat. 20 deg. at the level of the sea—the hail on the previous occasion was of insignificant size and quantity.

THE SHIP Charles Forbes, from Bombay to China, was lost on the 2nd of May. She grounded on the Parcellar Hill in the Straits. No lives lost, and part of the cargo saved.

MEDICAL RETIREMENT.—The following is the substance of a circular addressed to the members of the Bombay Medical Service:—"After the complete stagnation in promotion in our department since the retirement of Dr. Burnes, I am glad to be able to announce to you that Dr. Cahill, now the second surgeon on the list, has agreed to retire from the service for a reasonable sum, and in soliciting your support and co-operation to secure this valuable step, I trust I may be excused in remarking that of the several steps which seem by some to be expected, I consider Dr. Cahill's, for various reasons, the best to all his juniors. 1st. Because if Dr. Cahill is not now bought out, the step will be lost for ever, as he will be necessitated to make arrangements which will prevent his ever leaving the service. 2nd. Because Dr. Cahill, on account of the unfortunate misunderstanding among the seniors, cannot subscribe to any one above him, and he must therefore prove an obstacle to all promotion. 3rd. Because Dr. Cahill not belonging to the Medical Retiring Fund, his retirement will not interfere with the annuities available to his juniors."
